The Song of Miriam.

A Paraphrase of Exodus XV, 1st to 21st.

BY A. G. HALEY.

PROEM.

The host of Egyptia came down in their might
On the children of Israel, resting at night
By springs of Pihahiroth, near to the sea,
Undreaming that soon from their foe they must flee.

Yet darkness in sable still mantled the east,
When woke were the tents of all Israel from rest
By sentinel hornns, announcing in fear,
"Lo, Pharaoh cometh—his armies are near!"

But the pillar of fire grew vocal of God,
Bidding each "fear ye not!" and to Moses: "Thy rod
Stretch thou forth o'er the sea, and the waters divide,
That my children may pass to the Madian side!"

Then Moses, obedient, uplifted his hand,
His rod stretching over the flood from the land—
Then Eurus, the wind of the east, ope'd the wave
To Israel—passage, to Egypt—a grave.

Then morning was come, and all Israel o'er—
The Pharaoh, passing, had come to the shore—
The Lord in his vengeance confused them amain,
Relapsing the waters, the host was all slain.

Then Israel, Moses and Aaron redeemed,
Uplifting their voices, along the shore teemed
Sound Miriam, prophetess, timbrel in hand,
The song thus in praise to the Lord of their hand.

SONG.

THEME—
Sing aloud to the Lord who hath triumphed to-day
O'er the host of Egyptia, that followed to slay—
The horse and his rider hath he thrown in the sea—
We, God of salvation, sing praise unto thee!
Thou, Lord, our strength art,
We praise thee with full heart,
For thou unto us a glad song hath become—
Exalting thy name,
Will we publish thy fame.
For thou art the God of our fathers and selves.

THEME—
The Lord is a man of war—Lord is his name—
The chariot and host hath he cast in the main,
With captains all chosen—the pride of their king—
Then loudly in concert his praises we'll sing.
Oh, deep were they drown'd
Neath the wave, when he frown'd,
As they gurgling sank to the bottom like stone.
Thy right hand, oh, Lord!
So glorious in power,
Hath dash'd into pieces the foe of thine own.

THEME—
In excellent greatness hath thou overthrown
The foe that so arrogant lately had grown—
Thy wrath sentest forth, like an igneous brand,
And swept them like stubble in smoke from the land.
An heap stood the flood
At the sound of thy word,
And the depths were congeal'd in the heart of the sea.
Firm rooted and fast,
By thy nostril's deep blast,
That blew in the face of the wave as it passed.

THEME—
Ah! proudly he boasted, the king of the spoil,
Saying, "I will overtake and conquer the spoil;
Their daughters, the fairest, my passion shall cloy.
Their fathers in vengeance my sword shall destroy."
Yet vain was the boast,
For himself and his host
Encounter'd a foeman omnipotent, great—
Thou, God, blew a blast,
And while vaunting their last,
They, heavy as lead, sank the waters beneath.

THEME—
Thou God of salvation, oh who like to thee
Among all the gods of the heathen that be—
Oh, who is so holy, so glorious, dread,
As thou who in mercy thy people hath led?
For thou hast redeemed,
When to mortals it seemed
That succor from heaven nor earth could avail.
The people shall hear,
Palestina shall fear,
And proud dukes of Edom and Moab shall quail.

THEME—
The dwellers in Canaan shall fast melt away,
While trembling and fear thro' the land heareth sway—
Their people be still and as nerveless as stone—
Thy chosen the land shall resume as their own.
There in the mountain
Where welleth the fountain—
Thy mount of inheritance, fount of thy love—
Firm shall be planted,
In that thou hast granted,
Thy people, thy purchase, thy servants, oh Lord!

CHORUS, in chorus, Moses leading—
Then, children of Israel, sing ye in praise
Of Him without end or beginning of days—
The Lord who forever and ever shall reign,
Who open'd the sea and reclosed it again.
Shout ye symphonic,
With voices harmonic,
In praise of the Lord who hath borne us away
From bondage in Goshen
From chains by the Nile,
To freedom in Canaan, the land of the vine.
Ayo raise the glad pean in thunder-tones loud,
Your voices in chorus uplift to the cloud—
Your prophetess sings,
While her loud timbrel rings—
The women, glad dancing, encircle her round.
Too, Joshua, bold,
Whom the Lord hath foretold
Shall crush the usurper with might to the ground,
And Aaron anointed,
Jehovah's appointed—
All swell the glad anthem in rapturous praise
Of him without end or beginning of days.
Then shout ye accordant,
Till heaven resonant,
Re-echoes the chorus its blue arch along—
Hallelujah, Jehovah! we praise thee in song—
Hallelujah! Elleluia! Hallelujah to thee!
Hallelujah, Jehovah! Hosanna on high!

WIVES OF ITINERANT MINISTERS.

We hear much said, and that justly, of the toils and privations of the preacher. Too much cannot be said here. This world will never know what sacrifices some of them make to serve the interests of the church. But there is another class of persons, whose names stand high on the roll of whom the world bears little. Silently, patiently, effectively, they toil on at their post—suffer, as kind and loving hearts can only suffer, and finally die, and in the blaze of fame that surrounds the husband's name, theirs are forgotten. But their record is on high, and though forgotten and unnoticed now, there is coming an hour when their due and just reward shall be given them. It will then be seen that the preacher's efficiency and faithfulness was in no small degree the result of the influence of that angel-like being in human shape, who, at the bridal altar, in the freshness of her maiden beauty, gave herself away, to share with him the joys and the sorrows of the itinerant's work. Then it will be known how many times he would have become discouraged and retired from the work, if her strong faith in God and burning love for the interests of Christ's cause had not cheered him on. How often amid the strife of tongues and the many groundless prejudices of men, he would have faltered and turned back, saying "no one can be trusted," except as the wealth of affection in one heart, tried and true, led him still to have hope and labor to restore to the image of God depraved humanity. I believe that her sacrifices and her trials in many, if not all cases, far exceed that of the husband, although the world is so silent concerning them. As he travels his circuit day by day new scenes and new faces greet him, the fresh air and glorious sunlight impart life and vigor to his physical and spiritual nature. As he is called to preach each day, there is the fresh excitement of the moral battle in which he is engaged, also the silvery voice of praise may reach his ear, cheering him on to make fresh exertions. While he has his trials, yet on every side there are things to support and cheer him. How is the case reversed with that angel woman. Alone, with no approving eye or encouraging voice, with a group of dependent children looking to her for counsel and direction, does she perform life's duties. Her husband is, perhaps, only at home a few days in each month. Her heart, like every other woman's, was made for love and sympathy, yet from the peculiar nature of the preacher's work, she is comparatively alone. She may in some places find kindred spirits, and her heart be bound to theirs by the golden chain of affection—but a new Conference year commences, and these must all be severed at a blow. She goes forth to cast her lot among entire strangers, not knowing what shall befal her there, save that she is certain, from the very nature of the itinerant work, that sorrows and trials await her. Sickness comes to herself and little ones—the husband is far away. She must suffer in her own case, or watch with sleepless eyes around their bedsides, with none to share her labors and responsibilities. Her children die—buds of living beauty, they were transplanted to the Paradise of God—their precious dust cannot be allowed to rest side by side in one common burying ground, with room for the mother also, each to have a glorious part in the first resurrection, but one is buried here, and another there—so far apart that she can never make to the place a pious pilgrimage, watering the turf beneath which they are sleeping with a mother's precious tears. Their appointment may be to a place where many have fallen before them on the walls of Zion. She falters not, but moves forward without a murmuring word to the post of danger. Though whether she survive or perish no honor shall gather around her name. The church has no laurels for her, though she exhibit heroism enough to win a martyr's crown. Her husband dies. His name is enrolled among the honored dead. For many a long widowed year she goes forward in life mourning. The friends that once stood so thick around her, one by one depart, till she is most emphatically alone with her God, and she can truly say, "no sorrow is like unto my sorrow."

How passing strange it is, that when Conference closes, and such earnest prayers are offered for the preachers, that they may have grace to bear the trials of the coming year, those are never mentioned, upon whom the heaviest burden is to fall, and without whose patient and ready spirit to suffer, the ponderous wheel of the itinerancy could hardly be kept in motion for a single year.

Without extending this truthful sketch further, may we not say, that when the blessed army of martyrs shall stand in robes of white, with palms of victory in their hands, on the glory decked hills of immortality, side by side with those who went heavenward in chariots of fire and flame, even in the front rank, will there not appear the wife of many an itinerant preacher, who counted not her own life dear unto her, but offered all as a living sacrifice to Him who died for her and redeemed her with his most precious blood.

COLLEGE MEETING IN AUBURN.

A large and intelligent audience assembled in the College Chapel, on Wednesday, 19th ult., James B. Ogletree in the chair, and James S. Slaughter noting as Secretary, in order to take into consideration the college question disposed of by the Alabama Conference at its late session, held at Eutaw, and moreover to adopt means to further the great college enterprise of East Alabama at Auburn. It was determined that while we submit to the action of Conference, we nevertheless feel that the great educational interests of East Alabama demand that we should have a college. After the Chair announced the meeting ready for business, the subjoined resolutions were reported by a committee of the following gentlemen, F. W. Dillard, W. H. C. Price, J. W. W. Drake and J. M. Carleton, appointed to report resolutions for the action of the meeting:

Resolved, That one hundred and fifty thousand dollars be raised to build and endow a college at Auburn; and that as soon as seventy-five thousand dollars are subscribed, the Executive Committee, hereinafter appointed, are authorized to commence the building.

Resolved, That said college be under the control of an independent Board of Trustees, to be incorporated by the General Assembly of the State of Alabama, with such powers and privileges as pertain to such institutions of the highest order, and to be thus governed until such time as the Alabama Conference shall divide its bounds, and then to be placed under the control of the Eastern Division.

Resolved, That we hereby adopt the action of the Executive and Building Committees previously appointed, so far as it is applicable to the present position of the college enterprise, and reappoint those Committees, investing them with authority to continue their labors in the spheres respectively appropriate to their appointments.

Resolved, That four agents, viz: J. W. W. Drake, F. W. Dillard, Sam'l Armstrong and F. G. McElhany, be appointed to solicit additional subscriptions to build and endow a male college at this place, and that the Executive Committee be empowered to select said agents and contract with them for their services.

Resolved, That a committee of four be appointed to draft a circular to the citizens of East Alabama, setting forth in detail the entire proceeding heretofore had on the college question, and soliciting their co-operation and aid in building and endowing at this place a male college of a high order and upon firm foundation.

On this committee the Chair appointed Messrs. W. H. C. Price, John B. Glean, Wm. A. McCarty and F. W. Dillard.

Resolved, That our Senators and Representatives in the Legislature of Alabama, now in session be requested to use their influence in the Legislature to have a special act passed for the incorporation of the College, with such powers, privilges as pertain to such institutions of the highest grade, and that to advance and facilitate this object a committee of four, namely, Addison Frazer, James M. Carlton, Simeon Perry and George Chatfield be appointed to confer with our Senators and Representatives on the subject.

Resolved, that to effect an early consummation of the above, we do now appoint a committee of three, viz: James F. White, N. J. Scott and Campbell Ratford to nominate a suitable Board of Trustees to suggest a name for the college, and that they make their report to an adjourned meeting of the citizens, to be held on Thursday evening, 27th inst., at candlelight.

JAMES B. OGLETREE, Chairman.
JAS. S. SLAUGHTER, Sec'y.

Foreign News by the Asia.

The New York papers of the 19th, contain particulars of the Asia's news telegraphed from Halifax. We extract the following:

A Berlin letter says, in regard to the rumors of peace propositions—

There has been no communication whatever from Russia. A communication has been made by the Austrian Government, through the French Minister at Vienna, to the French Government, embodying the terms which Austria is prepared to propose to Russia as an ultimatum. The communication was submitted by France to England, and is now under consideration by the two Governments. The terms are a great advance upon anything yet offered, and might be accepted by all round, but they are the terms of Austria, not of Russia. Austria does not guarantee to join the Allies if the ultimatum be rejected, but only to break off relations with Russia. At this point the matter rests.

With respect to Canrobert's mission, The London Time's Paris correspondent, under date of 4th inst., says: "Canrobert has returned. He left Stockholm on the 19th ult., and the day after his departure an act of the Convention or protocol was signed by the Swedish Minister of Foreign Affairs and the English and French Ministers Plenipotentiary, and that the articles of the Convention are most satisfactory to the Allies and advantageous to Sweden. The Moniteur will say something of it in a few days. It is waiting for the adhesion of Denmark." The London Post says definitely, on the contrary, that no Convention has yet been entered into by Sweden.

Some undertake to say that plans will be arranged between Napoleon and the King of Sardinia, with respect to Italy, that will render peace impossible for years to come; others, that Napoleon is tired of the expenses of the war—and really desires peace. Meanwhile continued preparations on the largest scale go forward for the Spring campaign.

Private letters from St. Petersburg indicate no pressure for peace. The profits of the overland trade keep business generally up to a more favorable point than anticipated. Government paper has not much deteriorated, and money is abundant at Moscow at 7 per cent.

The St. Petersburg Northern Bee has an editorial headed "The War is only Beginning," and declares that Russia has ample resources to continue the war for years.

The London Times has a reply to the Bee asserting that this boasting merely betrays weakness.

The Crimea.

The Times's correspondent writes from the camp before Sebastopol, November 24th, saying there is really nothing to write about, as nothing has occurred. Very little firing is exchanged between the north and south sides. The Russian works on the north side are rapidly attaining gigantic dimensions. The engineering operations to destroy the Sebastopol Docks, are nearly complete. Stringent regulations are issued to keep spies and loafers out of the Allied camp. Horse races are advertised in the British, and theatres in the French camp. The weather has been fine.

Deserters confirm the reports that the bulk of the Russian army remains in its former position, viz: the 11th, 12th and 13th divisions on the Severnaya or North Pinteau; the 16th and 17th on Mackenzie Ridge; and the rest on the Plateau of Korales, keeping the Belbec and the Katcha.

The French have been re-enforced by Gen. Chasseloupe's divisions, consisting of 12,000 men. The English and Sardinians are also re-enforced, and it is supposed that the Russians have received re-enforcements likewise.

The Russians have erected batteries to prevent the landing of troops in the rear of the North Forts.

The Allies have connected the French and English camps by a bridge of boats.

Admiral Lyons continues to cruise near Kertch as the Russians threaten an attack and have fortified Arabat with 30,000 men, and Genitshi with 15,000 men.

Gortchakoff announces on the 23d November—"Nothing new."

A French colonel and captain, while making a reconnoissance, were murdered by Cossacks.

A Constantinople letter of the 26th November, mentions that 300 sail of grain-ships were windbound in the Sulina, at the mouth of the Danube.

The Baltic.

Gen. Canrobert is said to have hinted that he will have the command-in-chief of the next Baltic campaign, when two Allied armies will be landed—one in Finland and the other in Courtland. At Kiel he had a long interview with Admirals Dundas and Pennaud, and some attribute the Russian council of war to the intimation of these facts having reached St. Petersburg. The council referred to will comprise all the Russian Generals and Admirals.—Generals Rudiger, Ilsberg, Sievres, Pamutin and others—the object being to settle upon the defense of the coast from the Gulf of Bothnia to the southern extremity of Volhynia—280,000 men being available for this purpose, exclusive of the interior garrisons.

The mission of Admiral Glasenapps to Stockholm, which was supposed to be with the view of counteracting the mission of Canrobert, is stated to have reference only to unimportant matters of finance and the trade of Swedish ships to the ports of Finland.

The Principalities.

The intrigue continues respecting the choice of a Hospodar. England supports John Ghika as the most suitable candidate. France and Turkey favor M. Callimachi, while Austria sides with Prince Stirbey. Austria is said to desire that in future the Hospodars shall be named for life by the Porte, subject to the veto of the great Powers.

Asia.

There is a rumor, on the authority of a correspondent of the London Daily News, that the Russians have taken Kars—but the report may have arisen from a similar rumor of the capture of Kerteh. The report states that the Russians made an unsuccessful assault on the 5th of November, but afterward took the place. It needs confirmation.

A correspondent, of November 12th, mentions that Omer Pasha had divided his force into three corps—he, himself, with the main body, occupying Sadum Kale, while twelve of the detached battalions of infantry and two regiments of cavalry, under Feshad and Osmnu Pasha, had gone to Redut Kale, and the corps of Mustapha Pasha, with the Tunisian contingent, was at Batoum.

Up to the 12th of November, Omer had not moved from this basis of operations.

Gen. Muravieff had established a winter camp before Kars, and sent off the Georgian militia to the army of Prince Bebutoff.

Parliament is prorogued till the 31st of January—then to meet for business.

The King of Sardinia has been the guest of Queen Victoria during the week. On Sunday, he worshipped in the Sardinian chapel—Cardinal Wiseman preaching. On Monday, he attended the reviews, and on Tuesday, visited London, which was illuminated in his honor. On Wednesday, he was made Knight of the Garter, and inspected the camp at Aldershott. On Thursday, he left London for France.

A public meeting, held at London to consider the monetary crisis and influences of the Bank Charter act, passed resolutions condemnatory of the existing English Currency laws. The meeting was but preliminary to others yet to be held.

The Duke of Newcastle has returned to England.

Prussia.

Distress exists in Prussia in consequence of the scarcity of corn, and a considerable disturbance of the usual course of traffic in consequence of an epidemic among cattle. Importation into Prussia from the Russian land frontier is prohibited.

Austria.

Sir Hamilton Seymour had arrived at Vienna. Private despatches state that the Austrian army will be further reduced to the extent of 80,000 men.

Italy.

It is announced for the second time, that the mediation of France and England has adjusted the difficulty between Sardinia and Tuscany.

The Nicaragua Expedition.

The New York Herald of the 24th gives the following account of the movement of the Nicaragua filibustere in that city, which resulted in the arrest of the steamer Northern Light:

We publish this morning an account of the detection of a secret filibustering movement against the State of Nicaragua, which has been in progress for some weeks past in this city. It appears, so far as the circumstances have transpired, that over three hundred men were already enlisted for six months' service in that country, for which they were to receive pay at the rate of twenty-five dollars a month, and at the expiration of the term a grant of two hundred and fifty acres of land. The whole force were to sail to-day for their destination in the steamship Northern Light, which was also to convey a large quantity of munitions of war to the belligerents under Colonel Walker. Information of the whole affair was given to the United States District Attorney, Mr. McKeon, who has taken the necessary steps to prevent the departure of the men; but it still remains to be seen if he can detain the vessel. The Nicaragua Transit Company, it seems, are deeply interested in the matter, and had furnished each member of this party with a free ticket to San Juan, and the counsel, Mr. Joseph L. White, was addressed in a written communication by the District Attorney, who, we understand, has sent on to the President for instructions as to how he shall act in the case. Until he receives these he cannot interfere in any way, either to detain the steamer or prevent the man from leaving.

The Herald has also the following report of an interview between District Attorney McKeon and Col. Parker H. French, the Nicaraguan Minister to this country:

Without spending any useless time in remarks about the weather and such common-place matters, Mr. McKeon commenced the business on hand at once, by telling the Nicaragua Minister, in substance, that he had found him out; that there was no use in his denying the fact that he was at the head of a filibustering movement, and that he did act and would not recognise him as Minister from Nicaragua. To all this Col. French replied that his Government had a perfect right to hold out encouragement to peaceful, useful emigration; that they did so for the purpose of developing the resources of their country; and that, although Mr. McKeon refused to acknowledge him as its representative to the United States, he was so, nevertheless. He at the same time disclaimed, coming as he did in that official capacity, any intention to violate our neutrality laws, asserting that his course and that of his Government were not in conflict with them.

"The Gray-Eyed Man."

A Singular Prediction Verified as to Nicaragua.

In an English work published in London in 1850, called "The Gospel in Central America," there is recorded a singular fact. This work is the only reliable authority on this country. The author, Frederick Crowe was an exemplary preacher of the gospel of the Baptist persuasion, and he has recorded so many facts that the work has been suppressed by the British Government. He states that there exists among the Indians an old traditionary prophecy, that they would be delivered from oppression and cruelty by "The Gray-Eyed Man."

Mr. Crowe, in a note, adds this prophetic remark: "We would remind those who are disposed to attach any importance to the progaostic, that gray eyes are common to the entire Anglo-Saxon race, and that the fulfillment of this prophecy may be reserved to our transatlantic descendants, (the Yankees,) who are now, even, taking a lively interest in Central America." [See Crowe's Central America, page 248.]

This tradition is well known to many residents now in Nicaragua to exist among the Indians and is religiously believed by them. It has been narrated by many to us.

If we were disposed to believe that the race of prophets did not die with Isaiah and Jeremiah, (and why should they?) we would say that this traditionary prophecy has been fulfilled to the letter. "The Grey-eyed Man" has come. He has come not as Attilla, or a Guardiola, but as a friend to the oppressed and a protector to the helpless and unoffending. The prophecy is deemed by the Indians as fulfilled—for last week we saw in Granada a delegation of them who rarely visit this city, who desired to see General Walker. They were charmed by his gentle reception, and offered to him their heartfelt thanks for their liberation from oppression, and for the present quiet state of the country. They laid at his feet the simple offerings of their fruits and fields, and hailed him as the "Gray-eyed Man" so long and anxiously waited for by them and their fathers.

There is in these facts a tincture of romance almost too charming to be real, but it is not to be denied that Gen. Walker has won more on the hearts of the natives by his justice and generosity, than by his sword. They know and have seen, that he only wars upon oppression, treason and cruelty, and will prove the ready defender of innocence and encourager of industry and virtue. Some one has sent us some lines which we translate and place in another column, and which, if not poetry, show the true feeling of the country and its true friends. [Grnad (Central America) El Nicaragueanse, 8th ult.

THE SITE OF ANCIENT LONDON.—When Sir Christopher Wren began to build the new St. Paul's, in digging for a foundation, he came to a layer of Saxon graves lined with chalk, some in stone coffins; and at some distance below the bodies of the British, only lapped in woolen shrouds, fastened with pins of hard wood, most probably box-wood. In the same row, yet deeper (this was eighteen feet and more,) were the ashes of the Romans together—the conquerors and the conquered, both vanquished. Lower than those graves stood the foundation of old St. Paul's, resting on very close pot earth; and still lower, nothing but dry sand, sometimes mixed unequally, but mostly so loose that it would pass through the fingers: then water and sand mixed with periwinkles and other sea shells. This was about the level of low water mark.

The gradual rise of the site of London by the formation of shoals, etc., will be readily understood by the above account. It grew by natural causes, and at the time of the arrival of the Romans was probably a rude British stronghold, defended by earthworks, and backed by thick woods toward the north, and surrounded on other sides by an immense extent of water, amid which the present course of the Thames could scarcely be defined. A letter from Norfolk states that the U. S. steam frigate Roanoke has been raised and towed into dock. An examination of the hull shows twelve of her beams to have been broken, but her injuries are not so serious as was anticipated, and she is not hogged.

Thirty-Fourth Congress—First Session.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 24—Senate.—After some unimportant business the Senate adjourned over till Thursday.

House.—Mr. Letter having received, from time to time, two votes for Speaker, stated distinctly that he had never been a candidate and he never would be. He stated this lest it might be suspected that there was something wrong in his position. He had as consistently and regularly voted for Mr. Banks as any man in the House.

Mr. Stewart, in explaining the reasons why he had been voting for Mr. Richardson, said that the latter and Mr. Fuller had explained their positions distinctly and explicitly, but Mr. Banks has not explained his position. He asked Mr. Banks whether he ever said, in a speech in Maine, that he would let the Union slide.

Mr. Banks replied: In that speech he said there might be such a state of things in which he would so consent. He had reference to future contingencies—such as the prostitution of this Government's gigantic power to the support of a single institution—that of slavery. He was for the Union as it is, and would meet its enemies in a fair field. He was for it as a guarantee of the rights of the States and the main prop of our Government, and would have it stand on the records of history, in the language of Washington, crowned with immortal fame.

Mr. Smith, of Virginia, was not satisfied with the answer of the gentleman and asked: Did you say under certain circumstances you would let the Union slide?

Mr. Banks: I have said all I desire to say.

Mr. Smith, of Virginia: I wish it to be distinctly understood that those who sustain Mr. Banks are voting for him with a knowledge that in a certain contingency, he would let the Union slide!

Mr. Grow: I ask the gentleman, and every member who has been here for the last four years, whether such a declaration has not been repeated, from time to time, by some of those now voting for Mr. Richardson, namely, that they are willing to dissolve the Union, and "let it slide," in the event of a certain contingency? We stand here, said Mr. Grow, to support the compromises of the constitution, as it is explained by the Fathers of the Republic and contemporaneous patriots, for over sixty years. We say we are not willing to take any other constitution, or that slavery shall go wherever our flag floats.

Mr. Hunt believed from the beginning that all debate was out of order, as the first business is the election of a Speaker.

The proposition pending when the House adjourned on Saturday, that no debate shall be in order till a Speaker be elected, was laid on the table.

MARRIED LIFE OF ACTRESSES.—If a happy marriage is a fruit so rarely plucked in the ordinary gardens of existence, how much less in that more dangerous one of the stage, in which, in the pursuit of the golden apple, so many dangers have to be encountered, and so many temptations to be resisted. In reviewing, in our minds, the lives of many of the most distinguished of the wedded actresses of Europe, we have noticed one strange feature, which we mention as a singular, and, perhaps, useful fact, though the inference from it may not always be infallible. Those marriages which have taken place between actors and actresses, continuing on the stage, and both pursuing their profession, have usually attended with greater happiness than those between actresses, continuing as such, with gentlemen in other, or no pursuit in life, or between actresses and gentlemen who, on marriage, have removed from the stage. We speak exclusively of those who have attained dramatic distinction.

This arises chiefly, doubtless, from the community of feelings and pursuits, and the constant companionship to which it leads. There is never a want of that something to do, which leads to weariness, or the leisure for crossness, which is the greatest destroyer of conjugal life. The morning brings its busy preparation together—noon, the rehearsal together—evening, the play together—night, the sleep. Few lives are more replete with pleasure to the world, and happiness to themselves, than that of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Kean, so well-known and well-beloved among us. Nothing can be more graceful and refined than their home and life, or more sweetly hallowed by sincere affection. At their house in Brunswick Square, in London, they constantly gather round them the members of their company, interspersed with literary guests, like Forster of the Examiner, Charles Dickens, Harrison Ainsworth, Mark Lemon, and Charles Heade; and, perhaps, in the Princess Theater is alone to be found that socialistic perfection for which Fourier has so long sighed. On its classic boards some of our best artists have taken their lessons in the histrionic art. Among others it was on this tree that the fascinating Agnes Robertson, since Mrs. Boucicault, first displayed the blossom of that ability which has since ripened into such charming perfection; and her husband, the well-known Dion, was for many years stage manager and general minister of the interior. In the same way the marriage of Charles Mathews with Madame Vestris, though surrounded with many circumstances which gave apprehension of a less pleasing result, has been productive of a happiness which has softened many of those peculiary pangs to which that kind, reckless, dazzling Charles Surface has been exposed. Nor must we omit to mention one of our own actors, Mr. Davenport, whose wedded lot is said to be crowned with an unbroken pleasure. [Home Journal.

Dr. Foote, in a recent letter to the Buffalo Commercial Advertiser, dated from the European capital, says:

"Members of one House are not permitted on the floor of the other, nor, as at Washington, can the floor of either House be invaded by a swarm of privileged persons not members. The Commons would resent it as a gross breach of privilege, if the highest peer of the realm should presume to enter their hall while they are in session. How often is our House of Representatives assaulted by the presence on its floor, and active, almost open participation of Senators, in its business!"

Were such a rule in force in our Congress and our State Legislatures, there is little doubt that it would conduce to the quietness and respectability of both.—[Albany Argus.

HAWAIIAN ISLANDS.—A letter has been received from the United States Consul stationed at these islands, dated Honolulu, October 4, 1855, which gives some interesting information in relation to the success which has attended the efforts of the daring whalemen in that quarter, and which also states that a number of vessels have been wrecked:

We have at present some twenty whale-ships in this port, embracing a few from Kodiac, from the Ochotsk, and from the Japan seas.

The reports they bring indicates a very good catch. From all the information I can gather, I think the North Pacific fleet will average some eight hundred barrels to each vessel.

Five ships are reported as lost in the Ochotsk sea, but as yet the report has not been authenticated. It is said that the number of wrecks in all is fourteen.

TWO MEN OVER NIAGARA FALLS.—We are informed by a gentleman from Chippewa, Canada, that two persons belonging to that village went over the Falls on Friday last. They were out on the river in a small boat fowling, and in pursuit of game, ventured too far into the current, and were consequently carried over the cataract. [Buffalo Courier, 19th.

NEW ORLEANS:

SATURDAY, JANUARY 5, 1856

Centenary College.—We had the pleasure of seeing President Miller a few minutes last week. He informs us the health of the College is good and the attendance of students. Over a hundred are now in College.

Rev. Stevenson passed through the city last week from Texas to Nashville. He spent a Sabbath with us, to the edification of the Church. He is accompanied by Mrs. S., and escaped the perils and sea sickness of the Gulf passage, the health of both, we are happy to say, is good.

That New Arm Chair.—Our old friend W. H. Lyon, of Demopolis, Ala., has presented us with a most comfortable, domestic-looking arm chair: white oak rounds and split bottom, with spacious arms of walnut—all native of Marengo county, and manufactured there. No paint discolors the virgin wood. Were it not so democratic looking, we would suspect him of a Native American hint in this thing. How it rocks!

Southern University.—The following are the names of the Trustees elected by the Alabama Conference to manage the affairs of the College: Bishop Paine, President; Bishop Andrew, Rev. J. Hamilton, D. D., Rev. A. H. Kendall, D. D., Rev. Philip P. Neely, Rev. Thomas J. Koger, Rev. C. C. Calloway, Rev. J. A. Hutchinson, Rev. J. Heard, Rev. T. Y. Ramsey, Rev. Ed. Wardsworth, D. D., Rev. R. Q. C. DeVampert, John Erwin, Thomas M. Johnston, Gaston Drake, John W. Walton, Wm. T. Webb, Gideon E. Nelson, H. W. Hilliard, J. Baker, Duke Goodman, C. Coleman.

Rs. C. G. Young.—For several days our citizens have had the pleasure of entertaining the worthy President of the Vicksburg and Tenne Railroad. Dr. Young is here looking to that great and practical interest. Has purchased 500 tons of iron, and made arrangements for 1500 tons more, as soon as needed. This road starting in Madison parish, opposite Vicksburg, runs to the line of Texas, a distance of 190 miles, not varying the whole length three miles from an air-line! Now 400 hands are at work. In a year the road is expected to reach Bayou Macon—35 miles. A great prospect is opening up for a great country. Considering the advantages to be realized to our city, we should suppose our capitalists would invest in it readily and largely.

Anniversary of the Bible House.

Last Sunday evening, the sixth anniversary of the N. O. and Southwestern Bible Society, was held in Odd Fellows' Hall. Considering the bad weather, the audience was good. Dr. Leacock delivered an impressive and appropriate discourse, commending the cause of the Bible to men, to patriots, Christians, philanthropists. Dr. L. is a hearty speaker: there is a breadth of view, emphasis and outspokenness about him peculiarly agreeable. Dr. McNeil, one of the corresponding Secretaries of the Parent Society, gave much new and valuable information. Dr. Walker followed, calling for the collection, which came up, we know not to what figure. The Bible House is $2700 in debt for its building. The report was read by Mr Saul, one of our citizens, to whom every good cause is much indebted. The amount of rent realized the past year for portions of the building not occupied by the Society was stated at $1100. This Society covers large ground—assigned it by agreement with the Parent American Bible Society. Since it has been in operation, it has been the means of the distribution, either directly or indirectly, through auxiliaries, of 38,000 copies of the Scriptures, in 13 different languages. During the entire period of five years, it has labored under the disadvantage of the want of means incompatible with the demands of the field upon which it has entered.

Book and Tract Agent of the Mississippi Conference.

I see some of the papers, in publishing the appointments of our Conference, put down H. T. Lewis as Agent for Book and Tract Society and Sharon Female College. This is a mistake. Bro. Montgomery is our Book and Tract Agent. Bro. Lewis is Agent for Sharon Female College. But the understanding with the Bishop was that he would labor in the Book and Tract business as far as his time would allow.

I am perfectly conversant with this appointment. Had it changed after Conference adjourned. If you have fallen into this error, please correct it, and put H. H. Montgomery as Book and Tract Agent.

Yours, etc., R. Abney.

Lake City, Dec. 17, 1855.

Not Yours but You.—The eloquent and powerful Dr. John M. Mason, on leaving his congregation in New York, said: "Since the time of my settlement here, lawyers, merchants, physicians, have made their fortunes; not an industrious and prudent mechanic but has laid up something for his family. But should God call me away to-morrow, after expending the flower of my life, my family could not show a single cent for the gain of more than seventeen years' toil."

Recent Publications.

B. M. Norman, 14 Camp street, keeps on his well stored and tasteful shelves rare volumes and good. He is the most recherché of New Orleans booksellers. We have been supplied by the publishers, through him, with the following:

History of Philip the Second, King of Spain; by Wm. H. Prescott. 2 vols., 8vo. Boston, 1855; Phillips, Sampson & Co.

It is enough to know that Prescott has put forth another work—in his favorite vein of Spanish history. There can be no failure of interest or information or finished literature. We may tell how the work is got up. The publishers have done well by it. Generous margin, large type, clean and good material. Several portraits—Phillip, Don Carlos, Duke of Alva—illustrate the volumes—taken from the originals by Titian. Much of Charles the Fifth's history is involved, and rendered captivatingly. Much of Reformation struggles, too. The clew to Philip's reign is held to have been "maintaining the authority of the Holy See." Mr. Prescott claims the benefit of novel as well as original sources of information—among others, the archives of Simancas, "which have held the secrets of Spanish monarchy hermetically sealed up," were opened to his researches.

The Life of A. Alexander, D. D., LL. D., by J. W. Alexander, D. D. New York. J. Scribner, 1856. 8vo., pp. 562.

A condensed edition of the larger memoir. We have perused it with unflagging entertainment. Dr. A. was a Virginian by birth and developement, though his great and characteristic labors were put forth in New Jersey, where at an advanced age he died a few years since. He was not a graduate, though President of a College. His theological education was acquired under a private preceptor, and as an itinerant Presbyterian preacher—though he founded the present seminary system at Princeton in 1812—was its first professor. The seminary opening with three students and was five years in reaching thirty. The founding and growing up of this plan for providing ministers, now so prevalent and in certain quarters popular, has its history bound up with Dr. Alexander's. He was an extemporaneous speaker. Chief Justice Kirkpatrick called him "the prince of Methodist preachers." Yet he did not like the Methodists—though much of this showing may be chargeable to his biographer. His mind in all its manifestations was marked by orderliness. Here was greatness—rare, natural and refreshing—nothing of artificiality, stiffness, pedantry. It is profitable to study such a man.

The Skeptical Era in Modern History. By T. M. Post. New York, 1856. C. Scribner.

The infidelity of the eighteenth century was alarming in character and extent, and it is a fit problem for philosophic minds. Mr. Post traces it to spiritual despotism—which principle is embodied in Romanism. Men revolted—and continue to—not from Christianity so much as from the Church. Intense ecclesiasticism producing weariness, disgust, oppression, fear and hatred. Mr. P. discusses the faith that consorts with political and social freedom—finds it under Protestantism.

Napoleon at St. Helena. Harper & Bros., New York, 1856. By J. S. C. Abbott. Large 8vo.

Mr. Abbott gives an inner view of Longwood—conversations, anecdotes, etc., drawn from O'Meara, Lascases and other sources. The illustrations resemble those in the two volume history of the Wars, and we suspect were used in that work. The whole affair has a hasty, flashy, catchpenny look.

The Discarded Daughter; by Mrs. Emma D. E. N. Southworth. T. B. Peterson, Philadelphia, 1856.

Dr. Glover, of Aberdeen, Miss., ought to present this authoress with a bottle of his Bayberry syrup—a cure for diarrhœa. The label represents it a "certain" cure—and nothing less ought to be tried in this case.

Kate Weston, or to will and to do. Dewitt & Davenport, New York, 1856.

A novel by the daughter of Rev. J. Dowling, D. D., and dedicated to him!

Ladies' Pulpit Offering; by Rev. W. C. Duncan, pastor of Baptist Church in New Orleans. New York, Lamport & Co., 1856.

The ladies of Mr. Duncan's church are indebted to his polite compliance and to their own appreciative taste for a unique offering, and one that must strengthen the bonds between pastor and people. Here are more than a dozen sermons, of finished composition, delivered in the course of his regular ministrations in Colyseum Place; each dedicated to the lady who at the time professed special edification or pleasure from it. While there is no mistaking the doctrinal platform where the sermons were announced, their spirit is loving, earnest, and evangelical.

A large party of persons are about to remove from Boston to Georgia, where they have purchased a fine tract of land which includes a good water power, ready for immediate use. They propose to build a manufacturing town, which shall soon become a city; and carrying with them, as they will, New England energy, ingenuity and aptitude for thrift, they can hardly fall short of full success. They propose to take out quite a number of new and practical working machines, and at once establish manufactories and trades as well as agriculture.

Professor Cleveland, of Bowdoin College, has never been inside a railway car. The venerable man, about three years since, made up his mind that he would visit Portland, via the K. & P. R. R., and the day for his journey was fixed. On the morning of his intended departure, the worthy Professor happened to read an account of a smash up somewhere in the vicinity of New Orleans. From that moment his old fear returned, and he has never ventured even to hope for a railroad ride.

Assessment by Joint Board of Finance of the Alabama Conference.

At the late session of the Joint Board of Finance of the Alabama Conference, the following assessment was made to the several Districts:

Mobile District	$500
Demopolis District	550
Columbus District	500
Talladega District	300
Montgomery District	600
Camden	400
Gainesville District	550
Tuscaloosa District	550
Blountsville District	150
Summerfield District	550
Eufala District	450
Lowndsboro' District	400

The plan of Finance requires that the above amounts shall be divided out among the several circuits and stations according to their several ability.

The following laymen were elected members of the Board at the late session of the Conference:

Mobile District, R. A. Baker.
Demopolis District, D. B. Turner.
Gainesville District, A. J. Phares.
Columbus District, W. L. Lipscomb.
Tuscaloosa District, W. A. Ferrill.
Blountsville District, J. N. McClanahan.
Talladega District, J. E. Groce.
Montgomery District, Isaac Hill.
Eufala District, E. R. Flewellin.
Lowndesboro' District, T. M. Williams.
Camden District, W. H. Burge.

Nashville Correspondence.

Mr. Editor—There is always a good deal of gossipping in every community, but less of it, perhaps, in our city than in any place you ever saw. The same remark would not be applicable, however, to another propensity of fallen human nature. You will not find it difficult to guess that I mean curiosity. This has been called forth in a wonderful degree I understand by the "Crotchet letters," and grave Doctors of Divinity, simple reverends, pastors, laymen, and the wives of each and all, have been more or less engaged in finding out the real name of your Nashville correspondent. While I cannot entirely restrain my contempt for such meddlesome curiosity, I sincerely wish them joy of their undertaking.

Speaking of these letters reminds me of Dr. Thomas W. Dorman's indignant "disclaimer," published in a late issue of your paper. It elicited my sympathies, as it must have been deeply mortifying to him to rest under the imputation of being the author of so foolish a letter as the one signed A. Z. It gives me great pleasure to answer the doctor, that I have never at any time supposed him to be the author of A. Z.'s letter.

Most of our preachers have just returned home from visits to various Conferences. Their brief residence among us has given rise to an attachment on our part which is unpleasantly interrupted by their being away.

We had imagined that there was some reason for being proud of Methodism in Middle Tennessee, but the zeal for missions and Sunday-schools exhibited by South Carolina and Georgia, and for the education and support of ministers and their children by North Carolina, and the princely subscriptions recently made in Alabama for the erection and endowment of their proposed college, surpass all praise.

Matters at the Publishing House are going as usual. I mention this in every letter, as you are doubtless anxious to know that the seat of government is still firm on its rocky foundations, exhibiting as yet no symptoms of reverse or decline. Business is increasing in all respects, whether you understand me as alluding to the the amount of work done, or the number of books sold. The subscription lists are steadily increasing, and no establishment in the land can turn out better typography or binding. Many valuable books, both theological and literary, are being issued, and I feel especially gratified at the number and beauty of the volumes sent out for children.

The Cumberland is in splendid boating order, and likely to continue so for some time to come. You may say to those of your friends who admired the "goose navigation" witticism, that the river has been navigable during the whole of the past year.

The Legislature has just appropriated the sum of two hundred thousand dollars for the erection of a railroad bridge over the river, one of the conditions of this grant is, that thirty miles of this end of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad shall be completed within the coming two years. The other bridge of which I spoke in a previous letter will probably be commenced in a very short time, as the necessary amount of stock is nearly all taken.

In my last letter, I omitted giving you the details of the movement which was made during the late session of the Tennessee Conference in behalf of the Methodist Theological Seminary. They can be told in few words. Dr. Henkle offered a report which amounted to an elaborate argument in favor of its establishment. Messrs. Irwin and Johnson attempted to say something on the side of the report, but so strong was the opposition against such an institution, that nothing availed, and it was laid on the table by an almost unanimous vote. So mote it be.

Book and Tract Operations in Mississippi.

How to Head Brother M'Tyeire.

At the late session of the Mississippi Conference justly decided measures seemed to be taken for a more thorough distribution of the literature of our church among the people by means of the Book and Tract Society. They selected us travelling agent of this Society one of the very best men they have—the Rev. H. H. Montgomery—and I believe a good number of sub-agents and colporteurs are expected to labor under him in this truly great work.

Now it strikes me that a question of some importance arises here, as to whether we cannot, or how we but can, draw Bro. McTyeire into this matter, and compel him to labor for us. He works pretty well when he is compelled to. Is not this a good plan?

The kind of work we want him to do for us is to make frequent notices of our books and operations in his paper, to call attention to our new works, and bring our books, new and old, frequently before the readers of his paper. This will facilitate the distribution of our literature very much. Frequent advertising is a great thing.

Now suppose we, all of us, who feel interested in this enterprise, increase his subscription but pretty largely in this Conference, a thing which we can do very easily. McTyeire will take this as so much done for his paper; and he may so consider it if he pleases, and it will, I think, spur him up to work for us wonderfully.

But we will know very well all the while that while we are sending subscribers to him we are disseminating the advertisements and notices of our books and operations, thereby benefiting ourselves greatly, though it may incidentally benefit his paper. And if he thinks so, why, of course, we have no objections.

We will not consult him about this arrangement, but will set it going ourselves, and see if he will not have the magnanimity to work up to it fully. Perhaps we had better say nothing to him about it, at least for the present, but try him, and see what he will do.

Of course I must write

Annonymously.

Agreed!! [Ed.

Southern College.

We are always happy to greet and welcome Southern enterprises, no matter of what description, so they have useful and laudable ends in view. We hail the erection of a new cotton factory with unaffected pleasure, and look upon the completion of each mile of Southern railroad as directly connected with Southern development and improvement. So, too, with school houses and colleges. The establishment of each one tends to the general good, and should receive general encouragement. In institutions of learning, as well as in internal improvements, the South has been, for a long time, lamentably deficient. But, day by day, the deficiencies are decreasing; and, ere long we trust, we shall have no cause for shame when comparisons are made between our own condition and that of our more northern States, educational or otherwise.

Therefore, we view with unalloyed satisfaction, the preparations that have been made for the establishment of a collegiate institution of a high order of merit, in the vicinity of Mobile. The spot selected, we understand, is on the elevated grounds of Mobile Bay, near Hollywood, a locality with which most of our readers are familiar. A better place could not have been chosen, it seems to us, either for pleasantness, health or eligibility. Some liberal and public spirited citizens of Baldwin and Mobile have already conveyed the grounds necessary for the purpose, about fifty acres, and subscriptions adequate to the erection of the necessary buildings have been obtained in Mobile. We learn that contracts have been entered into, and that the edifices are expected to be completed in the spring, when the college will be open for the reception of students.

The learned gentlemen who have entered upon this enterprise are fully adequate to the task, arduous though it be. Messrs. James M. Saunders and Norman Pinney, are both thoroughly experienced in the vocation of teaching, and enjoy a reputation second to none enjoyed by gentlemen in the South. We copy and endorse the following from a city cotemporary:

Mr. Pinney is a veteran teacher in this State and Mobile, and the author of some of the best esteemed works of elementary instruction. Mr. Saunders has been at the head of a popular school in this city, and has the highest testimonials of capacity for usefulness. Both are gentlemen of sound education and eminent fitness to be the instructors of youth. When their undertaking is fully under way, and they present themselves before the public for a portion of that which Southern parents owe to themselves and their children to dispense among their own people, the claims of these gentlemen will be found of a high order, and to stand the test of scrutiny and experience.—[Crescent.

Our National Defences.—In a late number of the Philadelphia Argus we find a leading article in regard to the inadequacy of our national defences, which is entitled to much consideration at the present time. The Argus says:

"The report of the Secretary of the Navy to the President, transmitted to Congress at the beginning of the session in December last, is, as yet, the most authentic exposition of our means of maritime defence and attack before the public. The statement of Mr. Lenthal, Chief of the Bureau of Construction, Equipment and Repair, embraced in that report, makes it obvious that, although the Navy register enumerates seventy-two vessels, not more than thirty-nine can be effective, to-wit: Only two ships-of-the-line, nine frigates, eighteen sloops-of-war, four brigs, and six steamers!

"Even this comparatively insignificant force is scattered over the world, and could not be concentrated on our Atlantic or Pacific coast, much less be stationed off the the mouths of our great estuaries, to shield the cities on their banks, in less than four or six months."

The Argus concludes:

"All these thoughts inspire anxiety that Congress should no longer delay its organization. In ordinary circumstances, the operations and perplexities of party may be allowed a loose rein; but now every hour wasted incurs the risk of immense calamity and loss. The national defences exact immediate attention. If the Federal Legislature fail at once to secure the safety against quick surprises of Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Charleston, Savannah and New Orleans, the consequences cannot be foreseen, and local patriotism, independent of party, must do its best and prepare for the worst."

Emigration to Nicaragua.—The Transit Company having lowered the price of passage from New York to Granada City, C. A., to twenty dollars, large numbers of mechanics and agriculturists are preparing to leave for the promised land. The Nicaraguan Government has issued a decree in relation to immigration, which grants two hundred and forty acres of land to each actual settler; and we understand that special facilities will be offered to North Americans.

New Year's Day.

"Farewell to the Past! Welcome to the Present!! Hail to the Future!!!

One more year, out of the many that make the world's history, effect its progress and multiply its achievements, has gone to be numbered with those that were before; leaving behind a note-book and memorandum, from which ages that are born when we and our works have both crumbled to dust, shall read strange and wonderful legends of what will be to them no less miraculous than are the Pre-Adamite ages to us. Eighteen hundred and fifty-five—born twelve months ago, with so jubilant a spirit: inaugurating so thorough a millennium; promising so rich a life and such glorious honors, has passed through youth, maturity, old-age, and, now, gone down to sleep with the many years past, in the great mausoleum of time.

What has he done? and what has he left to be done? What is the aggregate of his achievements and how rich a prestige has he bequeathed to his successor? As the Egyptians are reported to have tried, in a Campus Martius and open field, the memories and reputations of their great men and rulers, before giving them the rites of cremation, it is fitting that we should try the memory of the year gone to decide on his deserts. The first most prominent matter that rises in response to the interrogatory is the war—for war has ever and at all times occupied a greater share of men's eyes than the gentle arts of peace. So far as the present war is concerned, there is nothing to be written not already known; so far as its ultimate results are concerned, the best logic is but speculative. In its mere mention the whole history is brought before the mind's eye: conscription; taxation, bereavement; blood, suffering and death, for a principle not yet clearly stated; a dogma not comprehended by those whose blood has so richly colored it.

After the great war, and the political relations affected by it, have passed from before the glass, the peaceful figures of agriculture, sheaf-crowned, and commerce, with its trident, succeed—suggesting the labors of the husbandman and its reward, the perils of the sailor and their compensation. The mechanical arts and the sciences follow in the long procession, with banners indicative of the growth they have attained and the full development they have reached. Education walks between them with the gait and wand of Minerva. The fine arts are sketching the whole, and Apollo stands ready to sing them for immortality. What progress has been made in them must be left for the judgments of those after-ages, which have ever been the Rhadamanthos of the present. That much has been attempted in every department, we do know. That something has been accomplished, we do believe. But how much has been commenced and how much achieved, it is as yet too early to say. The history of 1492 is not told even to this day—no, not the history of the first day of the first year of this world's existence. The result is so near to the cause in fact that it can only be separated by that arbitrary will which judges of the barren fact with no correlative considerations: a cause not allowable in trying the life of one man; why, therefore, more justly, in judging the lives and history of all men?

But, if—as is the case—we cannot speak of the achievements of '55 in their individual relations, nor in their ultimate results, we can say of them, broadly, that they have been dictated by a nobler, purer and more enlightened spirit of art, learning and intents than those of any year previous. The considerations have been wider and grander—the results, therefore, slower and more gradual. Men have aimed their arrows at the sky, with the hope that they might return learning-laden, rather than bury them to the shaft in any doddered old oak. They have pushed out farther and farther from the old roads, ever grading the path they traveled, and ever hoping to touch a channel which should lead into the distant Aldebran and inaugurate anew the Age of Gold.

Contrasting the results of the year to what has been effected by it in our own city, State and section, although there is not that unexpected and unusual cause for thanksgiving which some of his brother years have presented, there is, nevertheless, good and sufficient cause for joy: first, in that things have been no worse than they have; and, secondly, that they have been so good. If the crops have not excelled precedent in one way, neither have they in another. If great fortunes have not been suddenly acquired, they have not been unavoidably lost. Men have been compelled to work somewhat harder, which, if they were gifted to learn it, is a blessing instead of an evil—the cloth being inactive, and the lion fully himself only when spurred to action. At present, business is brightening up, and the clouds that overcast some countenances, are whirled away in its eddies. Each one who has two good hands, a good heart and a good head, is possessed of the seed of fortune, though he have to await its growth. The year coming is heavily freighted with hope, and we are glad to see with promise, also. Let fresh resolution, renewed energy accompany it, and the fruitage of 1856 shall do honor to the seedling of 1855.

With all his virtues, all his failings, the Old Year has gone from us, not to return. The breath of a fresher life fans our cheeks and strengthens our nerves. We, all of us, set about the search for our isles in the West once more, let it be hoped with greater success than has has attended our previous exploring expeditions. And in the furtherance of this hope, we beg to extend to the many readers and patrons of the Crescent—the old, staunch friends, who have been with us from our beginning—the new and cordial ones who have been dropping in by the way with words of approval and encouragement—to all and each, a Happy New Year and many returns!

May your pockets increase in size—your wives in beauty—your children in numbers and intelligence. May rich aunts and uncles soon depart—may you all elect your own Sheriff, with or without contestations, and generally enjoy A Happy New Year!—[Crescent.

The Cape De Verd Islands.—While we are in the enjoyment of all the blessings accruing from an abundant harvest, the inhabitants of the Cape de Verd Islands are in a condition of absolute starvation. Thirty thousand people on the Island of San Antonio alone are compelled to subsist mainly upon banana stalks and the flesh of cattle which have died of famine. They have made no appeal to the charcteristic benevolence of the American people, and yet our active sympathy with their distresses is not the less called for on the ground of common humanity. Of all the nations of the world, we are, at this time, in the best condition to extend a liberal hand to the sufferers. Their isolated position renders them dependent upon supplies from other countries, and if, out of our superabundance, we were to bestow upon them, for charity's sake, that "material aid" they so much need, it would redound to our honor as a nation and our credit as philanthropists.

The stock for three swift American steamers, to ply between Panama and Valparaiso, has been nearly taken up by capitalists, chiefly in New York and Boston. The first steamer is expected to be upon the route in about ten months from the present time.

Business.

At the present writing there appears no prospect whatever of settled clear weather. In fact, appearances justify us in comparing the present season with several which have preceded, particularly one season when the very ground on which our office stands, with the whole block from Natchez street to within thirty feet of the corner of Gravier, was occupied by General Palfrey as a cotton press and warehouse. Chartres street and Old Levee street were the only streets running parallel with the river which were paved. The streets were knee deep with mud, and wholly impassable for weeks. The only way of getting cotton from the levee to the warehouses, was by rolling it on the sidewalks. After it was compressed, to get it to the shipping was attended with the cost of one dollar per bale, drayage and extra labor. This extra expense was divided between the cotton presses, the shipper of the cotton and the ship—one-third to each. The manner was to roll it from the presses on the sidewalk to Chartres street, where it was taken in charge by drays. We allude to this circumstance because we hear it daily expressed that our streets, landings and highways were never before in so bad condition. True, there never was a time so much produce has been piled upon the landing, but we have had as detrimental weather before and may have it again.

Whether there will ever be so heavy a stock of cotton as there is at this time, we do not pretend to foretell, but leave it for our old conservative antiquarians to divine. But let us look at the stock of cotton and see what it is. According to our accounts there were on hand, on Saturday evening, three hundred and forty-six thousand one hundred and thirty bales cotton (346,130) being an excess of 25,591 bales over any previous time. The Price Current also gives us the amount of stock at the same time for ten years past, so we place the stocks on the last day of each year as follows:

" 1854	177,180
" 1853	225,074
" 1852	320,533
" 1851	137,073
" 1850	185,570
" 1849	150,066
" 1848	183,752
" 1847	164,451
" 1846	166,222

Being an average stock of 200,057 bales on the last day of the year for ten years past. The course of the cotton market for the balance of the season will be regarded with great anxiety. With very low stocks in Liverpool, at the last date, per Asia, say only 154,910 bales American, against 303,350 at same period last year, and a stock of all kinds of 395,609 against 567,570, with increasing consumption in face of the war, with prospects of peace far, very far off, the future course of cotton battles all conjecture, and we are satisfied our market must be, for this season, governed by events on the other side of the Atlantic.

The great stocks in every warehouse and cotton press in our city is causing some uneasiness regarding the heavy responsibilities under which our several insurance companies find their policies to cover. Conflagrations of cotton presses and loads of cotton on steamboats, have caused more losses, been the occasion of more bankruptcies of local insurance companies, than all other disasters combined.

However, it is gratifying that we have in our community five as solid and responsible companies as are to be found on our continent, viz: the Crescent, the Home, the Louisiana, the Merchants', and the New Orleans, with the Sun now entering on business under the most favorable auspices, with a subscribed capital of nearly $400,000, comprising among its subscribers a very numerous body of our responsible merchants. There are also several agencies of foreign and distant companies, but as they have never exhibited to us their situations, the nature of their securities, or to what extent they may be considered responsible, we are not prepared to say. It would be sound policy for our Legislature to require that on the occasion of any foreign or distant companies establishing an agency hereafter in our city, they should be compelled to show their hands, as it were, and deposit with our State authorities, securities to the amount of $50,000 to $100,000 for each office; and some limited surveillance or yearly inspection should control those already established, but no statutes of a post facto nature ought to be made.

Death of "Yusef."—The many thousands who have read that delightful and brilliant episode of Eastern travel by J. Ross Browne, will remember with pleasure the hero of the Kentuckian's crusade in the East, Yusef Simeo Badra. The editor of the Louisville Courier, who had a personal acquaintance with Yusef, describes him as quite a gentleman in manners and cultivation, and adds:

He came to America some two years ago, in company with Keene Richards, Esq., of Scott county, in this State. Mr Richards met him in the Holy Land, and he having letters of recommendation from Ross Browne, employed him to select some Arab horses and bring them to this country. This he did, and since then has been residing with Mr. Richards.

A few months since Mr. Richards and Yusef sailed from New York for the Mediterranean, designing to enter into the service of the expedition sent out by the government to purchase camels. They reached Beyrout, in Syria, where the parents of Yusef reside, in October. The town was in great commotion as soon as his arrival home was announced, and preparations were made for a great feast in his honor. That night the feast was had and merriment prevailed. But before morning poor Yusef was dead. He suffered from an attack of colic, and passed away from earth in less than twenty-four hours after he had reset his feet on the land of his ancestors.

Mr. Keene Richards immediately gave up the enterprise, visited Constantinople and Sebastopol, and then returned home. He was in the city on Saturday afternoon, en route for his Southern plantation.

The Arctic Expedition.—We publish below the letter of the British Minister to Dr. Kane, together with the Doctor's reply to the same. The Minister's letter expresses the high sense in which her Majesty and her Majesty's government hold the noble conduct of the Doctor and his associates, and the pleasure it gave them to hear of their return:

Washington, Dec 8, 1855.

Sir:—Her Majesty's government have lately been apprised of the safe return of the expedition under your command to the Arctic regions in search of Sir John Franklin. They have also been informed of the safe return of the searching squadron under Captain Hartstein. This intelligence has afforded sincere pleasure to her Majesty's government, and I have now the honor, in their name, to offer their cordial congratulations to you, sir, and to convey to you, and to request you to communicate to the officers and crews who, under your command, so nobly attempted to afford relief to Sir John Franklin and the officers and crews of her Majesty's ships employed on the Arctic expedition, the assurance of the sincere gratitude of the British Government and people for their generous exertions.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient and humble servant, John F. Crampton.

To Dr. Kane, U. S. Navy.

Philadelphia, Dec. 11, 1855.

Sir—I am highly honored by the letter you have addressed to me, expressing the generous feeling with which her Britannic Majesty's Government have been pleased to regard the efforts of the expedition lately under my command to afford assistance to Sir John Franklin and his associates. I shall not fail to communicate it to the surviving officers and men of the party; and I pray you, in their behalf as well as my own, to convey to her Britannic Majesty's Government our very grateful acknowledgments for this mark of their favorable regard.

I am, sir, with great respect, your very obedient, faithful servant, E. K. Kane.

His Excellency, John F. Crampton,
Minister Plenipotentiary, etc., etc.

How the Kansas War Ended.—A letter in the St. Louis Republican of the 21st, from a gentleman of Westport, who accompanied Gov. Shannon to Lawrence, gives the following account of the termination of the recent Kansas invasion:

A committee waited upon his Excellency, inviting him to come to Lawrence. We found them entrenched, and as well fortified as could be expected for their forces—They were all well armed with Sharpe's rifles and revolvers, and other implements of war. My opinion is, they only had one piece of artillery. I think our forces could have demolished every building in the place in half an hour; but had one gun been fired on either side, I am also of opinion that the greater portion would have been killed, and no doubt many of our own men would also have suffered. We numbered many more than they did. Their force was greatly overrated, and could not possibly have been over four or five hundred. We also had a great many of Sharp's rifles, many more than they imagined, besides our cannon.

Gov. Shannon brought them to terms. They agreed, and bound themselves to abide the laws, and assist in enforcing them until such time as the Supreme Court decided the legality of the Legislature, and if so ever afterwards; and I verily believe they will, for I am sure they saw the predicament they had got themselves into.

A dispatch of the 24th, from New Haven, says:

The British Discovery Ship Resolute, which was abandoned in the Arctic Seas some years since, was brought to New London yesterday, with all her armament, stores and equipments, amounting to $100,000. When found she had drifted 1000 miles from where she was abandoned.

Thanksgiving.

Among the notable days which come crowding in upon us, at the present time, with a rapidity that leaves hardly any line of demarcation between them, there are few that have a more general observance in the older States of the confederacy than that one which is intended as an acknowledgment of the many blessings and pleasures which have been enjoyed during the past year. The custom is older than our own land; older than England; older than Rome; in fact, has an origin coeval with that of the world and the time when Adam offered up praise for his own being and thanks for the many pleasures that accompanied it.

Whatever the history of the observance may be, however, the observance is, in itself, well known and widely regarded. Our English ancestry, in the rigid days of the Covenanters and Cromwellians, were readier to do penence and appoint facts; but, even they, after any great, crowning mercy, had thanksgiving ceremonies and expressed their gratification by means of times and seasons specially set aside for their utterance. We, following their habits and customs, have made thanksgiving day a great festival, not less notable than Christmas—overshadowed only by the Fourth of July. It is the period when general acknowledgment is made of the favors that have been received and their continuance invoked; when so much of the country as comes within the scope of any one State proclamation, to a greater or less degree, withdraws from business to enjoy its fruits, and celebrate its results. It is a period when families, long sundered, are once more reunited; when the great table groans under the immensity of the edibles and drinkables placed upon it; when the large parlor is opened; music and the dance brought forward and happiness enjoyed, so far as can be. On the morrow, labor renews itself, to the end that there shall be cause for still other thanksgivings.

The general blessings for which we have reason to be grateful are manifest to all; the individual blessings can be known only to their recipients. In these which are common, however—to the highest as well as the lowest—the blessings of life and health, the pleasure of seeing and hearing, of loving and being loved, there is ample cause for gratitude and thanks to the Omnipotent Power which has so constituted us that we are able to enjoy them, and so blessed us that we have them to enjoy. In the prosperity, growth and power of our city, and State, and country; in the permanence of our free institutions; in the rapid progress we continue to make among the nations of the world, are other reasons for the same celebration. Our individual, our civic and our national prosperity, taken together, render it highly appropriate and befitting, that in their acknowledgment we shall show ourselves not unworthy nor ungrateful recipients, and herein, to some degree, entitle us to their renewal and continuance in after times. Those who have enjoyed much, should be thankful that they have so enjoyed; and, those who have suffered, grateful that their sufferings have been no severer. Inasmuch, therefore, as we all have some cause for thanksgiving, let the day be so observed, and the acknowledgments so rendered, that we shall show that we are not unmindful of the blessings so bountifully showered upon us.—[Crescent.

From Texas.—By the steamship Chas. Morgan, which arrived on Saturday last, we have Galveston papers to the 27th. The News has the following paragraph:

Serious apprehensions are expressed for the fate of the little steamer "Sam," which left here on Friday last, loaded with iron for the Houston railroad, and has not been seen or heard from since. This steamer, we learn, was built in the San Jacinto river, and was intended solely for the lumber trade. She had on board, eighty-five tons of iron, which, for her, was a very heavy load. She had no compass, and as there was a fog on Friday night, it is conjectured by some, that she may have lost her way and gone out to sea in the night. Her engine power was very small—hardly sufficient to stem the wind and current.

The State Democratic Convention is to be held in Austin, on the 16th of January next.

On the 21st inst., at Austin, the Hon. R. M. Pease and the Hon. H. R. Runnels, were sworn in by Speaker Lee, as Governor and Lieutenant Governor. The Marriages.

MARRIED, on the 13th Dec., 1855, in the Church at Vicksburg, by Rev. C. K. Marshall, Rev. JOHN J. CLARKE, of the Mississippi Annual Conference, to Miss SALLIE F. POWELL, of Warren County.

MARRIED, In Mobile, Alabama, on the 5th day of Dec., 1855, by the Rev. MATTHEW THOMASON, Mr. WILLIAM J. WHITE to Miss JOSEPHINE CHASTANG.

Deaths.

JAMES HARVEY PRENTICE was born January 20th, 1826, and died November 29th, 1855.

He professed religion about twelve years ago, and lived a consistent and happy Christian. He was licensed to exhort in 1852, and to preach in 1853. A few moments before dying, he said, in reply to a friend, who inquired about his prospects, "Tell my friends not to grieve for me. All is peace! All is well!"

E. T. NAHORS.

DIED—At his residence in DeSoto Parish, La., on the 11th November, WM. H. SAMPLE. He was born in South Carolina, February 3, 1814; emigrated to Alabama in 1821, and embraced religion at a camp meeting in Jefferson, in 1843. At the expiration of six months, he was baptized and received into full connection in the Church.

In 1844 he removed to this State, and, like too many others, Bro. Sample neglected the duty and privilege of attaching himself at once to the Church, and associating himself with the people of God. The consequence was, (as may reasonably be supposed) he lost his enjoyment of religion, and backslid to a fearful extent. He was married December 16, 1851, to Miss Sarah Ann Farmer, of this Parish. In 1853 a church was established near his house, by Brother Pipes, and Bro. Sample came forward and attached himself again to the church, since which time, up to the day of his death, he lived a consistent and exemplary member of the church of Christ, enjoying the consolations of that "Hope" which maketh not ashamed." Eight months previous to his disease, he was confined to his bed by sickness. His sufferings were very great during this time, but he bore them with Christian submission and fortitude: He repeatedly said that if it were not for the hope and trust that he had in his Saviour, he could not sustain the great affliction he endured. A few days before his exit, he was very sensible that his end was near, and said to his aged father, who was with him, that his way was clear, had no fears of death, that he was going home to heaven: He was very happy during the whole of the day before his death: Two or three hours before he died, he began praising God aloud, and continued to shout as long as he could speak, and thus expired with the praise of God an his lips: Happy death! "Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his."

W. W. BELL.

DIED: At her residence, near Vicksburg, Miss., on the 11th December, 1855, Mrs. SUSAN SPANN, aged 64 years.

Mrs. Spann was a native of Greensville Co., Virginia, from which State she removed to the place where she now sleeps in death, in 1817. For thirty years she was a member of the Methodist Church, and raised a family of children, who were happily with her in her sickness and death, and had the consolation of ministering to her last necessities, and consoling her in the great conflict. May God vouchsafe to the children a part with the mother in the first resurrection, and gather them all to His right hand in Heaven.

CYPRESS.

DIED: On Monday, the 22d of October, 1855, DOWELL TURBEVILLE SAMFORD, son of William F. Samford, and his wife Susan Lewis, at 12 o'clock M., aged three years, one month and nineteen days.

"With all our soul, O Lord, we give,
The child thy love hath snatch'd away;
On earth we would not have him live,
With us we would not have him stay;
The sacrifice long since was o'er,
We stand to what we gave before.
We all have left for Jesus' sake,
And shall we grieve to part with one?
No, if a wish could call him back,
We would not have our darling son
Brought from his everlasting rest,
Snatch'd from his heavenly Father's breast.
Pass a few fleeting days or years,
And we shall see our child again;
When Jesus in the clouds appears,
With him we shall in glory reign.
We and the children he hath given
Inseparably join'd in heaven."

New Advertisements.

We have frequently heard the celebrated German Bitters, sold by Dr. C. M. Jackson, 12th Arch street, Philadelphia, spoken of in terms of the highest commendation, and we believe it to be one of the best medicines advertised for the complaints for which it is recommended. They are pleasant to the taste, and can be taken under any circumstances by the most delicate stomach. The press, far and wide, have united in recommending this invaluable remedy for dyspepsia, debility, etc.; and such are the healing effects of this panacea, that we hope it may be introduced to every family where dyspepsia has or is likely to have a victim. A Teacher Wanted.

The Rev. Thos. H. Russel having withdrawn from the charge of the Tuskaloosa Methodist Female High School, a vacancy has been thereby created: of which it is the object of this advertisement to give notice and to invite applications for the vacant situation. It is proper to state that a very large and commodious building, situate in a beautiful part of the city of Tuskaloosa, together with the necessary apparatus for a school of this description, will be furnished gratis. That the school since its establishment, about two years since, has averaged about 75 pupils, which it is believed could be raised to at least 100. That Tuskaloosa is one of the healthiest and most desirable places as a private residence in the South-west, and being the site of the State University, offers superior advantages as a place for the education of both males and females. The employment of the subordinate teacher will be left to the principal. It will be expected that persons applying unknown to the trustees will furnish some testimonial of their ability.

The house is calculated for boarders, and it is expected that the principal will take as boarders such as may apply. The present term of the school will end on the 15th of February next, at which time it is proposed to open the succeeding session.

Those desirous of taking this school will address J. J. Ormond, President of the Board of Trustees, Tuskaloosa, who will give any further information which may be desired.

CHARACTERISTIC.—Oliver Wendell Holmes, having been an invalid for several weeks past, has been obliged to give up some of his engagements to lecture. The following characteristic letter, which we find in the Cambridge Chronicle, was read before the Athenæum of that city:

BOSTON, Dec. 11, 1855.

My Dear Sir: You must excuse me to your audience in the politest way you can. I have been ill, as you know, for a fortnight, and have been practising reduction and subtraction until there is a mere trifle left in the way of a remainder. I could stand up before an audience from long habit, but I doubt if I could sit down again without assistance. I am satisfied that if I were offered a fifty dollar bill after my lecture, I should not have strength enough left to refuse it. I am unwilling to run the risk, and as you have inspected me, I trust you will give a certificate of invalidism not of the kind called "Indisposition."

Yours, very truly,

O. W. HOLMES.

Hon. Isaac Livermore, President Cambridge Athenæum.

A CAREFUL ENGINEER.—The Burlington (Iowa) Telegraph, of the 5th inst., says, that the engineer on a passenger train on the Albany and Salem (Indiana) Railroad, on arriving at the bridge over Salt Creek, near Bloomington, recently, directed the passengers to alight, then crossing the bridge on foot he told the firemen to start the train and jump off, and that he would catch it when over. The train was started, and on reaching the center of the bridge it gave way, and the locomotive and cars were plunged into the stream and instantly disappeared from view.

CRIME IN CALIFORNIA.—The California journals abound in details of crime. The condition of affairs in that portion of the Republic is deplorable indeed. Scenes of violence and death are of almost daily occurrence, and executions by lynch-law have become ordinary events. Indeed, one of the San Francisco papers gives the following summary of the outrages that have taken place within the last nine months:

	1st Quar.	2d Quar.	3d Quar.	Oct.	Total
Total killed	129	99	208	62	489
Hung by Sheriff	2	—	2	2	6
Hung by mob	8	14	17	6	46

These are statistics of a truly appalling character. California cannot but suffer in consequence. The spirit of emigration will be checked and many of the peaceful residents, excited and alarmed, will be induced to leave. The authorities should endeavor to devise a remedy. There must be error either in the laws or their enforcement.

FROZEN TO DEATH.—John Martin, mail rider between Washington and Alexandria, was frozen to death on Tuesday last in Grand Prairie, while on his way from the former to the latter place. It appears that the badness of the roads compelled him to avoid the regular track, and that one side of his buggy struck into a ditch, throwing him out, where he perished. The mail, as well as what money was upon his person, were undisturbed. An inquest was held the next morning, and a verdict rendered according to the facts as above stated.—Martin was about fifty-five years of age. [Opelousas Patriot, 29th.

EXPENSIVE INCOLENCE.—In the Crimea they have to employ death to cure the men in the French ranks of a disposition to sneer at the English and underrate them. A letter in the New York Commercial states that lately a French soldier was shot by an order of his commanding officer, some weeks since, for an insulting remark made by him to an English officer in regard to the Redan, and further reference to the matter was forbidden. Another, in passing an English sentinel, pointed at the Redan and said, "Johnny, no bono!" Whereupon the sentinel bowed him on the spot; in other words, put a musket ball through him. The English gave him up to the French at once. They released him immediately—adjudging the soldier's punishment merited, severe as it was.

It is not generally known that the whole of the gold and silver coin of England are struck by atmospheric pressure, or, in other words, that the air we breathe coins our money. By a beautiful yet complicated arrangement of pneumatic valves, levers, springs and other mechanical appliances, the air is made to exert the vast weight in rapid alternations upon a series of pistons, which, again connected with the presses, carry down the dies upon the discs of metal to be coined, with unerring precision and force, and thus create money.

THE TRUE MARRIAGE.—It is a glorious sight to see two old people, who have weathered the storm and basked in the sunshine of life together, go hand in hand lovingly and truthfully down the gentle declivity of time, with no anger, no jealousy nor hatred garnered up against each other, and looking with hope and joy to the everlasting youth of heaven, where they two shall be one forever. That is the true marriage—for it is the marriage of spirit with spirit. The love is woven into a woof of gold that neither time nor eternity can sever.

An unfortunate editor in Kentucky, thus addresses his delinquent subscribers: "Friends, we are almost penniless—Job's turkey was a millionaire compared with our present depressed treasury. To-day, if the price of salt was two cents a barrel ful, we couldn't buy enough to pickle a jay-bird."

MORAL SUASION.—On board the Cunard steamers the church service is read every Sunday morning. The muster roll of the crew is called over and they attend to service. A gentleman one day said to one of the sailors:

"Are you obliged to attend public worship?"

"Not exactly obliged, sir," replied Jack, "but we should lose our grog if we did'nt."

HORNE TOOKE ridiculed the practice of sea-bathing, and said, if any of the seal species were sick, it would be as wise for a fish physician to order them to go on shore. Person declared that sea-bathing was only reckoned healthy because many have been known to survive it; but Sheridan's objection to salt water was the most quaint: "Pickles," said he, "don't agree with me."

Maine now boasts of owning a fleet of merchant vessels valued at fifty million of dollars, and greater than the commercial marine of any European power, Great Britain alone excepted.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

[BY THE NATIONAL LINE.]

WASHINGTON, Dec. 31.—The President's Message was read in the Senate to-day. President Pierce states that he has delayed the delivery of his annual communication to the two Houses until this time, in consequence of the non-organization of the House of Representatives, but that his convictions in regard to his duty will not permit him to delay any longer in giving to Congress information in regard to the state of affairs in the Union, and in recommending such measures as he judges necessary or expedient.

The message commences with a review of Central-American affairs, giving a full history of the late transactions in Central America in particular. The President next alludes to the late troubles in Kansas, and though he refuses to recount the difficulties, he says that the people of the Territory of Kansas must be protected in the exercise of their rights without any interference on the part of the people of any other State, and recommends the early attention of Congress to the subject.

President Pierce eulogizes popular sovereignty, giving a cursory history of the formation of the Union, and expatiates on State rights with particular reference to slavery and the fugitive slave law. He regards the agitation of the slavery question as dangerous to the durability of the Union, and regrets to see some of the States disregarding the constitutional organization, and refusing to obey the laws of Congress.

He denies that the South has obtained advantages over the North.

On the subject of Federal Government he proceeds to refer to the ordinance of 1787, and also to the acquisition of Louisiana to illustrate the balance of power between freedom and slavery; after reviewing which he comes down to the annexation of Texas, after a short review of which he passes to the repeal of the Missouri Compromise and the adherent acts, and goes on to argue that the South has gained no more than properly belongs to her.

He gives an elaborate defense of the principles of the Nebraska Bill, and indignantly denies that it was a breach of faith on the part of the South.

Grave questions are pending, says the President, between ourselves and some foreign powers, the most important of which is with Great Britain and arising out of the Nicaragua question.

The President states that it was the understanding of the Government of the United States, in making the treaty, (the Clayton and Bulwer treaty,) that all the States, at that time and at the present time forming the Central American Republic, would thenceforth enjoy a complete independence, and that both the contracting powers engaged equally, and to the same effect, for the present and for the future, that if either of said contracting powers had, at the time of the recognition of the treaty, any claim or right in Central America, that by said treaty such claim was unreservedly relinquished by the stipulations of said convention, and that no dominion will hereinafter exist in any of the parts of Central America, by either Great Britain or the United States.

This country consented to restrictions in regard to a region of country where we had a specific and peculiar interest, only and entirely upon the conviction that like restrictions were in the same sense obligatory upon Great Britain, and but for this understanding said treaty would never have been completed by the United States.

PETRARCH'S WORD.—Petrarch, a celebrated Italian poet, who flourished 400 years ago, recommended himself to the confidence and affection of Cardinal Colona, in whose family he resided, by his candor and strict regard to truth. A violent quarrel having occurred in Cardinal Colona's household, the Cardinal wishing to decide with justice, he assembled all his people, and obliged them to bind themselves by a solemn oath on the Gospel, to declare the whole truth. Every one without exception submitted to his determination, even the Cardinal's brother, Bishop of Luna, was not excused. Petrarch, in his turn, presented himself to take the oath; the Cardinal closed the book, and said, "As to you, Petrarch, your word is sufficient."

THE SIGHT OF BIRDS.—Pigeons find out newly sown fields immediately, and will frequently go several miles to a field the very first morning after it is sown. Wild ducks, that feed at night, are equally quick in finding their food; and in this case I would be glad to know what sense they employ. The red deer invariably knows when the shepherd's patch of grain is fit for his food, and will frequently come down in such numbers as to eat up the entire crop in a single night. The carrier pigeon finds its way home, take it what distance, and any way covered up you will. Toss it up in the air, and after circling for a few moments, it adopts its line of flight, without hesitation, and without mistake. Audubon furnishes an instance of the exercise of this faculty, in his description of the razor-bill: "The instinct or sagacity which enables the razor-bills, after being scattered in all directions, in quest of food, during the long night, often at great distance from each other, to congregate towards morning, previously to their alighting on a spot to rest, has appeared to me truly wonderful, and I have been tempted to believe that their place of rendezvous has been agreed upon the evening before." Man probably surpasses birds in the extent of vision, as much as a bird surpasses a man in sharpness. Ross, in his voyage to Baffin's Bay, proved that a man, under favorable circumstances, could see over the sea a distance of one hundred and fifty miles. It is not probable that any animal can equal this in extent. In sharpness of sight, on the other hand, birds greatly excel us. The eagle, soaring at such a height that he seems a mere speck, sees the grouse walking in the heather, which it so closely resembles in color, as readily to escape the sportsman's eye. Schmidt threw to a considerable distance from a bunch a number of beetles, of a pale, gray color, which the unassisted human eye failed to detect, yet the bird observed them immediately. Many birds readily perceive insects on branches where the sharpest sighted person could detect nothing.

A QUEER STORY.—Is it True?—Judge Marshall and Judge Washington were on their way to Mount Vernon, attended by a servant who had the charge of a large portmanteau containing their clothes. At their last stopping place, there happened to be a Scotch pedlar, with a pack of goods which resembled their portmanteau. The roads were very dusty, and a little before reaching the General's, they, thinking it hardly respectful to present themselves as they were, stopped in a neighboring wood to change their clothes. The colored man got down his portmanteau, and just as they had prepared themselves for their new garments, out flew some fancy soap and various other articles belonging to the pedlar, whose goods had been brought on instead of their own. They were so much struck by the consternation of their servant, and the ludicrousness of their own position being there naked, that they burst into loud and repeated shouts of laughter. Washington, who happened to be out upon his grounds near by, heard the noise and came to see what might be the occasion of it, when, finding his friends in that strange plight, he was so overcome with laughter, that he actually rolled upon the ground.

The oldest husbandry we know, is when a man in clover marries a woman in weeds.

Who Murdered Richard Downie?

About the end of the eighteenth century, whenever any student of the Marischal College, Aberdeen, Scotland, incurred the displeasure of the humbler citizens, he was assailed with the question, "Who murdered Downie?" Reply and rejoinder generally brought on a collision between "Town and Gown," although the young gentlemen were accused of what was chronologically impossible. People have a right to be angry at being stigmatized as murderers, when their accusers have probability on their side: but the "taking off" of Downie occurred when the gownsmen, so maligned, were in their swaddling-clothes.

But there was a time when to be branded as an accomplice in the slaughter of Richard Downie, made his blood run to the cheek of many a youth, and sent him home to his books thoughtful and subdued.

Downie was sacrist or janitor at Marischal College. One of his duties consisted in securing the gate by a certain hour, previous to which all the students had to assemble in the common hall, when a Latin prayer was delivered by the principal. Whether in discharging this function, Downie was more rigid than his predecessors in office, or whether he became stricter in the performance of it at one time than another, cannot now be ascertained; but there can be no doubt he closed the gate with rustere punctuality, and that those who were out in the common hall within a minute of the prescribed time, were shut out and were afterwards reprimanded and fined by the principal and professors. The students became irritated at this strictness, and took every petty means of annoying the sacrist; he, in his turn, applied the screw at other points of academic routine, and a fierce war soon began to rage between the collegians and the humble functionary. Downie took care that in all his proceedings he kept within the strict letter of the law; but his opponents were not so careful, and the decisions of the rulers were uniformly against them, and in favor of Downie. Reprimands and fines having failed in producing due subordination, rustication, suspension, and even the extreme sentence of expulsion had to be put in force, and in the end law and order prevailed. But a secret and deadly grudge continued to be entertained against Downie. Various schemes of revenge were thought of.

Downie was, in common with the teachers and the taught, enjoying the leisure of the short New Year's vacation: the pleasure being, no doubt, gently enhanced by the annoyances to which he had been subjected during the recent bickerings; when, as he was one evening seated with his family in his official residence at the gate, a messenger informed him that a gentleman at a neighboring hotel wished to speak with him. Downie obeyed the summons, and was ushered from one room to another, till at length he found himself in a large apartment hung with black, and lighted by a solitary candle. After waiting for some time in this strange place, about fifty figures, also dressed in black, and with black masks on their faces, presented themselves. They arranged themselves in the form of a court, and Downie was given to understand that he was about to be put upon his trial.

A judge took his seat on the bench; a clerk and public prosecutor sat below; a jury was empanelled; and witnesses and spectators stood around. Downie at first set down the whole affair as a joke; but the proceedings were conducted with such persistent gravity, that, in spite of himself, he began to believe in the genuine mission of the awful tribunal. The clerk read an indictment, charging him with conspiring against the liberties of the students; witnesses were examined in due form; the public prosecutor addressed the jury; and the judge summed up.

"Gentlemen," said Downie, "the joke has been carried far enough: it is getting late, and my wife and family will be anxious about me. If I have been too strict with you in times past, I am sorry for it; and I assure you I will take more care in future."

"Gentlemen of the jury," said the judge, without paying the slightest attention to this appeal, "consider your verdict: if you wish to retire, do so."

The jury retired. During their absence, the most profound silence was observed; and except renewing the solitary candle that burnt beside the judge, there was not the slightest movement.

The jury returned and recorded a verdict of "Guilty!"

The judge solemnly assumed a large black cap, and addressed the prisoner:

"Richard Downie! The jury have unanimously found you guilty of conspiring against the just liberty and immunities of the students of Marischal College. You have wantonly provoked and insulted those inoffensive lieges for some months, and your punishment will assuredly be condign. You must prepare for death! In fifteen minutes the sentence of the court will be carried into effect."

The judge placed his watch on the bench. A block, an axe, and a bag of saw-dust were brought into the centre of the room. A figure more terrible than any that had yet appeared, came forward, and prepared to act the part of doomster.

"For God's sake! gentlemen," said the terrified man, "let me go home. I promise that you never again shall have cause for complaint."

"Richard Downie," remarked the judge, "you are vainly wasting the few moments that are left you on earth. You are in the hands of those who demand your life. No human power can save you. Attempt to utter one cry, you are seized, and your doom is completed before you can utter another! Every one here present has sworn a solemn oath never to reveal the proceedings of this night; they are known to none but ourselves; and when the object for which we have met is accomplished, we shall disperse, unknown to any one. Prepare, then, for death: other five minutes will be allowed you—but no more!"

The unfortunate man, in an agony of deadly terror, raved and shrieked for mercy; but the avengers paid no heed to his cries. His fevered trembling lips then moved as if in silent prayer; for he felt that the brief space between him and eternity was but a few more tickings of that ominous watch.

"Now!" exclaimed the judge.

Four persons stepped forward and seized Downie, on whose features a cold, clammy sweat had burst forth. They bared his neck, and made him kneel before the block.

"Strike!" exclaimed the judge.

The executioner struck the axe on the floor; an assistant on the opposite side lifted at the same moment a wet towel, and struck it violently across the neck of the recumbent criminal. A loud laugh announced that the joke had at last come to an end.

But Downie responded not to the uproarious merriment.

They laughed again; but still he moved not. They lifted him, and Downie was dead!

Fright had killed him as effectually as if the axe of a real headsman had severed his head from his body.

It was a tragedy to all. The medical students tried to open a vein, but all was over; and the conspirators had now to hethink themselves of safety. They now in reality swore an oath among themselves; and the affrighted young men, carrying their disguises with them, left the body of Downie lying in the hotel.

One of their number told the landlord that their entertainment was not yet quite over, and that they did not wish the individual who was left in the room to be disturbed for some hours. This was to give them all time to escape.

Next morning, the body was found. Judicial inquiry was instituted, but no satisfactory result could be arrived at. The corpse of poor Downie exhibited no marks of violence internal or external. The ill-will between him and the students was known; it was also known that the students had hired apartments in the hotel for a theatrical representation: Downie had been sent for by them; but beyond this, nothing was known. No noise had been heard, and no proof of murder could be adduced. Of a hundred students of the college, who could point out the guilty or suspected party? Moreover, the students scattered over the city, and the magistrates themselves had many of their own families among the number, and it was not desirable to go into the affair too minutely.

Downie's widow and family were provided for, and his death remained a mystery; until, about fifteen years after its occurrence, a gentleman on his death-bed disclosed the whole particulars, and avowed himself to have belonged to the obnoxious class who murdered Downie.

THE WEEDER.

BY SARAH HOWARD MAY LYON.

"The servant recently deserveth the shadow."—JOB.

The morn is past and yet the weeds are thick.
And the fierce August heat pours on me burningly,
O God," she prayed, "send, send that shadow quick,
Which I desire so yearningly."

For me the heat and burdens of the day,
And a hard master who will show no levity;
For him rich pleasure grounds stretch far away,
With groves of cool serenity.

His are cool woodlands, in whose dusk arcades,
The very noonday seems of twilight semblance;
No heat wins there, but in those silent glades,
The silent dews hang tremulous.

Above his meadows, into golden air,
Each rounded knoll uplifts its green protuberance,
And ripening harvests wave and choke their hair
In golden-tressed exuberance.

The stately tulip crowns the glorious scene,
Enthroned monarch of the sylvan palaces,
And his strong arms like priests to ferial green,
Lift up their golden chalices.

Through the thick leaves the chastened sun-beams sift,
And pleasant shades are o'er the sward distributed;
There worms may crawl—there thistle-down may drift,
But I—I am prohibited.

I faint with toil, yet keep my faith to all.....
Though hope but God regardeth me observantly;
Father," she moaned, "when will that shadow fall,
For which I pine so fervently?"

There came a shadow, but 'twas icy cold,
As if some swart dread angel o'er her hovering;
It wrapped around her its voluminous fold,
And wrapped her in its covering.

Chill though it was, she hailed it with a smile,
And worn with years and grief, and long infirmity,
Lay down beneath it, slept a little while,
And wakened in eternity.

New Orleans, January 2, 1856.

AN EXTRAORDINARY STORY.—Mr. Francis, in his recently published volume of insurance anecdotes, relates the following:—A merchant appeared in the commercial walks of Liverpool, where, deep in the mysteries of cotton and corn, a constant attendant at church, a subscriber to local charities, and a giver of good dinners, he was much respected. The hospitalities of the house were gracefully dispensed by his niece. But at length it became whispered that his speculations were not successful; and it was necessary for him to borrow money. This he did upon the security of property belonging to his niece. A certain amount of scarcity was necessary for the sake of his credit, and the Liverpool underwriters readily assented. He insured her life with at least ten different merchants or underwriters for 2,000*l.* each; and the same game was again played over. The lady was taken ill, the doctor was sent for, and found her in convulsions. A specific was administered, but in the course of the night he was again summoned, but arrived too late. Next morning it was known to all Liverpool that she had died suddenly. The body lay in state, and the merchant retained his position, and bore himself with a decent dignity under his affliction. He made no immediate application for the money, and scarcely alluded to it; but he had selected his victims with skill. They were safe and honorable men and he only received his 20,000*l.* From this period he appeared to decline in health, and was recommended change of climate. He went abroad, and with him his clever partner, who possessed the wonderful power of simulating death, and deceiving the medical men.

WORK FOR THE MONTH—(DEC.)

The Plantation.—Cotton picking ought now to be finished as soon as possible, and the balance of the crop packed, and sent forward to market, so that the planter and his hands may have a little leisure before commencing the next year's labor. The planting of "our great staple" is drudgery at best; but it is made more laborious than necessary, by the "never ending still beginning" system of most of our planters. Let our readers who are so deeply interested, to begin the reform at once.

Corn land of last year, intended for the same crop next year, should be broken up thoroughly and deeply; and, if stiff, bedded up and exposed to the ameliorating influence of the winter's rain and frost. Plow across the furrows of last year, and subsoil, if possible. Land cannot be made too deep or rich for corn—it is a gross and exacting feeder. Clear up, also, some good new fresh land for the coming corn crop.

Wheat, rye, oats and barley may also be sown yet, but the sooner the better. Note what has been heretofore said about thorough preparation of the soil, and put your seed in right. Manure heavily, plow deep, and pulverize as fine as possible.

Fruit trees of all kinds should be set out during December and January, if possible. For directions, see our November number, page 346; and for the proper selection of trees, consult the different Southern nurserymen, whose advertisement will be found in our pages. One good Southern seedling fruit tree, worked on a native Southern stock, is worth half a dozen of dwarfish, slow-growing Northern trees. The time for importing fruit trees is past and gone forever—henceforth the current sets from the South northward—trees raised in Georgia being now sent to supply orders from North Carolina and Virginia. Hedges of all kinds should now be planted.

With the closing year, close up all accounts; open new books, and make a fresh and energetic start with the new era which is now dawning upon us.

The Garden.—Sow cabbage, turnips, parsnips, carrots, radishes, &c. Heul plenty of manure on your garden, plow it over deeply, or, better still, have it well spaded, burying under all enriching animel or vegetable matter. Transplant brocoli, cabbages, celery, "colards," &c. Dress and manure your asparagus beds, not forgetting to give them a liberal top dressing of salt before spring. Save old bones, soapsuds, dead leaves, decaying vegetables, &c., and make up in compost heaps for future use. Plant choice fruit trees, selecting varieties which are known to be adapted to the South. Our Southern nurserymen have paid especial attention to the propagation of choice native varieties, and will doubtless be able to supply all orders.

Strawberry beds, for spring bearing, may also still be planted, according to directions given last month.

The Nursery.—Propagate all the choicest and best varieties of Southern fruits, by grafting and from cuttings. The quince, the fig, the grape and the pomegranate graw readily by the latter method, when planted in moist, shady ground; and the apple, pear, plum, &c., may be successfully grafted on good, strong seeding stocks.

Robert in Autographs.—A correspondent, who is interested in autographs, sends us, by way of warning to our celebrities, an account of a curious case of autograph collecting, which occurred in France some little time ago, although only recently brought to light. An ingenious rogue, being rather badly off, as rogues often are, hit upon a mode of replenishing his exchequer by means of a novel description of begging letter. Feigning himself to be in the deepest mental distress, overwhelmed with an accumulation of agonising miseries, which had driven him to absolute despair, he professed himself to be utterly disgusted with life, and on the point of terminating his troubles by committing suicide. In this state of mind, he pathetically intreated the person addressed to inform him confidentially what he really thought of the right of the overburdened wretch to "shuffle off his mortal coil." Having crowded into his letter all the touching and miserable words at his command, he wrote copies of it to many of the most distinguished persons in Europe. Repartee replied laconically, "Sir, I do not advise you to kill yourself.—Death is a bullet which we must all encounter, sooner or later, in the battle of life; and it is our part to wait patiently." Others—good natured men—filled the four sides of their sheet of paper with high teachings of lofty philosophy, or with sound religious advice—replies with studied argument and amiable eloquence. The answer of Lacordaire was a master-piece of evangelical persuasion. He offered to confer with the poor despairing wretch, and entreated him, with the warmest sympathy, to dismiss forever from his mind all thoughts of his meditated crime. Such letters were the very things the impudent rascal wanted. As soon as received they were taken to a dealer in autographs, who purchased them at prices proportioned to the notoriety of the writer and length of his effusion—5, 10, 20, and even 50 francs a-piece. The trick was brought to light by a collector chancing to buy three of the answers. Finding them all upon one theme, his curiosity was excited; he called upon the dealer to inquire their history, and found that he had in his collection—all purchased within a few days from one person—five-and-forty similar letters. The whole were secured at the price of 600 francs. Amongst them are what the collectors call "admirable specimens" of Montalembert, Cardinal Antonelli, Fenimore Cooper, Xavier de Maistre, Sophie Gay, Kader, Armand Marrast, Alexander Humboldt, Tony Johannot, Tagliani, Henri Heine, Alfred de Vigny, Rachel, Scntag, Charles Dickens, Emile Souvestre, George Sand, Jules Lacroix, and many others.

The Great Central Sea in Tropical Africa.—In the Calwer Missionsblatt we find, (says the New York Tribune,) with some letters from Dr. Rebman, dated the 13th and 30th of April, a map which is communicated by the learned missionary. On this map between the Equator and 10° of south latitude, and between the 32d and 36th meridian, lies an immense sea without outlet, twice as large as the Black Sea, including the Sea of Azoff. It is designated Ukerewe, or Inner Sea, and the well known Njassa Sea appears as a small bay on the southeast. Dr. Rebman refers to a map in detail, which his companion, Dr. Erhardt, is bringing to Europe. This great discovery, the consequences of which can hardly be estimated, has rested hitherto on the testimony of the natives of both shores of the Inner Sea with whom the missionaries came in contact. Dr. A. Petermann remarks, in a letter in the Athenæum, that the African geographer, Mr. Cooley, argued long ago for the existence of a single great sea in the center of Equatorial Africa, and this opinion was prevented from becoming general by the obstinate opposition of the missionaries of Eastern Africa, who now confess their error.

The report that the President had preferred charges against Gen. Garland, U. S. A., the commander of the military department of New Mexico, for neglect of duty, is utterly unfounded.

A Cousin in Need.

On a dreary autumn day, more than a hundred years ago, a heavy travelling carriage was slowly lumbering along the muddy road from Potsdam to Berlin. Within it was one person only, who took no heed of the slowness of the traveling, but leaning back in a corner, was arranging a multiplicity of papers contained in a small portfolio, and making notes in a pocket-book. Since he was dressed in a plain dark military uniform, it was fair to suppose that this gentleman belonged to the Prussian army, but to which grade of it nobody could determine, as all token of rank had been avoided. A dreary November evening was closing in; and, though the rain had for a time ceased, yet dark masses of clouds flying through the sky gave warning that a "weeping darkness" was at hand. The road grew heavier and heavier, at least so it should have seemed to a foot traveler, who was ploughing his way through its mire; and so, doubtless, it did seem to the carriage horses, who at last floundered along so slowly that the pedestrian, whom they had overtaken, kept easily at the side of the coach, though at a respectful distance, certainly, after the first bucketful of mud that it splashed over him. The gentleman inside the coach, when he could see no longer, shut up his portfolio and returned the pocket-book to its place in the breast lining of his coat. He then roused himself to look out of the window, and judge, from the mud and darkness, how far it might be to Berlin. For the first time he perceived that a muddy young man was walking at a little distance from his horses. Though more than reasonably travel-stained, he trudged on as if his limbs were strong as his heart light.—Through the drizzle and the darkness, all that could be seen of his face was sensible and good-tempered. He had just finished a pipe as he attracted the traveler's attention, and was in the act of shaking out the ashes and replacing the pipe in a wallet slung over his back, when he heard himself addressed in the manner following, and in rather an authoritative tone of voice:

"Hollo! young man, where are you bound this stormy looking night?"

"That is more than I can tell you, not being at home in this part of the world. My wish is to reach Berlin; but if I find a resting place before I get there—to that I am bound, for I am a-weary."

"I should think you must have a two hours' walk before you," was the unsatisfactory remark that followed.

The young man made no reply, and after a short pause, the stranger said:

"If it please you to rest on the step of the carriage for a few minutes, you are welcome to do so, Herr What's-your-name."

"My name is Heinrich Meyer," replied the young man; "one of those who wisely never refuse the small benefit, because the larger one is not to be obtained." He thankfully accepted the not very clean place allotted him.

From inside the window the next question put to Heinrich was—

"What are you going to Berlin for?"

"To hunt for some cousins," was the reply.

"And pray who may they be?" asked the unknown.

"Well, to tell you the truth, I have not an idea who they are, or where to look for them. Indeed, it is more than doubtful whether I have so much as an acquaintance in Berlin, much less a relation."

The questioner—who should have been an American colonel—looked amused and astonished, as he suggested:

"Surely there must be some other motive for your going to Berlin; or, what could have put this idea into your head?"

"Why," replied Heinrich, "I have just become a clergyman, without the smallest chance of getting anything to do in my own neighborhood, I have no relative to help me, and not quite money enough to find me in necessaries."

"But," said the Prussian, "what on earth has this to do with cousins in Berlin?"

"Well, now, who knows? Many of my fellow-students have got good appointments, and whenever I asked them to let me know how it was done, the answer always was, 'A cousin gave it to me,' or, 'I got it through the interest of a cousin, who lives at Berlin.' Now, as I find none of these useful cousins live in the country, I must go without their help, or else hunt for them in Berlin."

This was all said in a comical, dry way, so that his listener could not refrain from laughing, but he made no comment. However, he pulled out a piece of paper, and began to write upon it. When he had finished, he turned round to Heinrich, saying that he observed he had been smoking, and that he felt inclined to do the same, but had forgotten to bring tinder with him. Could Herr Meyer oblige him with a light?

"Certainly, with great pleasure," was the prompt reply; and Heinrich, taking a tinder-box out of his wallet, immediately began to strike a light. Now, it has been said that the evening was damp—it was so damp that there seemed little enough prospect of the tinder's lighting; moreover, the wind blew the sparks out almost before they fell.

"Well, if your cousins are not more easily to be got at than your light is, I pity you, young sir!" was the sole remark to which the stranger condescended, as he watched Heinrich's laborious endeavors.

"'Nil desperandum is my motto," answered the young man; and when the words were scarcely uttered, the light had been struck. In his delight at succeeding, Heinrich jumped up on the carriage-step, and leaning through the window, thrust the tinder eagerly in the direction of the gentleman's face. "Hurra, sir, puff away!"

After a short pause, during which time the stranger had been puffing at his pipe, he removed it from his mouth, and addressed Heinrich in this way:

"I have been thinking over what you have been telling me; and perhaps, in a humble way, I might be able to assist you, and thus act the part of the cousin you are seeking. At all events, when you get to Berlin, take this note," handing him the slip of paper on which he had been writing; "take this note to Marshal Grumbkow, who is somewhat of a friend of mine, and who will, I think, be glad to oblige me. But mind! Do exactly as he bids you, and abide strictly by his advice. If he says he will help you, rely upon it he will keep his word; but he is rather eccentric, and the way he sets about doing a kindness may, perhaps, seem strange to you. And now," he continued, as the road is improved, 'I must hurry on the horses, and so bid you good evening, hoping you will prosper in your new career."

As Heinrich began to express his thanks for the good wishes of his unknown friend, the signal was given to increase the speed of the horses, and, before he had time to make any acknowledgments, he found himself alone again. The young man was no little astonished at what had taken place; and as he gazed on the slip of paper, could not help wondering whether any good would come of it. These were the only words written on it:

"Dear Marshal.—If you can forward the views of the bearer, Heinrich Meyer, you will oblige your friend. F——

"Let me know the result of your interview with him."

"Time will prove this, as it does all things," thought Heinrich, as he proceeded on his way. Somehow or other, the road appeared less wearisome, and he felt less tired and foot-sore since receiving the mysterious bit of paper. Hope was stronger within him than she had been for many a day; and on her wings he was carried pleasantly along, so that he reached Berlin by nightfall.

The noise and bustle of the capital was new to him; and he found some little difficulty in making his way to the gasthaus, to which he had been recommended by the pastor of his parish. The pastor having been once in Berlin, was considered, in his part of the world, an oracle in all matters connected with town-life.

The inn was, however, found at last; and after a frugal supper and a good night's rest, our friend arose, ready to hope and believe everything from the mysterious note, which he started forth to deliver immediately after breakfast.

Obliged to ask his way to Marshal Grumbkow's, he was amused and surprised at the astonishment depicted on the countenances of those, persons of whom he made the inquiry, as if they would say, "What business can you have with Marshal Grumbkow?"

The house was, however, at last gained; and having delivered his missive to a servant, Heinrich awaited the result in the hall. In a few minutes the servant returned, and requested him, in the most respectful manner, to follow him to the marshal's presence. Arrived there, he was received most courteously; and the Marshal made many inquiries as to his past life and future prospects; requested to be told the name of the village or town in which he had been last residing; the school in which he had been educated; at what inn he was living in Berlin, and so forth. But still, no allusion was made, either to the note or the writer of it. The interview lasted about twenty minutes, at the end of which time the Marshal dismissed him, desiring that he would call again on that day fortnight.

Heinrich employed the interval in visiting the lions of the town. There was a grand review of the troops on the king's birth-day, and, like a loyal subject, our friend went to have a reverend stare at his majesty, whom he had never seen. At one point of the review the king stopped almost opposite to Heinrich; and then was suggested to him, as the reader probably suspects, that, after all, he must have seen that face somewhere before. Was it the friend who hailed him in the muddy road? Impossible! How should a king be traveling at that time of day? At any rate it vexed him to think that he had not treated the gentleman in the coach in a very ceremonious manner. He had thrust tinder at his nose and cried to him "puff away!"

At last the time appointed for his second visit to the marshal arrived. His reception was again most favorable. The marshal begged him to be seated at the table at which he was writing, and proceeded at the same time to business. Unlocking a drawer and bringing forth a small bundle of papers, he asked Heinrich, as he drew them forth, one by one, if he knew in whose handwriting the various superscriptions were?

Heinrich answered that to the best of his belief, one was that of Herr Mindel, his former schoolmaster, another that of Doctor Von Hummer, the principal of such a college, and so on.

"Quite right," answered the marshal, "and perhaps it may not surprise you to hear that I have written to these different gentlemen to inquire your character, that I may know with whom I have to deal, and not be working in the dark." And as he said these words, the marshal fixed his eyes on Heinrich to see what effect they had; but the young man's countenance was unabashed—he evidently feared no evil report. "I feel bound," continued the marshal, "to tell you, that all they say of you is most favorable, and I am equally bound to believe and act upon their opinions. I have now to beg of you to follow me to a friend's house."

The marshal descended a private stair case leading to the court yard, crossing which, he passed through a gate in the wall into a narrow street, down which he conducted Heinrich, till they arrived at a private entrance to the palace. Heinrich began to get exceedingly nervous; the conviction that his idea was not a mere trick of the imagination became stronger and stronger. Could he have had his own wish, Heinrich Meyer would have been at that moment forty miles from Berlin. At last, as he found himself following Grumbkow, even into the palace, he could not refrain from exclaiming, "Indeed, Herr Marshal, there must be some mistake?"

No answer was vouchsafed, as the marshal continued to lead him through the various galleries and apartments, until at last they reached the door of one situated in the corner of a wing of the palace, where the marshal's knock was answered by a short 'come in.' As the door opened, one glance enflamed to convince Heinrich that his friend in the mud, and his king, were one and the same person. The poor cousin-seeker, greatly confused, knelt before Frederick-William, and began faltering out contrite apologies.

"Rise, young man," said the king, "you have not committed treason. How on earth could you guess who I was? I should not travel quietly if I meant to be everywhere recognized."

After re-assuring Heinrich, the king told him that he was prepared to do what he could to push him forward in the profession he had chosen. "But first," he said, "I must hear how you preach. On Sunday next, therefore, you shall preach before me; but, mind, I shall choose the text. You may retire."

By the time Heinrich Meyer reached his own room in the inn, he had fixed in his mind the fact that he was to preach to the king. The fact was only too clear, and all he could do was to set about his sermon as soon as he should have been furnished with the text. For the remainder of that day, he never stirred out; every step on the stair was to his ears that of the bearer of the text.

Nevertheless, evening and night passed, and the next day was far advanced, but still no text.

What was to be done? There were only two days before Sunday! He must go and consult the Marshal, but the latter could give him no further information; all he could do was to promise that if the king sent the text through him, it should be forwarded with the utmost possible dispatch.

That day end the next passed, and yet Heinrich heard nothing from either king or marshal. Only an official intimation had been sent, as was customary, that he had been selected as the preacher on the following Sunday at the chapel royal.

If it had not been that Heinrich knew himself to possess no mean powers of oratory, and that he could even extemporise, in case of emergency, he would have certainly run away from Berlin, and abjured his discovered cousin. As it was, he abided the course of events, and fortified himself by prayer and philosophy for the momentous hour. Sunday morning arrived, but no text.

Heinrich went to the church appointed, and was conducted to the seat always set apart for the preacher of the day. The king, with the royal family, occupied their accustomed places.

The service commenced, but no text! The prayers were ended, and whilst the organ peeled forth its solemn sounds, the preacher was led to the pulpit. The congregation were astonished, not only at his youthfulness, but at his being an utter stranger.

The pulpit steps were gained, and the thought flashed across Heinrich's mind that possibly he should find the text placed for him on the desk.

But, as he was on the point of mounting the etaire, an officer of the royal household delivered to him a folded piece of paper, saying, "His majesty sends you the text."

After having recited the preliminary prayer, the preacher opened the paper, and lo! it was blank—not a word was written on it. What was to be done? Heinrich deliberately examined the white sheet, and after a short pause, held it up before the congregation, saying, "His majesty has furnished the text for my sermon. But you may perceive that nothing whatever is upon this sheet of paper. 'Out of nothing God created the world.' I shall, therefore, take the Creation for the subject of my discourse this morning."

In accordance with this decision, the preacher went through the whole of the first chapter of Genesis in a masterly way, his style being forcible and clear, and his fluency of language remarkable. His audience, accustomed to the king's eccentricities, were far more astonished at the dexterity with which the preacher had extricated himself from the difficulty, than at the dilemma in which he had been placed. At last the sermon was ended, the congregation dismissed, and Heinrich found himself in the sacristy, receiving the congratulations of several dignitaries of the church, who all prophesied for him a brilliant future.

Heinrich ventured to express his amazement at the singular proceeding of the king, but was told that he could only have arrived recently from the provinces, if he did not know that such vagaries were quite common to his majesty.

In the midst of the conversation, a messenger arrived to conduct him to the royal presence. Being totally unaware what impression his sermon might have made upon the king, the cousin-seeker rather dreaded the approaching audience. But Heinrich had scarcely crossed the threshhold of the king's room, when his majesty jumped up, and thrust a roll of paper into the young man's hand, exclaiming, "Hurrah, sir! —puff away!—take this for the light you gave me!"

Then throwing himself back in a chair, he laughed heartily at the young preacher's look of surprise and confusion. The latter scarcely knew what reply to make, or what to do; but just as he had got as far as "Your majesty——," the king interrupted him, saying, "Make no fine speeches; go home quietly, and examine the contents of the paper. You came to Berlin to seek a cousin; you have found one, who, if you go on steadily, will not neglect you."

It is hardly necessary to add that the roll of paper contained a good appointment at the University of Berlin, and made Heinrich Meyer one of the royal preachers.

Why I Did'nt Marry Her.

I was sitting last summer smoking a cigar with my friend Tom Fairbanks. It was at Rockaway, and we were laughing in our own room, with our feet elevated on a window bench. Best way in the world of sitting, that. Wonder if ladies never try it when no one is near. Guess they do. We had smoked two cigars and commenced on a third. There's something strange in a cigar—it makes one cool in hot weather, and warm in cold weather. And there is a great deal in enjoying it with a crony. Tom was a fast friend of mine and a fine fellow—yes, a fine fellow, there was something to him. He was fond of society and a great favorite among the ladies, and now as I looked over the dancing waves and mused—cigars promote reflection, they're a reet moral institution, and that's why the clergy petrooize them, I suppose—as I smoked and mused I wondered why he had never been caught in any of the nets spread for him. There was a tall dark-eyed beauty who made a great impression on his heart. He had danced and flirted through a whole New York season with her, and from the way in which they both denied it, I had really believed them engaged. But Tom had suddenly drawn off, and left the young lady to point her toes and curl her ringlets for some one else. I had never known the reason for this, and with my mind full of these thoughts, I suddenly turned to Tom, and asked him how it was that he did'nt marry Flora Goodman.

Tom made no reply, but threw open his collar a little more—Tom and I had mounted Byron collars since we came to Rockaway. There seemed no getting anything out of him.

"Did the lady cut you, Tom?"

I thought this would rouse him. "No," was the emphatic response.

He then knocked off the ashes of the cigar, saying, "And so you want to know why I did'nt marry Miss Goodmen?"

"Yes; I thought papa had been spoken to, and the bridal dresses ordered."

"No; I never had anything to do with Mr. Goodman, further than to settle myself in his chair when he left the parlor clear for me in the evening. Flora generally sat on an ottoman—long-waisted people look better on ottomans, you know."

"Well, you did'nt tire of long waists, did you?—I thought you admired everything about Miss Flora."

"So I did, then; that's my reflection now.—And she was a very beautiful girl—a very fine one in many respects."

"And she had the go about her, too—something very stylish. What's the reason she did'nt suit you, Tom?"

"She did, in all but one thing."

"You were very long fledged that out, then."

"It was something I saw, that let me into the secret."

"Well, out with it, or I'll duck you the very next time we go bathing."

"You shall have the story. You may call me foolish to take notice of such a thing, but I'm a little peculiar sometimes. I waited on Miss Goodmun to a party. I had ordered a magnificent bouquet, and talked to my washerwoman an extra half-hour about the getting up of my linen. I had got my moustache trimmed and got a new pair of patent leathers. I really looked well that night. Though I believe there is no connection save the utilitarian between sensibility and scrubbing brushes, even the house-maid gazed at me with a sort of pathetic admiration, as I came down stairs. I never saw Flora more enchanting, and I glanced around Mr. Goodmee's richly furnished drawing-rooms, thinking it would be quite comfortable to walk in and hang up my hat there. I handed Miss Flora into the carriage as tenderly as possible. She kept me waiting a long time in the dressing-room, a thing I abominate, but I was enough of a lover then to be as patient as Job. I tucked the young lady under my arm, and we descended to the parlor. Joe, don't you wish the old fashion would come back when the gentleman handed the lady at arm's length, by the tips of her extended fingers. There was an opportunity then for some display of one's breeding up—a slow bolshed courtesy, and a finished bow."

"Well enough for you fellows that are so proud of your fingers," said I, but some of us are glad to get through the ceremony any way without displaying our awkward shoulders, and in-the-way arms, and if I might hint it, some ladies would not make it a very graceful operation."

"Oh! if it were the fashion it would be taught as a science—part of one's course at dancing school."

"You are yet to learn, Tom, that there are some limbs, male and female, that can never be made to work easy—the dancing master cannot impart grace where nature has not properly prepared the material."

"Well, at any rate, we made our entree in style that night. Flora's smile and bend were faultless, and I can make a pretty good bow. The evening passed—Flora's behavior to myself and others, hit the lady-like thing to a nicety. Her courtesies were shown so gracefully and so generally as to exhibit no marked preference, and yet there was an air, a light manner, visible only to myself, in her way of receiving my attentions, that was flattering in the extreme.

Supper came. Terrapine and champagne make one feel very complacent; but I was not quite so much exalted as not to notice everything Flora did. She was standing near an old gentleman, quite an aged man, over seventy I should think, with a kind, benevolent face. He seemed attracted by her beauty, and was talking to her with a pleased expression of interest that made one love as well as reverence the silver hairs upon his temples. But she seemed uneasy. She did not attend to what he was saying.

Suddenly she interrupted him in the middle of a sentence with "I beg your pardon, sir," and turning her back upon him, commenced conversation with a fellow who walks Broadway with his gloves half off to show his diamond rings. As she took his arm to promenade, she caught the old gentleman's look, surprised, hurt and aggrieved. But no expression of regret came over her countenance. Her head was carried as easily as before, and her glances as bright. It was enough for me. I never forgot Flora Goodman's rudeness to that old man. To say the least, there is nothing more ungraceful in a young lady than any lack of respect or attention to old age. It shows a great want of something, a radical defect somewhere. The jig was up for that night, and that, my dear fellow, is why I did not marry Flora Goodman."

A dispatch of the 21st, from Albany, N. Y., says:

The Supreme Court of the Seventh Judicial District, has just made a decision sustaining the constitutionality of the prohibitory liquor law, as far as brought before them. This decision overrules the decision of Judge Parker on the fifth section of the law, on both points.—Prosecutions under the law will be commenced in Rochester immediately.

A sea captain, relating the fact that he had a daughter who could eat a pound of cheese at a sitting, a wag thought it not at all strange that a skipper's child should be fond of that article.

DOCTOR HOOFLAND'S CELEBRATED GERMAN BITTERS,

Prepared by Dr. C. M. Jackson, Philadelphia, Pa., will effectually cure Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, Jaundice, Chronic or Nervous Debility, Diseases of the Kidneys, and all diseases arising from a disordered Liver or Stomach, such as Constipation, Inward Piles, Fullness, or Blood to the Head, Acidity of the Stomach, Nausea, Heartburn, Disgust for Food, Fullness, or Weight in the Stomach, Sour Eructations, Sinking or Fluttering at the Pit of the Stomach, Swimming of the Head, Hurried and Difficult Breathing, Fluttering at the Heart, Choaking or Suffocating Sensations when in a Lying Posture, Dimness of Vision, Dots or Webs before the Sight, Fever and Dull Pain in the Head, Deficiency of Perspiration, Yellowness of the Skin and Eyes, Pain in the Side, Back, Chest, Limbs, etc., Sudden Flushes of Heat Burning in the Flesh, Constant Imaginings of Evil, and great Depression of Spirits.

The Proprietor, in calling the attention of the Public to this preparation, does so with a feeling of the utmost confidence in its virtue and adaptation to the diseases for which it is recommended.

It is no new and untried article; but one that has stood the test of a ten years' trial before the American people, and its reputation and sale is unrivalled by any similar preparations extant. The testimony in its favor given by the most prominent and well-known Physicians and individuals in all parts of the country is immense. The following, from your own State, is respectfully submitted, referring any who may still doubt to my "Memorabilia," or Practical Receipt Book for Farmers and Families, to be had gratis of all the Agents for the "German Bitters."

New Principle! No Poison!

Rhodes' Fever and Ague Cure,

OR ANTIDOTE TO MALARIA,

FOR THE PREVENTION AND CURE OF

Fever and Ague, or Chill and Fever; Dumb Ague, and other Intermittent and Remittent Fevers; also of Bilious Fevers, accompanied by Typhoid Symptoms; Typhoid Fever, Yellow Fever, Ship and Jail Fever, General Debility, Night Sweats, and all other forms of disease

WHICH HAVE A COMMON ORIGIN IN

MALARIA OR MIASMA.

This subtle atmospheric poison, which at certain seasons is unavoidably inhaled at every breath, is the same in character wherever it exists—north, south, east or west—and will everywhere yield to this newly discovered ANTIDOTE, which neutralizes the poison, completely purifies the system, and thus entirely removes all the causes of disease.

The proprietor distinctly claims these extraordinary results from its use:

It will protect any resident or traveler, even in the most sickly or swampy localities, from any ague or bilious disease whatever, or any injury from constantly inhaling Malaria or Miasma.

It will instantly check the ague in persons who have suffered for any length of time, from ONE DAY TO TWENTY YEARS, so that they need never have ANOTHER CHILL, by continuing its use according to directions.

It will immediately relieve all the distressing results of bilious or ague diseases, such as general debility, night sweats, etc. The patient at once begins to recover appetite and strength, and continues until a permanent and radical cure is effected. And as a proof that it is

WORTHY OF PUBLIC CONFIDENCE,

Because of its

SINGULAR AND ENTIRE HARMLESSNESS.

The following certificates from one of the most celebrated chemists in the United States is attached to every bottle:

New York, June 11, 1855.

"I have made a chemical examination of Rhodes Fever and Ague Cure or Antidote to Malaria, and have tested it for Arsenic, Mercury, Quinine and Strychnine, but have not found a particle of either in it, nor have I found any substance in its composition that would prove injurious to the constitution.

JAMES R. CHILTON, M. D., Chemist.

This allows of its

by which all persons may thus be sure of entire freedom from the above named diseases, no matter how sickly the season or swampy the locality.

PROOFS OF EFFICACY are frequently published, and the confidence of the public is asked only in proportion to it; actual merits wherever introduced and used. These only are relied upon to prove its worth.

One or two bottles will answer for ordinary cases; some may require more. Directions printed in German, French and Spanish, accompany each bottle. Price One Dollar.

Ornamental needlework	5 00
Incidental expenses	1 00

Payment to be made at the close of each term. Board, including lodging, washing, lights and fuel, can be procured in the village and immediate neighborhood at ten dollars per month. Students will be received at any time during the session, and will be charged only from the time of their entrance to the end of the term. We would however respectfully urge all parents or guardians who design placing their daughters or wards in the institution, to do so at their earliest convenience, as it will tend much to the individual interest of the pupils, and the general prosperity of the school, facilitating, as it will, a proper arrangement of the various classes in their respective branches of study.

School books, stationery, &c., may be had at any of the various stores in the village at the usual rates.

Reports will be sent to parents and guardians quarterly, in which will be stated the health, improvement, social and moral deportment of their daughters or wards, with such other information as may be deemed important.

As the design of the Faculty is to render the instruction thorough, and lay the foundation of a substantial education, no young lady will be permitted to rank higher than her attainments will justly entitle her, nor to pass into another department in the course of instruction without having made sufficient proficiency in the preceding studies.

The government of the school is to be understood as that of authority—though parental and mild, yet decided and firm. The institution, in a religious point of view will be conducted without reference to sectarian influence.

Pupils will be required to attend church at least once on the Sabbath, and recite a Bible lesson on each Monday morning.

The scholastic year, embracing ten months, will be divided into two equal terms of five months, one immediately succeeding the other.

The first session commencing on the first Wednesday in October, and closing the last week in February; the second session commencing on the first Wednesday in March, and closing the last week in July. At which time the annual examination will be held, and the usual rewards and honors conferred. The vacation will embrace the months of August and September.

All applications for admission of pupils, &c., to be made to the president of the College.

COLEMAN'S

PREMIUM UNDULATORY CORN AND FLOURING

MILLS,

French Burr Stone, and each Burr in one solid block.

Seven different sizes of these mills are manufactured adapted to all the various motive powers used or known in milling. The burrs of the smallest size are fourteen inches in diameter, and the largest size are three feet, which last size will grind a greater quantity in any given time than any other mill known. These mills range in prices from one to five hundred dollars apiece, and will grind from four to seventy-five bushels to the hour, according to the diameter of burr, power applied and velocity given.

The mill that took the premium at the Crystal Palace, New York, was the smallest size (14 inches) and ground a bushel of corn into fine meal in four and a half minutes. Those desiring such mills can be supplied by addressing the patentee and proprietor,

CENTENARY COLLEGE OF LOUISIANA.

Centenary College of Louisiana is located in Jackson, La., 12 miles east of Bayou Sara. Its location is beautiful, retired and healthy. It has commodious buildings, a large library, a good chemical and philosophical apparatus, a well selected mineralogical and geological cabinet, and a full Board of Instruction.

As this section of the Southwest is but poorly provided with academies and preparatory schools, there is connected with the College a Preparatory Department, in which all necessary instruction may be received for entering College proper.

The College is now in a highly prosperous condition, and under the management of the present Board of Trustees and Faculty it promises permanency and extensive usefulness.

HELENA, ARK., Dec. 5, 1855.

TESTIMONY IN FAVOR OF CLASS MEETINGS.—The Episcopal Recorder recommends the institution of class or band meetings by the Protestant Episcopal Church. It says that from their "class meetings the great Methodist revival drew its strength, and had they been legitimated in the Church of England, she would have remained in fact, as well as in name, National." It mentions two or three instances in which meetings conducted like our class meetings were signally blessed and concludes with the remark: "And it is not too much to say, that by the adoption of such meetings in future, the Church would be taking the means of all others the most efficient for throwing off the spiritual sluggishness with which she is now oppressed."

Despisers of the class meeting, whether in or out of our Church, should consider this frank expression of opinion from a thoughtful and intelligent observer of Methodism. It is a "golden opinion."

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

Fellow-Citizens of the Senate and of the House of Representatives:

The constitution of the United States provides that Congress shall assemble annually on the first Monday of December, and it has been usual for the President to make no communication of a public character to the Senate and House of Representatives until advised of their readiness to receive it. I have deferred to this usage until the close of the first month of the session, but my convictions of duty will not permit me longer to postpone the discharge of the obligation enjoined by the constitution upon the President "to give to the Congress information of the state of the Union, and recommend to their consideration such measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient."

It is matter of congratulation that the Republic is tranquilly advancing in a career of prosperity and peace.

FOREIGN RELATIONS—CENTRAL AMERICA.

Whilst relations of amity continue to exist between the United States and all foreign powers, with some of them grave questions are depending which may require the consideration of Congress.

Of such questions, the most important is that which has arisen out of the negotiations with Great Britain in reference to Central America.

By the Convention concluded between the two Governments on the 19th of April, 1850, both parties covenanted that "neither will ever" "occupy, or fortify, or colonize, or assume or exercise any dominion over, Nicaragua, Costa Rica, the Mosquito Coast, or any part of Central America."

It was the undoubted understanding of the United States, in making this treaty, that all the present States of the former Republic of Central America, and the entire territory of each, would thenceforth enjoy complete independence; and that both contracting parties engaged equally, and to the same extent, for the present and for the future, that if either then had any claim of right in Central America, such claim, and all occupation or authority under it, were unreservedly relinquished by the stipulations of the convention; and that no dominion was thereafter to be exercised or assumed in any part of Central America by Great Britain or the United States.

This Government consented to restrictions in regard to a region of country wherein we had specific and peculiar interests, only upon the conviction that the like restrictions were in the same sense obligatory on Great Britain. But for this understanding of the force and effect of the convention, it would never have been concluded by us.

So clear was this understanding on the part of the United States, that, in correspondence contemporaneous with the ratification of the convention, it was distinctly expressed that the mutual covenants of non-occupation were not intended to apply to the British establishment at the Balize. This qualification is to be ascribed to the fact that, in virtue of successive treaties with previous sovereigns of the country, Great Britain had obtained a concession of the right to cut mahogany or dye-woods at the Balize, but with positive exclusion of all dominion or sovereignty; and thus it confirms the natural construction and understood import of the treaty as to all the rest of the region to which the stipulations applied.

It, however, became apparent, at an early day after entering upon the discharge of my present functions, that Great Britain still continued in the exercise or assertion of large authority in all that part of Central America commonly called the Mosquito Coast, and covering the entire length of the State of Nicaragua, and a part of Costa Rica; that she regarded the Balize as her absolute domain, and was gradually extending its limits at the expense of the State of Honduras; and that she had formerly colonized a similar considerable group, known as the Bay Islands, and belonging, of right, to that State.

All these acts or pretentions of Great Britain being contrary to the rights of the States of Central America, and to the manifest tenor of her stipulations with the United States, as understood by this Government, have been made the subject of negotiation through the American Minister in London. I transmit herewith the instructions to him on the subject, and the correspondence between him and the British Secretary for Foreign Affairs, by which you will perceive that the two Governments differ widely and irreconcileably as to the construction of the convention and its effect on their respective relations to Central America.

Great Britain so construes the convention as to maintain unchanged all her previous pretensions over the Mosquito Coast, and in different parts of Central America. These pretensions, as to the Mosquito Coast, are founded on the assumption of political relation between Great Britain and the remnant of a tribe of Indians on that coast, entered into at a time when the whole country was a colonial possession of Spain. It cannot be successfully controverted that, by the public law of Europe and America, no possible act of such Indians or their predecessors, could confer on Great Britain any political rights.

Great Britain does not allege the assent of Spain as the origin of her claims on the Mosquito Coast. She has, on the contrary, by repeated and successive treaties, renounced and relinquished all pretensions of her own, and recognized the full and sovereign rights of Spain in the most unequivocal terms. Yet these pretensions, so without foundation in the beginning, and thus repeatedly abjured, were, at a recent period, revived by Great Britain against the Central American States, the legitimate successors to all the ancient jurisdiction of Spain in that region. They were first applied only to a defined part of the coast of Nicaragua, afterwards to the whole of its Atlantic coast, and lastly to a part of the coast of Costa Rica; and they are now reasserted to this extent, notwithstanding engagements to the United States.

On the eastern coast of Nicaragua and Costa Rica the interference of Great Britain, though exerted at one time in the form of military occupation of the port of San Juan del Norte, then in peaceful possession of the appropriate authorities of the Central American States, is now presented by her as the rightful exercise of a protectorship over the Mosquito tribe of Indians.

But the establishment at the Balize, now reaching far beyond its treaty limits into the State of Honduras, and that of the Bay Islands, appertaining of right to the same State, are as distinctly colonial governments as those of Jamaica or Canada, and therefore contrary to the very letter as well as the spirit of the convention with the United States, as it was at the time of ratification, and now is understood by this Government.

The interpretation which the British Government, thus in assertion and act, persists in ascribing to the convention, entirely changes its character. While it holds us to all our obligations, it in a great measure releases Great Britain from those which constituted the consideration of this Government for entering into the convention. It is impossible, in my judgment, for the United States to acquiesce in such a construction of the respective relations of the two Governments to Central America.

To a renewed call upon Great Britain by this Government to abide by and carry into effect the stipulations of the convention, according to its obvious import, by withdrawing from the possession or colonization of portions of the Central American States of Honduras, Nicaragua and Costa Rica, the British Government has at length replied, affirming that the operation of the treaty is prospective only, and did not require Great Britain to abandon or contract any possessions held by her in Central America at the date of its conclusion.

This reply substitutes a partial issue, in the place of the general one presented by the United States. The British Government passes over the question of the rights of Great Britain, real or supposed, in Central America, and assumes that she had such rights at the date of the treaty, and that those rights comprehended the protectorship of the Mosquito Indians, the extended jurisdiction and limits of the Balize, and the colony of the Bay Islands, and thereupon proceeds, by implication, to infer, that if the stipulations of the treaty be merely future in effect, Great Britain may still continue to hold the contested portions of Central America. The United States cannot admit either the inference or the premises. We steadily deny that, at the date of the treaty, Great Britain had any possessions there, other than the limited and peculiar establishment at the Balize, and maintain that, if she had any, they were surrendered by the convention.

This Government, recognizing the obligations of the treaty, has of course desired to see it executed in good faith by both parties, and in the discussion, therefore, has not looked to rights which we might assert, independently of the treaty, in consideration of our geographical position and of other circumstances, which create for us relations to the Central American States different from those of any government of Europe.

The British Government, in its last communication, although well knowing the views of the United States, still declares that it sees no reason why a conciliatory spirit may not enable the two Governments to overcome all obstacles to a satisfactory adjustment of the subject.

Assured of the correctness of the construction of the treaty constantly adhered to by this Government, and resolved to insist on the rights of the United States, yet actuated also by the same desire which is avowed by the British Government, to remove all causes of serious misunderstanding between two nations associated by so many ties of interest and kindred, it has appeared to me proper not to consider an amicable solution of the controversy hopeless.

There is, however, reason to apprehend that, with Great Britain in the actual occupation of the disputed territories, and the treaty therefore practically null, so far as regards our rights, this international difficulty cannot remain long undetermined without involving in serious danger the friendly relations which it is the interest as well as the duty of both countries to cherish and preserve. It will afford me sincere gratification if future efforts shall result in the success, anticipated heretofore with more confidence than the aspect of the case permits me now to entertain.

RECRUITMENT.

One other subject of discussion between the United States and Great Britain has grown out of the attempt, which the exigencies of the war in which she is engaged with Russia has induced her to make, to draw recruits from the United States.

It is the traditional and settled policy of the United States to maintain impartial neutrality during the wars which from time to time occur among the powers of the world. Performing all the duties of neutrality towards the respective belligerent states, we may reasonably expect them not to interfere with our lawful enjoyment of its benefits.

Notwithstanding the existence of such hostilities, our citizens retain the individual right to continue all their accustomed pursuits, by land or sea, at home or abroad, subject only to such restrictions in this relation as the laws of war, the usage of nations or special treaties may impose; and it is our sovereign right that our territory and jurisdiction shall not be invaded by either of the belligerent parties for the transit of their armies, the operation of their fleets, the levy of troops for their service, the fitting out of troops by or against either, or any other act or incident of war. And these undeniable rights of neutrality, individual and national, the United States will under no circumstance surrender.

In pursuance of this policy, the laws of the United States do not forbid their citizens to sell to either of the belligerent powers articles contraband of war, or to take munitions of war or soldiers on board their private ships for transportation; and, although in so doing, the individual citizen exposes his property or person to some of the hazards of war, his acts do not involve any breach of national neutrality, nor of themselves implicate the Government. Thus, during the progress of the present war in Europe, our citizens have, without national responsibility therefor, sold gunpowder and arms to all buyers, regardless of the destination of those articles. Our merchantmen have been, and still continue to be, largely employed by Great Britain and by France in transporting troops, provisions and munitions of war to the principal seat of military operations, and in bringing home their sick and wounded soldiers. But such use of our mercantile marine is not interdicted either by the international or by our municipal law, and therefore does not compromit our neutral relations with Russia.

But our municipal law, in accordance with the law of nations, peremptorily forbids, not only foreigners, but our own citizens, to fit out within the limits of the United States a vessel to commit hostilities against any state with which the United States are at peace, or to increase the force of any foreign armed vessel intended for such hostilities against a friendly state.

Whatever concern may have been felt by either of the belligerent powers lest private armed cruisers or other vessels in the service of one might be fitted out in the ports of this country to depredate on the property of the other, all such fears have proved to be utterly groundless. Our citizens have been withheld from any such act or purpose by good faith and by respect for the law.

While the laws of the Union are thus peremptory in their prohibition of the equipment or armament of belligerent cruizers in our ports, they provide not less absolutely that no person shall, within the territory or jurisdiction of the United States, enlist or enter himself, or hire or retain another person to enlist or enter himself, or to go beyond the limits or jurisdiction of the United States with intent to be enlisted or entered into the service of any foreign state, either as a soldier, or as a marine or seaman on board of any vessel of war, letter of marque or privateer. And these enactments are also in strict conformity with the law of nations, which declares that no state has the right to raise troops for land or sea service in another state, without its consent; and that, whether forbidden by the municipal law or not, the very attempt to do it, without such consent, is an attack on the national sovereignty.

Such being the public rights and the municipal law of the United States, no solicitude on the subject was entertained by the Government, when, a year since, the British Parliament passed an act to provide for the enlistment of foreigners in the military service of Great Britain. Nothing on the face of the act, or in its public history, indicated that the British Government proposed to attempt recruitment in the United States; nor did it ever give intimation of such intention to this Government. It was a matter of surprise, therefore, to find, subsequently, that the engagement of persons within the United States to proceed to Halifax, in the British province of Nova Scotia, and there enlist in the service of Great Britain, was going on extensively, with little or no disguise. Ordinary legal steps were immediately taken to arrest and punish parties concerned, and so put an end to acts infringing the municipal law and derogatory to our sovereignty. Meanwhile, suitable representations on the subject were addressed to the British Government.

Thereupon it became known, by the admission of the British Government itself, that the attempt to draw recruits from this country originated with it, or at least had its approval and sanction; but it also appeared that the public agents engaged in it had "stringent instructions" not to violate the municipal law of the United States.

It is difficult to understand how it should have been supposed that troops could be raised here by Great Britain, without violation of the municipal law. The unmistakable object of the law was to prevent every such act, which, if performed, must be either in violation of the law, or in studied evasion of it; and, in either alternative, the act done would be alike injurious to the sovereignty of the United States.

In the meantime, the matter acquired additional importance, by the recruitments in the United States not being discontinued, and the disclosures of the fact that they were prosecuted upon a systematic plan devised by official authority; that recruiting rendezvous had been opened in our principal cities, and depots for the reception of recruits established on our frontier; and the whole business conducted under the supervision and by the regular cooperation of British officers, civil and military, some in the North American provinces, and some in the United States. The complicity of those officers in an undertaking, which could only be accomplished by defying our laws, throwing suspicion over our attitude of neutrality, and disregarding our territorial rights, is conclusively proved by the evidence elicited on the trial of such of their agents as have been apprehended and convicted. Some of the officers thus implicated are of high official position, and many of them beyond our jurisdiction, so that legal proceedings could not reach the source of the mischief.

These considerations, and the fact that the cause of complaint was not a mere casual occurrence, but a deliberate design, entered upon with full knowledge of our laws and national policy, and conducted by responsible public functionaries, impelled me to present the case to the British Government, in order to secure, not only a cessation of the wrong, but its reparation. The subject is still under discussion, the result of which will be communicated to you in due time.

I repeat the recommendation submitted to the last Congress, that provision be made for the appointment of a commissioner, in connection with Great Britain, to survey and establish the boundary line, which divides the Territory of Washington from the contiguous British possessions. By reason of the extent and importance of the country in dispute, there has been imminent danger of collision between the subjects of Great Britain and the citizens of the United States, including their respective authorities in that quarter. The prospect of a speedy arrangement has contributed hitherto to induce on both sides forbearance to assert by force what each claims as a right. Continuance of delay on the part of the two governments to act in the matter will increase the dangers and difficulties of the controversy.

Misunderstanding exists as to the extent, character and value of the possessory rights of the Hudson's Bay Company and the property of the Puget's Sound Agricultural Company, reserved in our treaty with Great Britain relative to the Territory of Oregon. I have reason to believe that a cession of the rights of both companies to the United States, which would be the readiest means of terminating all questions, can be obtained on reasonable terms; and, with a view to this end, I present the subject to the attention of Congress.

The colony of Newfoundland, having enacted the laws required by the treaty of the 5th of June, 1854, is now placed on the same footing in respect to commercial intercourse with the United States, as to the other British North American provinces.

The commission, which that treaty contemplated, for determining the rights of fishery in rivers and mouths of rivers on the coasts of the United States and the British North American provinces, has been organized and has commenced its labors: to complete which there is needed further appropriations for the service of another season.

SOUND DUES.

In pursuance of the authority, conferred by a resolution of the Senate of the United States, passed on the 3d of March last, notice was given to Denmark, on the 14th day of April, of the intention of this government to avail itself of the stipulation of the subsisting convention of friendship, commerce, and navigation between that Kingdom and the United States, whereby either party might, after ten years, terminate the same at the expiration of one year from the date of notice for that purpose.

The considerations, which led me to call the attention of Congress to that convention, and induced the Senate to adopt the resolution referred to, still continue in full force. The convention contains an article, which, although it does not directly engage the United States to submit to the imposition of tolls on the vessels and cargoes of Americans passing into or from the Baltic sea, during the continuance of the treaty, yet may, by possibility, be construed as implying such submission. The exaction of those tolls not being justified by any principle of international law, it becomes the right and the duty of the United States to relieve themselves from the implication of engagement on the subject, so as to be perfectly free to act in the premises in such way as their public interests and honor shall demand.

I remain of the opinion that the United States ought not to submit to the payment of the Sound Dues, not so much because of their amount, which is a secondary matter, but because it is in effect the recognition of the right of Denmark to treat one of the great maritime highways of nations as a close sea, and the navigation of it as a privilege for which tribute may be imposed upon those who have occasion to use it.

This government, on a former occasion not unlike the present, signalized its determination to maintain the freedom of the seas, and of the great natural channels of navigation. The Barbary States had, for a long time, coerced the payment of tribute from all nations, whose ships frequented the Mediterranean. To the last demand of such payment made by them, the United States, although suffering less by their depredations than many other nations, returned the explicit answer, that we preferred war to tribute, and thus opened the way to the relief of the commerce of the world from an ignominious tax, so long submitted to by the more powerful nations of Europe.

If the manner of payment of the Sound Dues differ from that of the tribute formerly conceded to the Barbary States, still their exaction by Denmark has no better foundation in right. Each was, in its origin, nothing but a tax on a common natural right, extorted by those, who were at that time able to obstruct the free and secure enjoyment of it, but who no longer possess that power.

Denmark, while resisting our assertion of the freedom of the Baltic Sound and Belts, has indicated a readiness to make some new arrangement on the subject, and has invited the governments interested, including the United States, to be represented in a convention to assemble for the purpose of receiving and considering a proposition, which she intends to submit, for the capitalization of the Sound Dues, and the distribution of the sum to be paid as commutation among the governments, according to the respective proportions of their maritime commerce to and from the Baltic. I have declined in behalf of the United States to accept this invitation, for the most cogent reasons. One is, that Denmark does not offer to submit to the convention the question of her right to levy the Sound Dues. A second is, that, if the convention were allowed to take cognizance of that particular question, still it would not be competent to deal with the great international principle involved which affects the right in other cases of navigation and commercial freedom, as well as that of access to the Baltic. Above all, by the express terms of the proposition it is contemplated, that the consideration of the Sound Dues shall be commingled with, and made subordinate to, a matter wholly extraneous, the balance of power among the governments of Europe.

While, however, rejecting this proposition, and insisting on the right of free transit into and from the Baltic, I have expressed to Denmark a willingness, on the part of the United States, to share liberally with other powers in compensating her for any advantages, which commerce shall hereafter derive from expenditures made by her for improvement and safety of the navigation of the Sound or Belts.

I lay before you, herewith, sundry documents on the subject, in which my views are more fully disclosed. Should no satisfactory arrangement be soon concluded, I shall again call your attention to the subject, with recommendation of such measures as may appear to be required in order to assert and secure the rights of the United States, so far as they are affected by the pretensions of Denmark.

FRANCE.

I announce with much gratification, that, since the adjournment of the last Congress, the question, then existing between this government and that of France, respecting the French consul at San Francisco, has been satisfactorily determined, and that the relations of the two governments continue to be of the most friendly nature.

GREECE.

A question, also, which has been pending for several years between the United States and the Kingdom of Greece, growing out of the sequestration, by public authorities of that country, of property belonging to the present American Consul at Athens, and which had been the subject of very earnest discussion, heretofore, has recently been settled to the satisfaction of the party interested and of both governments.

SPAIN.

With Spain, peaceful relations are still maintained, and some progress has been made in securing the redress of wrongs complained of by this government. Spain has not only disavowed and disapproved the conduct of the officers, who illegally seized and detained the steamer Black Warrior at Havana, but has also paid the sum claimed as indemnity for the loss thereby inflicted on citizens of the United States.

In consequence of a destructive hurricane, which visited Cuba in 1844, the supreme authority of that island issued a decree, permitting the importation, for the period of six months, of certain building material and provisions, free of duty, but revoked it when about half the period only had elapsed, to the injury of citizens of the United States, who had proceeded to act on the faith of that decree. The Spanish government refused indemnification to the parties aggrieved until recently, when it was assented to, payment being promised to be made so soon as the amount due can be ascertained.

Satisfaction claimed for the arrest and search of the steamer El Dorado has not yet been accorded, but there is reason to believe that it will be, and that case, with others, continues to be urged on the attention of the Spanish government. I do not abandon the hope of coinciding with Spain some general arrangement, which, if it do not wholly prevent the recurrence of difficulties in Cuba, will render them less frequent, and whenever they shall occur facilitate their more speedy settlement.

MEXICO.

The interposition of this government has been invoked by many of its citizens, on account of injuries done to their persons and property, for which the Mexican republic is responsible. The unhappy situation of that country, for some time past, has not allowed its government to give due consideration to claims of private reparation, and has appeared to call for and justify some forbearance in such matters on the part of this government. But, if the revolutionary movements, which have lately occurred in that republic, end in the organization of a stable government, urgent appeals to its justice will then be made, and, it may be hoped, with success, for the redress of all complaints of our citizens.

CENTRAL AMERICA.

In regard to the American republics, which, from their proximity and other considerations, have peculiar relations to this government, while it has been my constant aim strictly to observe all the obligations of political friendship and of good neighborhood, obstacles to this have arisen in some of them, from their own insufficient power to check lawless irruptions, which in effect throws most of the task on the United States. Thus it is that the distracted internal condition of the State of Nicaragua has made it incumbent on me to appeal to the good faith of our citizens to abstain from unlawful intervention in its affairs, and to adopt preventive measures to the same end, which, on a similar occasion, had the best result in reassuring the peace of the Mexican States of Sonora and Lower California.

TREATIES.

Since the last session of Congress a treaty of amity, commerce, and navigation, and for the surrender of fugitive criminals, with the kingdom of the Two Sicilies; a treaty of friendship, commerce, and navigation with Nicaragua; and a convention of commercial reciprocity with the Hawaiian kingdom, have been negotiated. The latter kingdom and the State of Nicaragua have also acceded to a declaration, recognizing as international rights the principles contained in the convention between the United States and Russia of the 22d of July, 1854. These treaties and conventions will be laid before the Senate for ratification.

TREASURY.

The statements made, in my last annual message, respecting the anticipated receipts and expenditures of the Treasury, have been substantially verified.

It appears from the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, that the receipts during the last fiscal year ending June 30, 1855, from all sources, were sixty-five million three thousand nine hundred and thirty dollars; and that the public expenditures for the same period, exclusive of payments on account of the public debt, amounted to fifty-six million three hundred and sixty-five thousand three hundred and ninety-three dollars. During the same period, the payments made in redemption of the public debt, including interest and premium, amounted to nine million eight hundred and forty-four thousand five hundred and twenty-eight dollars.

The balance in the Treasury at the beginning of the present fiscal year, July 1, 1855, was eighteen million nine hundred and thirty-one thousand nine hundred and seventy-six dollars; the receipts for the first quarter, and the estimated receipts for the remaining three-quarters, amount, together, to sixty-seven million nine hundred and eighteen thousand seven hundred and thirty-four dollars; thus affording in all, as the available resources of the current fiscal year, the sum of eighty-six million eight hundred and fifty-six thousand seven hundred and ten dollars.

If, to the actual expenditures of the first quarter of the current fiscal year be added the probable expenditures for the remaining three quarters, as estimated by the Secretary of the Treasury, the sum total will be seventy-one million two hundred and twenty-six thousand eight hundred and forty-six dollars, thereby leaving an estimated balance in the treasury on July 1, 1856, of fifteen million six hundred and twenty-three thousand eight hundred and sixty-three dollars and forty-one cents.

In the above estimated expenditures of the present fiscal year are included three million dollars to meet the last instalment of the ten millions provided for in the late treaty with Mexico, and seven million seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars appropriated on account of the debt due to Texas, which two sums make an aggregate amount of ten million seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars, and reduce the expenditures, actual or estimated, for ordinary objects of the year, to the sum of sixty-million four hundred and seventy-six thousand dollars.

The amount of the public debt, at the commencement of the present fiscal year, was forty

NEW ORLEANS:

SATURDAY, JANUARY 10, 1856.

Conference Documents.—Their publication will begin in earnest next week. The holidays have interfered with our work. Those of the Mississippi Conference have not yet come to hand.

To Teachers.—Those unemployed or indadequately employed, will find a superior offer in our advertising columns. A few generous and wealthy members of our Church in Tuscaloosa, Ala., have purchased an eligible building and presented it to the Church, to enable its members and the community to give their daughters a finished home education. Tuscaloosa, for its society, is unsurpassed in the State. See the advertisement.

Rev. L. Parker.—A petition from the ladies of the Methodist denomination of Shreveport has been sent to the Louisiana Conference at Bastrop, praying for the reappointment of this able young divine to the church at this place.

The location of Mr. Parker here would, we feel assured, be highly gratifying to the church-going citizens of Shreveport. We speak for ourself when we say that his return would be cordially welcomed. To the dignity and meekness befitting his benign vocation, he adds refinement and the social virtues. As an expounder of the holy doctrines of the Bible, he has no superior of his age. We have good reasons for believing that Mr. Parker would very willingly exchange New Orleans for Shreveport.—Caddo Gazette.

Bishop Kavanagh is the man to pay the utmost deference to a petition coming from such a quarter, and the editor of the Gazette would doubtless have signed it, had it been open to his manual, for the substantial reasons he hints, and in which we entirely agree with him. The Bishop has done the next best thing he could do—sent our Shreveport friends Rev. Dr. New, whom they will have only to know, to like. Mr. P. has opened his ministry auspiciously in our Central City Church, Carondelet street.

Where Is Your Post Office.—Preachers changing their circuits and stations will do themselves and this office a favor in letting us know where their post office address was, and where it is now. Do this early. As agents, they are entitled to the Advocate, and we wish it to begin the year with them. Those who have lately joined Conference are included in this notice.

Georgia Conference.—The editor of the S. C. Advocate attended this Conference, and reports: There was quite an addition to the ranks, not only in numbers, but in the sterling character and promising talent of the probationers received. They are David W. Calhoun, Benjamin F. Perry, Habersham J Adams, Wm. A. Edwards, Wm. H. Morton, Wallace B. Bailey, Abraham H. Ogletree, Wm. Rowland, Daniel E. Starr, John W. McGehee, Josiah Bullock, Wm. F. Cook, Peter M. Reyburn, Elijah M. Boland, Joseph B Key, Thos. H. Steward, John W. Turner, Ben F. Breedlove and Jas. V. M. Morris. Seventeen of the class of last year were continued, Chas. P. Cooper, Francis Boynton, Felix R. Forster and Peter M. Groover being discontinued at their own request. The union of laymen and preachers in the Steward's office, and the apportionment of the claims to the different districts, was now for the first time tried by the Georgia Conference, and the plan has given satisfaction.

Religion in the Camp.—A London correspondent of the Christian Advocate and Journal, in a recent letter, says that a Methodist church has been formed among the British troops quartered in and about Balaklava. The number of non-commissioned officers and soldiers who have formed themselves into a society is about 300, and a missionary is about to be sent to them by the Wesleyan Missionary Society. This band of worshippers sent for a supply of hymn books—most of their old supply having been lost at the battle of the Alma and Inkermann. The Liverpool Wesleyans having been the first who heard of this matter, sent forthwith a supply of the books wanted, and now the fact being known that such a band of Christians are on the battle field, all their wants will be supplied.

The balance of the Receipts will be published next week.

Day Breaking in China.—The streaks of the coming spiritual day dawning in China have appeared in the form of a continuing and delightful revival at Amoy, under the labors of the missionaries of the American Board. "For about one year and a half," writes the Rev. Mr. Doty, "each Friday has been devoted to more direct and personal contact with souls, as regards their individual experience." The interview has seldom occupied less than three hours. "Inquirers, usually to the number of twenty, thirty, forty, or more, have assembled on these occasions." He complains that the number of inquirers is greater than the missionaries can properly attend to. This is good news—a beam of

The Conferences.

The sessions of the Conferences, now over, presented upon the whole an encouraging prospect and retrospect. Some of them were signalised by the inauguration of important measures. The whole breadth of Church interests is advancing. Measures sent down to the annual Conferences by the General have taken shape.—As reporting separately members in full connection and probationers, the Sunday School and the Tract cause, and the Publishing House. Friends, funds, members and preachers are on the increase; discipline is not relaxed; harmony in labor and administration prevails. These are causes for gratitude and taking courage. No ecclesiastical body in the world, covering such extent of territory, including as many members, working by such various instruments and wielding the same influence, enjoys such PEACE as the M. E. Church, South. If she has enemies, they are without. Her aims are single. Her position before the world challenges the highest respect. This spreading prospect would lead even a Balaam, contemplating from a high standpoint, to say, "How goodly are thy tents, O, Jacob, and thy Tabernacles, O, Israel."

Our doctrines were never, we believe, more heartily and so extensively enunciated and received. Their effects upon the increase of Christ's Kingdom continue to approve them.

In matters of discipline and Church government there has never been less tinkering. Notwithstanding this conservatism, there is a wholesome spirit of progress.

Under a consciousness of strength and a pressure of necessity, we only fear Southern Methodists will attempt, in the way of denominational enterprises, not TOO MUCH, but TOO MANY.

Our position towards missions, especially home missions and missions to the "servile progeny of Ham," is being understood; as is shown by the Missionary Reports freshly emanating from the Conferences. There is less of poetry and romance, more of actuality, investing this subject. The Missionary Society anniversaries generally have gone beyond any former figures: Onachittas, $800; Louisiana, $845; Texas, $1400; East Texas, $1200; Georgia, $2004. The Conferences visited by Bishop Pierce have especially signalized themselves. Louisiana, by a revival of the itinerant spirit, has been nobly reinforced. These sugar and cotton lands ought to bear something besides rich people—even a holy and God-fearing.

The collections for widows and orphans and superannuates, are improving all round. Alabama gives 66 per cent., Georgia 72, Louisiana 69. Others may have done better whose minutes are not before us. Upon the old basis of claim all would have been paid.

South Carolina, Georgia and Alabama have started for $30,000 of missionary money this year. What are the rest resolved to do? The field is open, the cause good, the land full of plenty, and the competition noble.

News of the Day.

From "Christmas Eve to Twelfth Night" it is the habit of our citizens to be especially at leisure and affable. Rain, ice, mud, fog and an avalanche of produce upon the groaning wharves, have not been enough to repress their holiday mood. The vessel on which was shipped the equestrian statue of General Jackson did not arrive in time for the 8th of January celebration; nevertheless the fortieth era of his victory was celebrated. The opening of the neat and commodious asylum for Jewish widows and orphans, in the Fourth District, was one of the many events of that day. Last week was probated the will of Mr. Fink, by which about $400,000 are appropriated to building and endowing the "Fink Asylum" for Protestant widows and orphans. The good deed of the Hebrew Touro, stirred Fink, the German. Benevolence produces its own kind. Here is news, though not fresh, as in our absence Pro. Tem. overlooked it: The last will of Daniel Clark, charged to have been destroyed, the will of 1813, recognizing the legitimacy of Myra Clark Gaines, and creating her his universal legatee, has been ordered by the Court of Last Resort, in this State, to be admitted of probate and executed. The effect of this mandate will be to give Mrs. Gaines the very highest title to one of the largest estates in the United States—an estate of millions. The property involved in this litigation consists mostly of Sugar plantations, and some of the best city property. It is generally held by wealthy persons. The city of New Orleans has sold, with a full warranty, a large portion of this property, and will be liable therefor. So, a suit of twenty-five years approaches its close, compared to which, in incident, hopes deferred, romance is tame.

Our musical population are being entertained with concerts in Odd Fellows' Hall, given by Strakosch, the celebrated pianist, and Parodi, the more celebrated vocalist—the melody, evenness and compass of whose voice puts the Jenny Lind laurels in jeopardy.

For commercial items, so interesting to most of our patrons, we refer them to that department of last week and this, made up for their accommodation by a competent hand. City is healthy and overrun with visitors.

Those who expect directions from God must themselves exercise prayerful deliberation. God will guide the thoughtful, but not the inconsiderate.

How it Looks in French.

The "Archives du Méthodisme" is a monthly of the Christian Advocate family, published in Paris, and edited by our old correspondent, Rev. J. P. Cook. Under the head of "Melanges" and "Résumé des nouvelles" we frequently recognise a paragraph, but so done up that like a familiar old tune fashionably rendered, it is hardly recognisable. Surprising what an air a Parisian touch gives to a homespun thing—witness the following:

"Le Christian Advocate, de la Nouvelle-Orléans, donne d'intéressants détails sur les trois Eglises méthodistes de couleur, comme on les appelle dans cette ville. Elles se composent d'environ 1200 communients, presque tous esclaves. Les services ont lieu trois fois par dimanche, sous la direction d'un pasteur blanc, nommé par la Conférence de la Louisiane, et de trois prédicateurs locaux nègres. Ces derniers sont esclaves; l'un est charretier, le second cloutier et menuisier, le troisième commissionnaire pour une maison de gros. Leurs prédications sont très passables, dit le journal, malgré la couleur de leur peau (comme si cela y faisait quelque chose!) Récemment, les pauvres nègres membres de l'Eglise, voulant témoigner à ces prédicateurs locaux leur satisfaction chrétienne, se sont cotisés pour présenter à chacun d'eux un habillement complet, y compris le chapeau et les bottes, ce qui ne leur a pas coûté moins de 500 francs!"

LETTER FROM REV. J. S. BELTON.

The following letter, read before the Conference in Entaw, has been kindly furnished our readers by the Secretary.—Ed.

THE BISHOP AND MEMBERS OF THE ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

Dear Brethren—On my arrival here, in September last, I wrote to you, in hopes that my letter would reach Talledega before Conference closed; but as I have heard nothing from it, I supposed it did not. As I am very unwilling another Conference should pass without your hearing from me personally, I dispatch this early, that it may have sufficient time to reach you.

During the past year my attention has been turned principally to the acquisition of the local dialect of Shanghai. In this I have succeeded so far as to be able to converse intelligibly. I have not yet made any formal attempt at preaching, for the simple reason that neither I nor anyone else can preach in Chinese intelligibly in one year after beginning the study of the language. Some have tried to preach in five or six months, but no one has ever yet succeeded. Those who have been here many years say if a man can begin to be useful in two years, he is doing well. I hope before your next Conference meets I shall be preaching daily.

I have also paid some attention to the book language, in which I have made some little progress. As soon as I gain a little knowledge of the Shanghai colloqual, I shall turn my attention to the books more exclusively. As to the court dialect, I shall let it alone for the present, lest by carrying on two colloquial dialects together I should confound them, and acquire neither perfectly.

In the early part of the year I had a school near the West Gate in the city, which continued till the warm weather compelled me to dismiss it. It was a select male school of twenty scholars. More than half of these had committed to memory Bro. Taylor's catechism, the Lord's Prayer, the Creed, and the Ten Commandments. The expenses of this school I paid myself, as we have as yet received no funds for that purpose.

With a slight exception, my health has continued good. Having passed one summer here, I find my constitution unshaken, and I cherish a fond hope that the Lord will spare me to do a little for him before he calls me home to himself. Mrs Belton is now confined by an attack of diarrhœa, which has not yet been sufficiently severe as to appear dangerous; but a very slight attack is sufficient to render one uneasy, as it is one of the most common as well as most dangerous diseases of this climate. I think she is better, and our physician pronounces her convalescent.

I suppose it is hardly worth while for me to express how warmly my heart is attached to you all—how often I think of you, and with what earnest anxiety I hear of you in your several fields of labor. Bro. McTyeire is so good as to send me the Advocate, from which I gain much information as to what you are doing and how the Lord is dealing with you. If he is among you, I wish to return him my sincere thanks and gratitude for the pleasure which his kindness has afforded me.

With much anxiety, I find one after another of my class falling away, until it is now reduced to nearly one-half. I hope the remainder will continue in the field and die with their armor on. In your next year's collections, do not forget China; and if you can spare one of your good, sensible, Holy Ghost men, I would gladly welcome him as a dear brother and fellow-laborer in this part of the Lord's vineyard.

The Lord is prospering us somewhat. At our next meeting we propose receiving a member on trial—a woman, who professes to have found the Lord. We believe she is a good woman and a true Christian.

I want above all things in the world to tell the Chinese that Jesus died for them, and to meet you all in heaven. So mote it be. Accept, one and all, of my warmest love, and believe me ever your devoted and affectionate brother,

JAMES S. BELTON.

EAST MISSISSIPPI FRAGMENTS.

Yesterday was Chrisimas; and a gloomy, freezing, sleeting, snowing Christmas it was. Not much sign of life out of doors in our country village. To us it was, however, both a pleasant and a profitable time. Shut in alternately with our books and family, by warm fires, after days of absence and anxiety, the time and circumstances were peculiarly grateful and refreshing, both conspiring to call forth reflections and devout feelings. The consideration, elicited by the occasion, of the wonderful love of God in the gift and incarnation of His only begotten Son—of the condescension of the Saviour in the assumption of human nature, in His descent from the Throne of the Highest to the manger of Bethlehem, gave vigor to our faith and our devotion to His glorious cause; gave us more impressive views of the dignity and value of our common nature; inspired us with a more lively hope of ascending that ladder which Jacob saw, whose top reached unto Heaven; and made us feel more confident and anxious for that grand consummation of the Redeemer's mission, when the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our God and His Christ.

But we must not take up your time in sketching our private meditations; each thinking and earnest spirit had its own. It was very cold last night—terribly so to us Southerners. This morning, however, the sun rose in cloudless splendor, and his rays being reflected by an incrustation of coarse snow, an inch or a half thick, spreading over hill and dale and house-top, gave us a day of dazzling brightness, though extremely cold. Such days are rare in East Mississippi.

Thus far we had proceeded yesterday, when our chilled system and benumbed fingers drove us from our task and necessitated its postponement until to-day, the 27th. We must now resume the subject of our former letter, viz., the "Fragments of East Mississippi."

Well, during our wanderings through Lauderdale county, in 1854, we became acquainted with an excellent Christian family by the name of Mc——, where we always found a hearty welcome and good and true friends. God bless them! They were the first settlers in that portion of country. While yet the country was almost one unbroken wilderness, this adventurous pioneer family, consisting of the husband and wife and several small children, lived here for two or three years, as in exile from human society. The frightful scream of the panther, the cry of the wild cat, and the voracious howling of wolves resounded through the thick woods and swamps by day and night. There was no human habitation nearer than eleven miles; no roads excepting an occasional Indian trail. Upon one occasion, soon after their settlement here, and before they had put up any houses, excepting a smoke-house, the cry of the panther was heard near by where the wife with her little ones was staying. The husband was off in the field; the danger was imminent; no time was to be lost. A few minutes and that portentous cry would be succeeded by the sudden seizure of some one of the defenceless group. With admirable presence of mind the wife hastens to lock up her dear babes in the smoke-house, and bravely periling her own life, ran to the field to tell her husband. The danger passed without injury to any one, and in the meanwhile the hungry animal also made its escape. And, strange to say, it was here amid these wild scenes that this good woman obtained the pearl of great price. No faithful pastor to warn her of her guilt and danger, or invite her to the Saviour; no Christian example to look to or Christian friend to encourage or comfort in her deep and painful struggle; no great revival to awaken attention, and move the heart; here, alone in the wilderness, (for her husband was wicked,) with none to look to but God and her Bible, she fasted and prayed, and was most gloriously converted. She had heard of a Methodist quarterly meeting to come off at a certain time some distance from where they lived, and knew enough of their customs to be apprised of their quarterly fast upon the Fridays before such occasions. She could not be with them in person, but she could join them in fasting and prayer; and she did join them truly. The husband being away from the house, she had a good opportunity, (and well she improved it) of reading her Bible and of groaning before the mercy seat. Her conversation was joyful, rapturous and exclusive of every doubt. Mr. Mc——, however, had been educated a staid old Scotch Presbyterian, and heartily despised these ecstacies of religion, and regarded all those who professed a knowledge of sins forgiven as the very worst of hypocrites. Hence you may imagine his surprise and consternation, his mingled pity, contempt and indignation, when upon coming home in the evening he found his wife happy in the love of God and shouting His high praises. Poor fellow, he knew not what to do—thought his wife was deranged. She attempts to explain; but all to no purpose; it must be a crazy fit. The thing passed over; the woman seemed nowise worsted—had as much sense as ever. But she remained steadfast in her religion. Methodist preachers finally come along, and the wife joined the Church. The husband, too, gladly received the man of God, for such a thing as preaching in that community had never been heard of before. In process of time his prejudices were removed, and he, too, was converted, and makes one of the most exemplary and useful members of the Methodist Church to be found in that country.

In this wilderness, before they had any neighbors, one of their children was born; and here one also died, being about two years old; and in solitude and loneliness they buried him with their own hands. A striking incident in regard to this child was told to me. After he was taken sick, a day or two before he died, he looked up into his father's face and said, "I am going to die, pa; I am going home, home." He continued, "I am going home, home," time and again. This circumstance made a powerful impression upon the semi-infidel Scotchman, and was greatly conducive to his conversion. Several years afterwards another one of their sons died, when he was about twelve years old. He joined the Church while S. B. Newman was on that circuit, greatly to the surprise of the family. Newman was a remarkably zealous and faithful man, and had taken much care in instructing and exhorting this little boy, and gloriously were his labors rewarded, as well as those of the pious parents. This little fellow remained in the Church some time before he professed to be converted, but seemed to be still laboring for the rest of the people of God. At last, like his mother, he was richly and powerfully blessed at home. He had lain down one night, after the duties and toils of the day, to rest himself, while the family was getting ready for prayers; the time for prayers had come; the father had the old family Bible open; the mother speaks to her boy to get up; he had been thinking, praying, and giving himself to God, and lo! a shout of praise and glory to God breaks the stillness of that solemn hour. The youthful seeker has found the Saviour, and is exulting in His love. Death came soon, and removed this lamb of the fold to the bosom of the heavenly shepherd. His end was peace. Sleep, tender lamb, till the last great trump shall wake you from the tomb with salvation in the sound.

M. P.

East Mississippi, Dec. 27, 1855.

P. S.—The writer had the above accounts, from the lips of the family to which they relate, and assures all whom it may concern that these facts or statements may be relied on as entirely correct.

M. P.

North British Review.—This able Quarterly, (L. Scott's American edition,) for November, has been received. The following are the contents:

Education for the Metropolis of Manufactures; The Practical works of Sam'l Butler; Reign of the House of Orleans in France; Books for Ireland; Home Reformation and Christian Union; Cabinets and Statesmen; Fielding and Thackeray; Mozley on Augustianism; The Paris Exhibition and the Patent laws; The Significance of the Struggle.

Central Africa.—The Rev. T. J. Bowen, a Baptist missionary, has visited three immense cities in Central Africa, named Illorin, Ishoh, and Awwaw. The inhabitants are considerably civilized, the climate positively healthy, and the demand for missionary instruction earnest and general. This, too, is good news. It shows that Africa is not entirely sealed up to Europeans, but that the white man can live and preach Christ among its densest population. Is not Ethiopia stretching out its hands unto God? "Now is the time for missions!" exclaims Mr. Bowen. True, but where are the missionaries?

There is Hope for Spain.—The Journal of Missions states that there are nearly four thousand persons in one Spanish town who have abandoned Popery, and who are studying the Scriptures to find the way of life. In other towns many persons, weary of papacy, are longing for a better faith. Is there indeed hope for Spain? So these facts indicate. Spain would become a glorious nation could it be thoroughly evangelized. The plowshare of Romanism has torn up much that was noble and heroic in Spanish character, but the good seed of the Gospel and the husbandry of a spiritual Protestantism can restore it to more than its former beauty and nobleness.

Novel Method of Stealing Sermons.—The London Record affirms as a matter of fact, that two Episcopal clergyman of the diocese of Exeter regularly employed a reporter to take down the sermons of a popular dissenting minister, and to transmit them for their use, for the edification of their own people. This trick was as ingenious as it was lazy. But how utterly unworthy of them, both as men and ministers! They ought to be marched out of the ministry to the tune of the "Rogue's march," and kept out too, until they obtain a baptism of grace sufficient to stimulate them to the composition of their own discourse. We have no respect for a clerical idler or trickster. The profession is too holy to be profaned by such as they.

Burning of the Charleston.—The Memphis Bulletin gives the following particulars of the recent burning of the Memphis and Cincinnati packet Charleston, at Golconda, on the Ohio river, on Friday night last. It appears that the boat caught fire in the machinery room, while slowly ascending the river with a wood boat in tow. The flames spread with great rapidity, and the passengers and crew were barely saved, although the boat was immediately put into shore. The boat, cargo and personal effects of the crew and passengers were totally lost, and it was thought a colored boy belonging in the cabin and a deck hand, were lost. The boat was owned by Mr. C. Bugher, commander, his brother, and Mr. Doen, of Cincinnati. Her value was about $40,000, and she was insured partially in Cincinnati offices, and probably in others. She had on board about nine hundred bales of cotton, a portion of which was insured in Memphis offices. The origin of the fire was not ascertained.

Canton Railroad.—The Jackson (Miss.) Flag of the Union states that the recent heavy rains have stopped the cars on the new road. Great difficulty was anticipated on account of the rotten, marly nature of the earth on part of the line. In some of the cuts, it further states, the mud is six or eight feet deep on the track, and some of the embankments have caved away. The same obstacles were encountered on the Vicksburg and Jackson Railroad, and were not overcome for years; until the earth found somewhat a level by caving, the cut having a width of 80 to 100 feet. Even then the track had to be boxed in at many places. The same means will have to be adopted on the Canton road, or the interruption will be of frequent occurrence. The Flag says all the fine enlverts have stood the severe test of the unusual floods. The stage coaches have resumed their regular trips to Canton.

Later from Havana.

The U. S. mail steamship Cahawba, J. D. Bulloch, commander, arrived on Saturday evening from New York via Havana. On the passage from New York, the Cahawba encountered steady gales from South-west, and did not leave Havana until the afternoon of the 2d instant. New Year's day was celebrated in Havana with unusual festivities and gaiety; the soldiers of the garrison in particular were liberally entertained, and in the evening had their barracks brilliantly illuminated.

The Captain General held court on New Year's day, and dined with General Count —— ——, a Russian nobleman, who is on a visit to Cuba with his family, and has been well received.

In business, there is nothing new. Freights dull; sugar languishing under late news. Molasses at 8 rials per 5½ gallons on account of the large European contracts. The health of Havana and of the sugar districts, is good. On the 3d instant, in latitude 26 deg. 03 min., longitude 85 deg. 25 min., passed ship John Knox, of Liverpool, and herk Moses Gimbls, of Belfast.

From Texas.—By the steamship Mexico, which arrived on Saturday last, we have our files of papers from Galveston and interior Texas. They contain nothing of importance. A correspondent of the Galveston News, writing from Austin, says:

On the night of the 22d a norther came up, which caused the thermometer to fall 60 degrees in twenty hours; the ponds were frozen and the skating nice. Large fires and tight houses were very popular. Up to this time it is cold and clear.

On the 24th the Supreme Court made a decision, which, it is said, will go far to destroy eleven league titles. The point is this, as I understand it. That where A. has located a bona fide land claim on an eleven league survey, and there is no record evidence of the existence of the eleven leagues on the records of the county, A will be considered an innocent third party, the law presuming that he had a right to consider the land vacant unless the county records showed the contrary. This is the gist of the point though I cannot quote the language.

Mr. Brown, member of the State Legislature from Galveston, writes to the Civilian that the Loan Bill, which was engrossed in the Senate by a vote of 25 to 7, loans to railroad companies $8,000 per mile, after the first twenty-five miles are built.

We have conversed with several gentlemen, says the Civilian, who are interested in the roads that have been prosecuted to the greatest extent, and they all seem to think that such a loan, secured by a first mortgage on the road, will operate injuriously to the success of the company. But we must postpone an opinion till we can see the bill itself.

Loss of the Steamer Mediator.—The officers of the steamer Wm. Noble, which arrived yesterday evening, have furnished us with the following particulars concerning the burning of the steamer Mediator.

The Mediator, Captain Williamson, was from Cincinnati for this port, and on the night of the 5th inst., at 9 o'clock, when in Diamond Bend, fifteen miles below Vicksburg, took fire in the steerage, and in two minutes the boat was enveloped in flames. The boat was immediately run ashore, but went adrift and lodged on a bar a short distance below, and together with her entire cargo was totally consumed.

The following persons were rescued by the Wm. Noble and brought to the city: Mrs. Passmore, Joseph Jones, barkeeper; Louisa York, chambermaid; James Johnson, pilot; T. Jones, deck-hand; all of whom were more or less injured, but none seriously.

The following is the cargo of the Mediator, but we were unable to obtain the names of the consignees: 38 head of cattle, 4 horses, 2500 sacks wheat, 1800 barrels pork, 371 tierces lard, 400 barrels whisky, 50 hogsheads bacon, 1150 empty barrels, 145 barrels beans, 20 do. eggs, 300 do. potatoes, 200 do. flour, 100 do. apples.

The boat's papers and the personal effects of all on board were lost, but fortunately there was no loss of life.

Prospect of an Indian War in Florida.—The Tampa Bay Peninsular, of the 23d ult., has the following official information from Fort Myers:

Mort Myers, (Fla.) Dec. 23, 1855.—An exploring party under command of Lieut. George L. Hartsuff, 2d Artillery, consisting of one sergeant, one corporal and seven privates, were suddenly attacked by a party of Seminole Indians, at daylight on the 20th inst., about six teen miles S. E. from Fort Simon Drum—that party being about forty miles S. E. from Fort Myers.

The party left Fort Myers on the morning of the 7th inst., and up to the time of attack were engaged in making a re-examination of that portion of the Big Cypress Swamp examined by the troops last winter. Three men of the command arrived at Fort Myers on the night of the 21st; it is supposed that Lieut. Hartsuff and the remainder of his party have been killed.

Most of the public animals with the expedition, some eighteen in number, were also shot down. Lieut. Hartsuff, when last seen, had one arm broken, and is supposed to have been wounded in his side. Private Hann, of Company G., 2d Artillery, who escaped, brought the above information to Fort Myers. Hann was wounded in the abdomen, not seriously it is thought; he left another of the party, private Baker, also wounded, about eighteen miles from Fort Myers.

Baker gave out at that point, and could come no further. The Indians making the attack were twenty-five or thirty in number. Two companies of the 2d Artillery were to leave Fort Myers on the morning of the 22d inst., in search of Lieut. Hartsuff and the missing members of his party.

Other movements of the troops in the direction of the battle-ground, were ordered immediately on the receipt of the information concerning the attack.

Interesting to Ship Owners.—The Honorable Peleg Sprague, Judge of the United States District Court for the District of Massachusetts, in a charge to the jury recently, took occasion to condemn at some length and with great emphasis, the custom of permitting seamen in the merchant service, to wear sheath-knives. The court remarked that the custom was almost entirely confined to the merchant service of the United States, and represented the danger, especially in the present state and quality of crews, of permitting a number of men—in many ships a large number—to be constantly in contact with a few officers, in most cases wholly unprotected by weapons, while each man of the crew carries a highly dangerous weapon, and that in a position and manner ready for instant use.

In times when the sailor was permitted to wear only the jack-knife, with its lanyard about his neck, or rove through his belt, in case of attempt at an assault the officer always had warning and time to repel the assault with a knife while the seaman was getting it ready. Now, in an instant, a most deadly blow may be dealt without the chance of warding it off. The old jack-knife was sufficiently large and convenient for all ordinary purposes, and its use occasioned far more safety, both to officers and men. Sheath-knives are not permitted in our navy, because there is danger of their being dropped from aloft and wounding those on deck. Such an accident the lanyard of the jack-knife prevents. Again, the point of the sheath-knife frequently cuts its way through the sheath and is liable to injure the wearer.

The court remarked at such length, and with such earnestness, upon this present practice, as certainly to merit the attention of ship-owners and masters.

Holmes, the Poet, on Abolitionism.—Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes, the New England poet, pronounced a lecture recently before the New England Society, in New York, in which he gave great offence to abolitionism and proved himself a sensible man. We extract the following from the report in the Times:

Ultra-abolitionism found no favor. It is very much the same with the black and white races as it is with the red and white. The white must rule. It is a law of nature. The lecturer, a sketch made by Deity in red crayon as the outline of a more perfect manhood, is hunted down and extinguished. The black, according to the Doctor's theory, is and must continue inferior to the white. The thing that remains to be done, is to assimilate the whites of the North and South in feeling, so that civil discord may not finally end in open war. New England stands on an isthmus, and busy hands are digging away the earth that still connects it with the main land. Let us not, we beg, see New England poisoned through and through with a hatred that hates the sinner with the sin. Let her not run off into a corner with her negative virtues, till her blood becomes too thin and cold for a true patriotism.

"Enlarging upon this point of the subject," says the Times; "the Doctor was hissed pretty loudly, but the cheers overpowered the hisses, and the oration was finished with every manifestation of delight upon the part of his audience."

The Russians in Japan—Escape of Admiral Poutiatine.—The letters from Germany respecting the condition of Russia, continue to indicate that it is the southern part of the empire where the effects of the war are most severely felt, since in that region there is no neighboring and friendly State to neutralize the blockade and encourage a prolonged resistance. The exchange at St. Petersburg is said to have improved to 36d, either from the activity of the overland trade or the rumors of a loan from Prussia.

Politically there was nothing new.

Admiral Pouiatine, who had just returned from the Eastern Seas, had received a high decoration and a large pension for the success of his mission to the Emperor of Japan, and the skill with which he eluded the British and French cruisers, who had captured none of his vessels. It appears that he was on board the Danish merchant brig lately seized by the Allies, but contrived to escape in a boat hastily constructed under his own directions. In this, it is alleged, he was subsequently, during darkness, in close contact with her Majesty's ship Bittern and other cruisers, a light having actually been shown on one occasion to warn him of his proximity. Being sufficiently near to hear the word of command given on board, he had his papers ballasted ready to be sunk, but ultimately succeeded in escaping, although several shots were fired after him. [London Times, Dec. 14.

We find the following paragraphs in a dispatch of the 28th, from Washington:

Lord Palmerston has written private letters to distinguished gentlemen now in Washington, stating that the British Government anticipates the dismissal of Mr. Crampton by this Government.

It is reported that certain documents have been received by Government from Texas, which may lead to the arrest and detention of Parker H. French, by process of law.

Official information has been received from the Spanish authorities relative to the capture of the bark Amelia, on the coast of Hayti, on suspicion of designing a filibustering descent upon Cuba. The documents contain evidence to prove the charge, and Spain expects this Government to punish those implicated.

A claim of Lieutenant General Scott, for seven thousand dollars, which had been pending for several years, has recently been allowed him by the Administration.

Instructions similar to those given to Mr. McKeon were sent to Mr. McCay, the United States District Attorney at New Orleans, to-wit: that measures should be taken to detect and defeat all preparations for the invasion of Nicaragua, and the reception of those instructions has been acknowledged by letters received here yesterday.

Walker's Prospects.—We find the following paragraph in the Washington Star of the 31st ult. We do not consider the statements and inferences of the Star very reliable in this particular:

The last two arrivals from San Juan Del Norte, brought letters to Washington which render it certain that Walker's situation there is exceedingly critical, notwithstanding the glowing accounts of the prosperity of his affairs, written by his followers for publication in the United States. He cannot trust a single native beyond the range of the rifles of his men. His military chest does not contain a dollar. The twelve thousand dollars which Parker H. French brought to this country was every dollar that Walker has been able to clutch in Nicaragua, and he was forced to part with it, as without succor of men and material from the United States, starvation, if not immolation, stared his marauding band in the face, and it (succor) was only to be obtained here through the application of hard dollars. All Walker's hopes turned upon getting off French's New York and New Orleans filibustering expeditions in safety. The government having summarily stopped them, it will not be long ere Walker and his band go the way of Kinney and his. At one time, it will be recollected, it was represented in the newspapers to be in almost as triumphant a position in Nicaragua, as Walker and his are now said to be.

The New York Herald of the 31st ult. publishes a "Journal of Seven Months' Proceedings on board the Exploring Ship Resolute." It is very interesting. The Herald accounts for the possession of it in the following manner:

In our visit to the Resolute, on Friday last, we accidentally picked up the master's log, containing a complete history of all that occurred on board the vessel from the 1st of September, 1853, to the 1st of April, 1854. Well knowing that it could not fail to be a matter of interest to the public at large, both in this country and in Europe, our reporter made an exact copy of all the interesting items there given.

A Washington letter-writer gives an interesting account of the penitentiary in the District of Columbia. Among sundry curious facts which he notes, is a remark of the warden, that nine-tenths of the prisoners who are committed to the institution are found to have their arms marked with India ink. From this the writer infers that, if the same observation held good of convicts in other prisons, it might be well, before employing strangers, to examine their arms.

Some important papers relative to the confirmation of the last treaty with Mexico, obtained from the Mexican archives, are said to be in the possession of persons in Washington, by which it appears that a Mexican agent received some $10,000 for secret service, and that a similar amount was divided among other individuals, some of whom are now clamorous for the republication by the United States of the three million drafts.

Gen. Scott has had a magnificent uniform coat made in New York. It is of dark blue cloth, lined throughout with black and yellow silk. The collar and wristbands are embroidered with heavy gold thread, representing a running vine, all of which was done with a needle, and cost $50. The collar and leppels are after the style worn by Arch-Duke Charles, in which it can be used as a standing or rolling collar, and the leppels are thrown partly over the arms. Heavy gilt buttons adorn the coat, but are not made to button. A rich gold cord is attached, between the collar and lappel, by which the coat can be fastened in front. The epaulettes that the General had during the Mexican war will adorn the coat. It will cost $180 when finished.

New Advertisements.

☞ We have frequently heard the celebrated German Bitters, sold by Dr. C. M. Jackson, 120 Arch street, Philadelphia, spoken of in terms of the highest commendation, and we believe that it is one of the best medicines advertised for the complaints for which it is recommended. They are pleasant to the taste, and can be taken under any circumstances by the most delicate stomach. The press, far and wide, have united in commending the invaluable remedy for dyspepsia, debility, etc.; and such are the healing effects of this panacea, that we hope it may be introduced in every family where dyspepsia has or is likely to have a victim. See advertisement. jan 1m

Grand Circle of Social Circles.

The attention of the friends of Temperance is directed to this Order, as being better calculated to advance the "cause of all mankind" than any Order yet instituted for the furtherance of the principles of Temperance. 15,000 Acres of Land for Sale.

The lands are situated in Morehouse parish, Louisiana, and in what is known as the "Bastrop Grant." They are of the richest quality of alluvial soil, unsurpassed in fertility by any lands in the South, and fully capable of producing from one and a half to two bales, or fifty to sixty bushels of corn to the acre. They lie near the Ouachita and Bœuf rivers—good navigable streams—and likewise in convenient distance of the route of the Vicksburg, Shreveport and Texas Railroad, now in course of construction and hastening to a rapid completion. A portion of these lands are highly improved and in a flourishing state of cultivation; the country in which they lie is very healthy, the water is excellent and abundant, and altogether they will be found to possess greater advantages and present inducements to purchasers than any lands now offered for sale in the Southern country. They will be sold in quantities to suit purchasers, and on the most favorable terms. Titles perfect.

For further particulars inquire of the undersigned either personally at his residence in Prairie Jefferson, Morehouse parish, or by letter addressed to Point Jefferson, Morehouse parish, Louisiana.

A Teacher Wanted.

The Rev. Thos. B. Russel having withdrawn from the charge of the Tuskaloosa Methodist Female High School, a vacancy has been thereby created, of which it is the object of this advertisement to give notice and to invite applications for the vacant situation. It is proper to state that a very large and commodious building, situate in a beautiful part of the city of Tuskaloosa, together with the necessary apparatus for a school of this description, will be furnished gratis. That the school since its establishment, about two years since, has averaged about 75 pupils, which it is believed could be raised to at least 100. That Tuskaloosa is one of the healthiest and most desirable places as a private residence in the South-west, and being the site of the State University, offers superior advantages as a place for the education of both males and females. The employment of the subordinate teacher will be left to the principal. It will be expected that persons applying unknown to the trustees will furnish some testimonial of their ability.

The house is calculated for boarders, and it is expected that the principal will take as boarders such as may apply. The present term of the school will end on the 15th of February next, at which time it is proposed to open the succeeding session.

Those desirous of taking this school will address J. J. Ormond, President of the Board of Trustees, Tuskaloosa, who will give any further information which may be desired.

POWERS' STATUE OF WASHINGTON.

DATON ROUGE, 4th January, 1856.

Messrs. Editors: As everything connected with George Washington is always pleasing to an American heart—and as the sons of Louisiana are more particularly interested in this noble work, they will be pleased to learn that the statue of Washington stands now without a blemish, on its pedestal in the temple erected for its reception.

The statue was raised on its pedestal in the box that contained it, as Mr. Powers had directed, the screws and bolts were removed, the boxing then stripped off, and it stood covered with one large sack. Gov. Hebert and a few friends were present on this occasion, and no one can describe our admiration when the sack was removed and the statue burst into existence. 'Tis hard to say, whether the associations connected with the figure of Washington, or the triumph of the artist, most won our praise. I felt proud of the land of my birth, for I here saw that the classic chisel of American art had been ringing triumphantly among the rocks of the Old World—that from the hand of Powers had sprung an immortal labor—that truth and fancy had been rivals in a strife for excellence, until "The rock assumed the noblest form of life."

After looking for sometime at the statue, it was conceded by all present to be the best piece of sculpture they had ever seen; and be it remembered, that Gov. Hebert had visited Europe and met with some show of title usurp on this occasion the throne of judgment. It is impossible to conceive a more exquisite piece of marble—indeed, Mr. Powers states in his letter to the Governor, that he has never seen a finer piece of such a size.

Mr. Powers has represented Washington in the citizen's costume of his time, and such as deaked his manly limbs in the days when his triumphs were eaded, his honors achieved and his glories commenced their immortality. This costume has been strictly copied from the one preserved in the Smithsonian Institute, and has, by the sculptor, with admirable skill, been adapted to the rules of art. The figure stands 6 feet 3 inches in height. One arm rests upon the fasces or emblem of strength; the other contains a scroll which may be supposed to be his farewell address; the right leg supports the figure; the attitude is one of perfect and serene repose; the expression of the face is nobly contemplative, and it is beyond our power to look upon it without a pious reverence—indeed, you feel disposed to stand uncovered in its presence, and even if you knelt it would be with the consciousness that here heaven would forgive the worship of a graven image and forget idolatry's a crime.

Rapid and numberless must be the reflections that hurry through the mind of every American, as he stands within the temple, and contemplates the present grandeur of our land. Memory will carry him back to the day when that beautiful queen of Castile and of Arragon cast her jewels to the daring navigator, and enabled him to discover a land whereon Washington has fixed the mightiest and only true Republic of the world. Step by step he will trace her growing greatness, until he finds her where she is, with a name and station among the nations of the earth, unrivalled, unequalled, and unconquered.

I have heard it repeatedly objected to, that this statue should have been in any way enclosed—but I have never yet seen one who maintained the objection after he had seen the statue. There are statues made for exposure—but this is not one of them. The Leocoon—the Venus—the Muses of Michael Angelo, and all the higher wrought works of art, are not exposed to the weather; and in further proof of what was intended by the artist, I will here copy an extract of his letter, which should put this issue at rest. Mr. Powers writes:

"There is a small leather sack in the case with some dust in it to remove soils on the marble from handling or otherwise, but it will not remove grease—the hands ought not to touch the naked marble, and there should be a railing round the statue to keep people at a sufficient distance, or some will handle it and in time ruin the surface. The light for the statue should be considerably above its head, and to cast the necessary shadow for expression you should see the shade of the nose upon the upper lip. Semiplane is expressionless without a proper light. I am anxious, of course, that a work on which I have taken so much pains should be as gratifying as possible to those who have done me so much honor."

It will readily be seen that this could not be accomplished in the open air, and he who looks on the spotless purity of the marble would hardly wish it blemished by dust and showers that would ever fall upon its surface. All I ask of those who have the desire to see it exposed is only to make once upon the marble, and they will say—this is no head for pelting hail to batter, no face for winds and storms to blast—and it would be sacrilege in him who places the finest form that ever mortal chisel wrought to moulder in the eye of heaven by that drop in time which wears away the stone. MARK.

AN IMPORTANT CASE.—The case of Mr. Booth, the Abolition editor, who was convicted in the United States District Court of aiding in the escape of a fugitive slave, and was subsequently liberated by a State court on a habeas corpus, will be brought this winter before the Supreme Court of the United States for adjudication. The decision will be looked for with great anxiety, as it will establish authoritatively many important points, now at issue, between the General Government and the State judiciaries.

A dispatch of the 27th ult., from Hartford, Ct., says:

The storm of rain and sleet on Tuesday night was very severe in this vicinity. The telegraph wires were so loaded down with ice that over fifty sections are broken between here and Springfield, and we learn that matters are still worse between the latter city and Boston.—Large trees on the route, some of them with trunks two feet in diameter, were also broken down by the weight of ice accumulating on their branches. It will probably take two or three days to put the telegraph lines in thorough repair again.

Magnetic Telegraph.

FOUR DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

ARRIVAL OF THE STEAMSHIP ARAGO.

CONFIRMATION OF THE FALL OF KARS.

TREATY BETWEEN SWEDEN AND THE ALLIES.

PEACE NEGOTIATIONS.

NON-ARRIVAL OF THE CANADA,

Great Snow Storm North.

NAVIGATION OF THE OHIO SUSPENDED.

FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC MARKETS.

BY THE NATIONAL AND SOUTHERN LINES.

NEW YORK, January 7.—The Havre steamer Arago arrived at this port yesterday, bringing dates from Liverpool and London to December 20, being four days later than the advices of the Pacific.

Liverpool Cotton Market.

The market was quiet, without any change in prices since the departure of the Pacific. Sales of three days 18,000 bales, of which speculators took 2500. Orleans Fair 8½d; Middling 5¾d.

Breadstuffs.

Flour and Wheat are both reported dull, but without any quotable change in prices

Corn opened buoyantly, but closed heavy.

Provisions

Are generally unchanged, and the market is quiet and inactive.

Money Market.

Consols are quoted at 88¾. The Bank of France has raised its rates of discount.

From the Seat of War.

The capture of Kars by the Russians is confirmed. Sixteen thousand Turkish troops with Gen. Williams and nine Pacha's were taken prisoners, and one hundred and twenty field pieces and other munitions of war were captured.

Gen. Liddutorf has established his head-quarters at Kutais, and intends shortly to assume offensive operations against Anakala and the redoubt of Kuli. His army is abundantly supplied with provisions by the Armenians. The defile between Kars and Erzroum are held by the Russians.

Every thing is quiet in the Crimea. Great preparations are continued to be made for the augmenting of the British fleet, in anticipation of the Spring campaign in the Baltic.

Sweden and the Allies.

The London Daily News affirms that Sweden has ratified a treaty with England and France. The Allied powers guarantee the territorial integrity of Sweden, and the latter engages to not alienate any part of her territory to Russia.

Peace Negotiations.

Count Esterhazy left Vienna for St. Petersburg, on the 10th, with important dispatches containing propositions for a treaty of peace. He is instructed to return immediately in case the Czar refuses to accept them; and it is stated that in event of refusal Austria will withdraw her Ambassador from St. Petersburg.

The difficulty between the French and English Governments relative to the conditions on which peace should be made, has been arranged through the efforts of the King of Sardinia.

The Prussian Ambassador reached St. Petersburg on the 9th.

The Royal mail steamship Canada, from Liverpool for Boston, with Liverpool dates to the 22d, and now on her seventeenth day out, has not yet arrived.

Massachusetts Politics.

BOSTON, January 4.—Gov. Gardner, in his message, which was delivered before the Legislature to-day, recommends the repeal of the "Personal Liberty Bill."

Washington Affairs.

WASHINGTON, January 4.—In the Senate the financial report was received, and ten thousand copies ordered to be printed. Senator Hale attacked the ground taken by the President in his message, relative to Kansas affairs.—Adjourned until Monday.

HOUSE.—A resolution was offered, making Boyce speaker, and was amended by substituting, severally, Banks and Pennington—the resolution tabled by 66 majority—four ineffectual ballots were had. Boyce made a personal explanation, saying that he saw with regret that a great party had been formed in the North, the principles of which were hostile to the institutions of the South, and if it should obtain possession of the government, disunion must follow, which God forbid. Mr. Allison replied, saying that there was no disposition on the part of the party referred to, to make war against slavery in the Southern States, but that said party was opposed to the extension of slavery.

Snow Storm.

NEW YORK, January 7.—We have just had one of the greatest snow storms known for several years. The vessels in every direction are completely blocked up, and the telegraph lines are down.

The Ohio Frozen.

LOUISVILLE, January 7.—Navigation is now entirely suspended above the Falls of the Ohio on account of the ice. The weather is very cold.

Markets.

NEW YORK, January 7.—Flour is a trifle lower, and the quotations are $8 25 for Ohio and $9 for Southern. Lard in kegs, 16¾c, a slight improvement. Whisky 36c.

CINCINNATI, January 7.—Flour is quoted at $7. Wheat is dull at $1 40 to $1 45. Oats 31c; Corn 38c.

The South Carolina papers have accounts of heavy and long continued rains. The Charleston Courier, of the 2d inst., says: "The rivers, we learn, are everywhere high, but as yet we have heard of no damages."

A YANKEE BOAST.—A correspondent furnishes the following report of a conversation which recently took place in a store in Boston. He says:

An innocent and pure-minded Jonathan, in a warm argument with a John Bull, on our National institutions, was endeavoring to floor his antagonist, who had sneeringly remarked that "fortunately Americans could'nt go further westward than the Pacific shore." Yankee searched his pregnant brain for an instant, and triumphantly replied, "Why, good gracious, they're already levelling the Rocky Mountains and carting the dirt out West; I had a letter last week from my cousin, who is living two hundred miles west of the Pacific shore—on made land."

A QUEER STORY.—Is it True?—Judge Marshall and Judge Washington were on their way to Mount Vernon, attended by a servant who had the charge of a large portmanteau containing their clothes. At their last stopping place, there happened to be a Scotch pedlar, with a pack of goods which resembled their portmanteau. The roads were very dusty, and a little before reaching the General's, they, thinking it hardly respectful to present themselves as they were, stopped in a neighboring wood to change their clothes. The colored man got down his portmanteau, and just as they had prepared themselves for their new garments, out flew some fancy soap and various other articles belonging to the pedlar, whose goods had been brought on instead of their own. They were so much struck by the consternation of their servant, and the ludicrousness of their own position, being there naked, that they burst into loud and repeated shouts of laughter. Washington, who happened to be out upon his grounds near by, heard the noise and came to see what might be the occasion of it, when, finding his friends in that strange plight, he was so overcome with laughter, that he actually rolled upon the ground.

A CAPTAIN OF CAPTAINS.—Capt. Jesse Attwood, who died at Orrington about twenty-three years since, aged 84, the Bangor Journal says, was the father of six sons, four of whom were sea-captains, and one of whom is the father of six sons, all sea-captains. He was the father and grandfather of twenty-eight captains, twenty-six of whom were sea-captains, and sixteen of whom bear the name of Attwood. All the sea-captains now living, reside in Orrington and Hampden; one militia captain resides in Kenduskeag. Captain Attwood was master of a vessel which went from Boston to Halifax for the first exchange of prisoners in the Revolutionary war.

WIND AND SEA.—By Bayard Taylor.

The Sea is a jovial comrade,
He laughs wherever he goes;
His merriment shines in the dimpling lines
That wrinkle his hale repose;
He lays him down at the feet of the Sun,
And shakes all over with glee,
And the broad-backed billows fall faint on the shore,
In the mirth of the mighty Sea!

But the wind is sad and restless,
And cursed with an inward pain;
You may bark as you will, by valley or hill,
But you hear him still complain
He wails on the barren mountains,
And shrieks on the wintry sea
He sobs in the cedar, and moans in the pine,
And shudders all over the aspen tree.

Welcome are both their voices,
And know not which is best—
The laughter that slips from the Ocean's lips,
Or the comfortless wind's unrest.
There's a song in all rejoicing,
A joy in the heart of pain,
And the wind that saddens, the sea that gladdens,
Are singing the self-same strain!

COSMOPOLITAN EXCHANGE.

We have several times, within the past week, devoted a portion of our leisure to the sights and scenes of the Cosmopolitan Exchange, or World's Market, of our city. Other cities and other countries may boast their World's Fairs and Exhibitions, which are gotten up in most instances at a great expense, merely for the empty name of the greatness attaching to them; but here at home we have an unheralded Exhibition, which, though it be different in its nature, is still by far a greater thing to see and to consider than anything that human capital or pomposity has ever yet achieved in any other part of the world—Our readers here will of course understand us as alluding to "the levee," but as the word fails to convey to the distant reader any sort of an idea of its real meaning, we prefer substituting for it something more appropriate and comprehensive, Our levee is a Cosmopolitan Exchange, or a World's Market, in the fullest sense of either term.

It is difficult, in fact impossible, at any time to depict properly this distinguishing feature of our city. Just now we may say that it is still more so; for there has never been, since the foundation of the city, such a glut of commerce in its lap as at the present time. Our purpose, therefore, is only to sketch our Great Exchange in a loose, rambling way, for the edification of those of our readers who seldom or never visit the city.

Our Great Exchange is a belt of land about six miles in length, and of a breadth varying from a hundred yards to a quarter of a mile. It is serpentine, just like a letter S, the widest part being in the middle, the same as in the S. The front side of the S is the broad face of the city—a seemingly endless range of brick warehouses, their windows staring upon the river like so many unwinking eyes, and their lines of business proclaimed in stunning signs, readable a mile off. The rear side of the S is the mighty and muddy Father of Waters, whirling and gurgling beneath a chain of water craft so dense as to exclude him from all sight of the shore, and the shore from all sight of him. The upper and lower semi-circles of the S bristle with the masts of ships and other sail vessels, from every country of the civilized world and from some countries that are uncivilized, being moored in tiers from two to six deep! Across each tier of vessels a plank highway is erected for the use of all, with branch planks leading down to the deck of each vessel.

The middle, or thick part of the S, bristles with the chimneys of steamboats—the queenlike leviathans and clippers of the Mississippi and Ohio, wedged in tightly with the smaller craft of the tributary streams, and the little tranty things that usher through our Southern bayous—their bows setting straight into shore, and forming a gigantic saw of more than sixty teeth, and more than a mile in length. At the upper end of the saw is a clump of steamships, with an indentation, or basin, jammed tight with up-country flatboats; at the lower end, another clump of steamships, and a clump of Gulf schooners, with the chinks filled up by oyster smacks from Barrataria and elsewhere. There are four gaps at regular intervals in the S, for the different lines of ferry-boats that connect with the settlements on the right bank; and in several places there are nuisance wharves or platforms, upon which the filth of the city is carted during the night and early in the morning, and emptied into old scows which, when full, are towed out into the river and emptied by means of traps in their bottoms.

Now for the S itself, or the filling of it. Throughout its whole length, cotton is the principal thing that meets, and almost wearies the eye. In the shipping section it is scattered about in comparatively small quantities, and in small bales, having gone through the cotton presses. In the steamboat section, it verily looks as if all creation had been raising cotton. Whole acres of cotton, piled to various altitudes, in some places over twenty feet, loom upon the vision; here ranged systematically into regular Sebastopols, with their Malakoffs and Redans, and there recklessly heaped into Alps—all surmounted by little particolored consignee flags fluttering in the breeze.

But, tremendous as is the accumulation of cotton, cotton is not all, by any means. The tobacco hogsheads and flour barrels, pork barrels and whisky, barrels of the West, constitute a mighty army; and the army is divided in its might by the sugar hogsheads and molasses barrels of our own region. But then the grain sacks of the West give that section the preponderance in bulk. The articles we have named constitute the great bulk of the chaos of produce that gorges the steamboat landings; but there are a thousand other articles of produce or manufacture, from the thousands of farms and settlements in the Great Valley, that we could not begin to enumerate, even if our readers would have the patience to read the list. Three million dollars would not purchase the produce to be taken in at one sweep of the vision.

Much of this produce has been damaged by the recent rains. In ordinary seasons, there are either enough drays to house the goods, or enough tarpaulins to protect them from the rain. But latterly, under the unprecedented outgushing of the Western cornucopia, both drays and tarpaulins have fallen immensely short of the demand. There are thousands of drays that work from early dawn till night, hauling away produce; but no sooner is a gap made on the platform, than another mountain of cotton is seen coming down the river, with the chimneys of a steamboat sticking out of it, or some lazy-looking steamer wearing a double-breasted vest of grain-sacks or lard-kegs, and a panach so heavy that she looks as if ready to take a dive—and in another hour the gap is no more.

The tarpaulins are mostly engaged all the time, by either the commission houses or the regular steamers, at fifty cents a day for each, whether there is freight to come or not, or whether it rains or shines. Each tarpaulin is about the size of an ordinary carpet. During the recent rains, the tarpaulins, of course, have been monopolized, either by those who own them, or at the standing rates, by those who always have them engaged. On Wednesday, there was such an amount of dry produce on the levee, when the rain came up, that offers of five dollars a-piece for tarpaulins went begging. As the tarpaulins could not be had at any price, property was damaged to the extent of thousands of dollars.

We have so far touched only upon the inanimate or quiescent scenery of the levee. To describe the bustle that prevails at all times, would require a daguerreotype apparatus rather than a pen. We will allow about fifty persons to each of the seventy steamboats and steamships, and the two hundred and forty sail vessels that are moored along the levee; making a river population of over fifteen thousand souls; all of whom are on the levee at some time or other during the day. Then there are several thousand draymen; several thousand longshoremen, or laborers, negroes and Irish, who work in gangs, loading and unloading vessels by the job; every man having a cotton hook in his belt; and indefinite thousands of travelers, immigrants, merchants, clerks, weighers, inspectors, policemen, seamen, peddlers, loafers, pickpockets and scavengers—a human menagerie, with specimens from every clime under the sun—those of Ireland Germany and Africa, furnishing the larger proportion and each individual pursues his particular line of duty, regardless of the multitudes around him. We may thus, safely estimate that our Cosmopolitan Exchange is daily attended by at least fifty thousand people.

million five hundred and eighty-three thousand six hundred and thirty-one dollars, and, deducting this being made of subsequent payments, the whole public debt of the federal government remaining at this time is less than forty million dollars.

The remnant of certain other government stocks, amounting to two hundred and forty-three thousand dollars, referred to in my last message as outstanding, has since been paid.

I am fully persuaded that it would be difficult to devise a system superior to that, by which the fiscal business of the government is now conducted. Notwithstanding the great number of public agents of collection and disbursement, it is believed that the checks and guards provided, including the requirement of monthly returns, render it scarcely possible for any considerable fraud on the part of these agents, or neglect involving hazard of serious public loss, to escape detection. I renew, however, the recommendation heretofore made by me, of the enactment of a law declaring it felony on the part of public officers to insert false entries in their books of record or account, or to make false returns, and also requiring them on the termination of their service to deliver to their successors all books, records, and other objects of a public nature in their custody.

Derived as our public revenue is, in chief part, from duties on imports, its magnitude affords gratifying evidence of the prosperity, not only of our commerce, but of the other great interests upon which that depends.

The principle that all moneys not required for the current expenses of the government should remain for active employment in the hands of the people, and the conspicuous fact that the annual revenue from all sources exceeds, by many millions of dollars, the amount needed for a prudent and economical administration of public affairs, cannot fail to suggest the propriety of an early revision and reduction of the tariff of duties on imports. It is now so generally conceded that the purposes of revenue alone can justify the imposition of duties on imports, that, in readjusting the list, most tables and schedules, which may require essential modification, a departure from the principles of the present tariff is not anticipated.

ARMY.

The army, during the past year, has been actively employed in defending the Indian frontier, the state of the service permitting but few and small garrisons in our permanent fortifications. The additional regiments authorized by the last session of Congress, have been recruited and organized, and a large portion of the troops have already been sent to the field. All the duties, which devolve on the military establishment, have been satisfactorily performed, and the dangers and privations incident to the character of the service required of our troops have furnished additional evidence of their courage, zeal, and capacity to meet any requisition which their country may make upon them. For the details of the military operations, the distribution of the troops, and additional provisions required for the military service, I refer to the report of the Secretary of War and the accompanying documents.

Experience, gathered from events which have transpired since my last annual message, has but served to confirm the opinion then expressed of the propriety of making provision, by a retired list, for disabled officers, and for indemnification to the officers retained on the list for active duty. All the reasons which existed, when those measures were recommended on former occasions, continue without modification, except so far as circumstances have given to some of them additional force.

The recommendations heretofore made for a partial reorganization of the army, are also renewed. The thorough elementary education given to those officers who commence their service with the grade of cadet, together with a considerable interval, to perform the duties of a very arm of the service; but to give to the highest efficiency to artillery requires the practice and special study of many years; and it is not, therefore, believed to be advisable to maintain, in time of peace, a larger force of that arm than can be usually employed in the duties appertaining to the service of field and siege artillery. The duties of the staff in all its various branches belong to the movements of troops, and the efficiency of an army in the field would materially depend upon the ability with which those duties were discharged. It is not, as in the case of the artillery, a speciality, but requires, also, an intimate knowledge of the duties of an officer of the line, and it is not doubted that, to complete the education of an officer for either the line or the general staff, it is desirable that he shall have served in both. With this view, it was recommended on a former occasion that the duties of the staff should be mainly performed by details from the line; and, with conviction of the advantages which would result from such change, it is again presented for the consideration of Congress.

NAVY.

The report of the Secretary of the Navy herewith submitted, exhibits in full the naval operations of the past year, together with the present condition of the service, and it makes suggestions of further legislation, to which your attention is invited.

The construction of the six steam frigates, for which appropriations were made by the last Congress, has proceeded in the most satisfactory manner, and with such expedition as to warrant the belief that they will be ready for service nearly in the ensuing spring. Important as this addition to our naval force is, it still remains inadequate to the contingent exigencies of the protection of the extensive sea coast and vast commercial interests of the United States. In view of this fact, and of the acknowledged wisdom of the policy of a gradual and systematic increase of the navy, an appropriation is recommended for the construction of six steam sloops-of-war.

In regard to the steps taken in execution of the act of Congress to promote the efficiency of the navy, it is unnecessary for me to say more than to express entire concurrence in the observations on that subject presented by the Secretary in his report.

POST OFFICE.

It will be perceived, by the report of the Postmaster General, that the gross expenditures of the department for the last fiscal year were nine million nine hundred and sixty-eight thousand three hundred and forty-two dollars, and the gross receipts seven million three hundred and forty-two thousand one hundred and thirty-six dollars, making an excess of expenditure over receipts of two million six hundred and twenty-six thousand two hundred and six dollars; and that the cost of mail transportation during that year was six hundred and seventy-four thousand nine hundred and fifty-two dollars greater than the previous year. Much of the increase of expenditure, which the Treasury is thus subjected to, is to be ascribed to the large quantity of printed matter conveyed by the mails, either franked, or liable to no postage by law, or to very low rates of postage compared with that charged on letters; and to the great cost of mail service on railroads and by ocean steamers. The suggestions of the Postmaster General on the subject deserves the consideration of Congress.

INTERIOR.

The report of the Secretary of the Interior will engage your attention, as well for useful suggestions it contains, as for the interest and importance of the subjects to which they refer.

The aggregate amount of public land sold during the last fiscal year, located with military scrip or land warrants, taken up under grants for roads, and selected as swamp lands by States, is seven million five hundred and fifty-seven thousand four hundred and nine acres; of which the portion sold was fifteen million seven hundred and twenty-nine thousand five hundred and twenty-four acres, yielding in receipts the sum of eleven million four hundred and eighty-five thousand three hundred and eighty dollars. In the same period of time, eight million seven hundred and twenty-three thousand eight hundred and fifty-four acres have been surveyed; but, in consideration of the pending claims subject to entry, no additional tracts have been brought into market.

The peculiar relation of the general government to the District of Columbia renders it proper to commend to your care not only its material, but also its moral interests, including education, more especially in those parts of the district outside of the cities of Washington and Georgetown.

The commission appointed to revise and codify the laws of the District have made such progress in the performance of their task, as to insure its completion in the time prescribed by the act of Congress.

Information has recently been received, that the peace of the settlements in the territories of Oregon and Washington is disturbed by hostilities on the part of the Indians, with indications of extensive combinations of a hostile character among the tribes to that quarter, the more serious in their possible effect by reason of the undetermined foreign interests existing in those Territories, by which your attention has already been especially invited. Efficient measures have been taken, which, it is believed, will restore quiet and afford protection to our citizens.

In the Territory of Kansas, there have been acts prejudicial to good order, but as yet none have occurred under circumstances to justify the interposition of the federal Executive. That could only be in case of obstruction to federal law, or of organized resistance to territorial law, assuming the character of insurrection, which, if it should occur, it would be my duty promptly to overcome and suppress. I cherish the hope, however, that the occurrence of any such untoward event will be prevented by the sound sense of the people of the Territory, who, by its organic law, possess the right to determine their own domestic institutions, are entitled, while deporting themselves peaceably, to the free exercise of that right, and must be protected in the enjoyment of it, without interference on the part of the citizens of any of the States.

The southern boundary line of this Territory has never been surveyed and established. The rapidly extending settlements in that region, and the fact that the main route between Independence, in the State of Missouri, and New Mexico, is contiguous to this line, suggests a probability that embarrassing questions of jurisdiction may consequently arise. For tracts and other considerations, I commend the subject to your early attention.

CONSTITUTIONAL THEORY OF THE GOVERNMENT.

I have thus passed in review the general state of the Union, including each particular concerns of the federal government, whether of domestic or foreign relation, as it appeared to me desirable and useful to bring to the special notice of Congress. Unlike the great States of Europe and Asia, and many of those of America, the United States are wanting their strength to assail foreign and the domestic strife. Whatever of discontent or public dissatisfaction exists, is attributable to the imperfections of human nature, or is incident to all governments, however perfect, which human wisdom can devise. Such subjects of political agitation, as occupy the public mind, consist, to a great extent, of exaggeration of inevitable evils, or over-zeal in matters of improvement, or mere imagination of grievance having but remote connexion with any of the constitutional functions, or duties of the federal government. To whatever extent these questions exhibit a tendency menacing to the stability of the Constitution, or integrity of the Union, and no further, they demand the consideration of the Executive, and require to be presented by him to Congress.

Before the Thirteen Colonies became a confederation of Independent States, they were associated only by community of transatlantic origin, by geographical position, and by the mutual tie of common dependence on Great Britain. When that tie was severed, they severally assumed the powers and rights of absolute self-government. The municipal and social institutions of each, in its sense of property and of personal relations, even its political organization, were each only as each one chose to establish, wholly without interference from any other. In the language of the Declaration of Independence, each State had "full power to levy war, conclude peace, contract alliances, establish commerce, and to do all other acts and things which independent States may of right do." The several colonies differed in climate, in soil, in natural productions, in religion, in systems of education, in legislation, and in the forms of political administration; and they continued to differ in these respects when they voluntarily allied themselves as States to carry on the war of the revolution.

The object of that war was to disenthral the United Colonies from foreign rule, which had proved to be oppressive, and to separate them permanently from the mother country; the political result was the foundation of a federal republic of the free white men of the colonies, constituted, as they were, in distinct, and reciprocally independent, State governments. As for the subject races, whether Indian or African, the wise and brave statesmen of that day, being engaged in no extravagant scheme of social change, left them as they were, and thus preserved themselves and their posterity from the anarchy, and the ever-recurring civil wars, which have prevailed in other revolutionized European colonies of America.

When the confederated States found it convenient to modify the conditions of their association, by giving to the general government direct access, in some respects, to the people of the States, instead of confining it to action on the States as such, they proceeded to frame the existing constitution, adhering steadily to one guiding thought, which was, in delegating only such power as was necessary and proper to the execution of specific purposes, or, in other words, to retain as much as possible, consistently with those purposes, of the independent powers of the individual States. For objects of common defence and security, they intrusted to the general government certain carefully-defined functions, leaving all others as the undelegated rights of the separate independent sovereignties.

Such is the constitutional theory of our government, the practical observance of which has carried us, and as alone, among modern republics, through nearly three generations of time without the cost of one drop of bloodshed in civil war. With freedom and concert of action, it has enabled us to contend successfully on the battle-field against foreign foes, has elevated the feeble colonies into powerful States, and has raised our industrial productions, and our commerce which transports them, to the level of the richest and the greatest nations of Europe. And the admirable adaptation of our political institutions to their objects, combining local self-government with aggregate strength, has established the practicability of a government like ours to cover a continent with confederate States.

The Congress of the United States is, in effect that Congress of sovereignties, which good men in the Old World have sought for, but could never attain, and which imparts to America an exemption from the intolerable leagues for common action, from the wars, the mutual invasions and vague aspirations after the balance of power, which convulsion from time to time the governments of Europe. Our co-operative action rests in the conditions of permanent confederation prescribed by the constitution. Our balance of power is in the separate reserved rights of the States, and their equal representation in the Senate. That independent sovereignty in every one of the States, with its reserved rights of local self government assured to each by their co-equal power in the Senate, was the fundamental condition of the constitution. Without it the Union would never have existed. However desirous the larger States might be to reorganize the government so as to give to their population its proportionate weight in the common counsels, they knew it was impossible unless they conceded to the smaller ones authority to exercise at least a negative influence on all the measures of the government, whether Legislative or Executive, through their equal representation in the Senate. Indeed, the larger States themselves could not have failed to perceive, that the same power was equally necessary to them, for the security of their own domestic interests against the aggregate force of the general government. In a word, the original States went into this permanent league on the agreed premises, of exerting their common strength for the defence of the whole, and of all its parts; but of utterly excluding all possibility of reciprocal aggression. Each solemnly bound itself to aid the others, neither to undertake, nor permit, any encroachment upon, or intermeddling with, another's reserved rights.

Where it was deemed expedient, particular rights of the States were expressly guaranteed by the constitution; but, in all things beside, those rights were guarded by the limitation of the powers granted, and by express reservation of all powers not granted, in the compact of union. Thus, the great power of taxation was limited to purposes of common defence and general welfare, excluding objects appertaining to the local legislation of the several States; and those purposes of general welfare and common defence were afterwards defined by specific enumeration, as being matters only of co-relation between the States themselves, or between them and foreign governments, which, because of their common and general nature, could not be left to the separate control of each State.

Of the circumstances of local condition, interest, and rights, in which a portion of the States, constituting one great section of the Union differed from the rest, and from another section, the most important was the peculiarity of a large relative colored population in the southern third in the northern States.

A population of this class, held in subjection, existed in nearly all the States, but was more numerous and of more serious concernment in the South than in the North, on account of natural differences of climate and production; and it was foreseen that, for the same reasons, while this population would diminish, and sooner or later, cease to exist, in some States, it might increase in others. The peculiar character and magnitude of this question of local rights, not in material relation only, but still more in social ones, caused it to enter into the special stipulations of the constitution.

Hence, while the general government, as well by the enumerated powers granted to it, as by those not enumerated, and therefore refused to it, was forbidden to touch this matter in the sense of attack or offence, it was placed under the general safeguard of the Union, in the sense of defence against either invasion or domestic violence. Like all other local interests of the several States. Each State expressly stipulated, as well for itself as for each and all of its citizens, and every citizen of each State became solemnly bound by his allegiance to the constitution, that any person held in service or labor in one State, escaping into another should not, in consequence of any law or regulation thereof, be discharged from such service or labor, but should be delivered up on claim of the party to whom such service or labor might be due by the laws of his State.

Thus, and thus only, by the reciprocal guaranty of all the rights of every State against interference on the part of another, was the present form of government established by our fathers and transmitted to us; and by no other means it possible for it to exist. If one State ceases to respect the rights of another, and obtrusively intermeddles with its local interests—if a portion of the States assume to impose their institutions on the others, or refuse to fulfil their obligations to them—we are no longer united friendly States, but distracted, hostile ones, with little capacity left of common advantage, but abundant means of reciprocal injury and mischief.

Practically, it is immaterial whether aggressive interference between the States, or deliberate refusal on the part of any one of them to comply with constitution obligations, arise from erroneous construction or blind prejudice, whether it be perpetrated by direction or indirection. In either case, it is full of threat and danger to the durability of the Union.

CONSTITUTIONAL RELATIONS OF SLAVERY

Placed in the office of Chief Magistrate as the executive agent of the whole country, bound to take care that the laws be faithfully executed, and specially enjoined by the constitution to give information to Congress on the state of the Union, it would be palpable neglect of duty on my part to pass over a subject like this, which, beyond all things at the present time, vitally concerns individual and public security.

It has been matter of painful regret to see States, conspicuous for their services in founding this Republic, and equally sharing its advantages, disregard their constitutional obligations to it. Although conscious of their inability to heal admitted and palpable social evils of their own, and which are completely within their jurisdiction, they engage in the offensive and hopeless undertaking of reforming the domestic institutions of other States wholly beyond their control and authority. In the vain pursuit of ends, by them entirely unattainable, and which they may not legally attempt to compass, they peril the very existence of the constitution, and all the constitutional benefits it has conferred. While the people of the Southern States confine their attention to their own affairs, not presuming officiously to intermeddle with the social institutions of the Northern States, too many of the inhabitants of the latter are permanently organised in associations to inflict injury on the former, by wrongful acts, which would be cause of war as between foreign powers, and only fail to be such in our system, because perpetrated under cover of the Union.

It is impossible to present this subject as truth and the occasion requires, without noticing the reiterated but groundless allegation, that the South has persistently asserted claims and obtained advantages in the practical administration of the General Government, to the prejudice of the North, and in which the latter has acquiesced. That is, the States, which either promote or tolerate attacks on the rights of persons and of property in other States, to disguise their own injustice, pretend or imagine, and constantly aver, that they, whose constitutional rights are thus systematically assailed, are themselves the aggressors. At the present time, this imputed aggression, resting as it does, only in the vague, declamatory charges of political agitators, resolves itself into misapprehension or misinterpretation of the principles and facts of the political organization of the new Territories of the United States.

What is the voice of history? When the ordinance which provided for the government of the territory northwest of the river Ohio, and for its eventual subdivision into new States, was adopted in the Congress of the confederation, it is not to be supposed that the question of future relative power, as between the States which remained, and those which did not retain, numerous colored population, escaped notice, or failed to be considered. And yet the concession of that vast territory to the interests and opinions of the Northern States, a territory now the seat of five among the largest members of the Union, was, in great measure, the act of the State of Virginia and of the South.

When Louisiana was acquired by the United States, it was an acquisition not less to the North than to the South; for while it was important to the country at the mouth of the river Mississippi to become the emporium of the country above it, so also it was even more important to the whole Union to have that emporium; and although the new province, by reason of its imperfect settlement, was mainly regarded as on the Gulf of Mexico, yet, in fact, it extended to the opposite boundaries of the United States, with far greater breadth above than below, and was in territory, as in everything else, equally at least an accession to the Northern States. Its slave delusion and prejudice, therefore, to speak of Louisiana as acquisition in the special interest of the South.

The patriotic and just men, who participated in that act, were influenced by motives far above all sectional jealousies. It was, in truth, the great event, which, by completing for us the possession of the valley of the Mississippi, with commercial access in the Gulf of Mexico, imparted unity and strength to the whole confederation, and attached together by indissoluble ties the East and the West, as well as the North and the South.

As to Florida, that was but the transfer by Spain to the United States of territory on the east side of the river Mississippi, in exchange for large territory, which the United States transferred to Spain on the west side of that river, as the entire diplomatic history of the transaction serves to demonstrate. Moreover, it was an acquisition demanded by the commercial interests and security of the whole Union.

In the meantime, the people of the United States had grown up to a proper consciousness of their strength, and in a brief contest with France, and in a second serious war with Great Britain, they had shaken off all which remained of undue reverence for Europe, and emerged from the atmosphere of those transatlantic influences which surrounded the infant Republic, and had begun to turn their attention to the full and systematic development of the internal resources of the Union.

Among the evanescent controversies of that period the most conspicuous was the question of regulation, by Congress, of the social condition of the future States to be founded in the territory of Louisiana.

The ordinance for the government of the territory northwest of the river Ohio had contained a provision, which prohibited the use of servile labor therein, subject to the condition of the extradition of fugitives from service due in other part of the United States. Subsequently to the adoption of the constitution, this provision ceased to be a law; for its operation as such was absolutely superceded by the constitution. But the recollection of the fact excited the zeal of social propagandism in some sections of the Confederation; and, when a second State, that of Missouri, came to be formed in the territory of Louisiana, proposition was made to extend to the latter territory the restriction originally applied to the country situated between the rivers Ohio and Mississippi.

Most questionable as was this proposition in all its constitutional relations, nevertheless it received the sanction of Congress, with some slight modifications of line, to arrange the existing rights of the intended new State. It was reluctantly acquiesced in by the Southern States as a sacrifice of the sense of peace and of the Union, not only of the rights stipulated by the treaty of Louisiana, but of the principle of equality among the States guaranteed by the constitution. It was received by the Northern States with angry and resentful condemnation and complaint, because it did not concede all which they had exactingly demanded. Having passed through the forms of legislation, it took its place in the statute book, standing open to repeal, like any other act of doubtful constitutionality, subject to be pronounced null and void by the courts of law, and possessing no possible efficacy to control the rights of the States, which might thereafter be organized out of any part of the original Territory of Louisiana.

In all this, if any aggression there were, any innovation upon pre-existing rights, to which portion of the Union are they justly chargeable?

This controversy passed away with the occasion, nothing surviving it, save the dormant letter of the statute.

But, long afterwards, when, by the proposed accession of the Republic of Texas, the United States were to take their next step in territorial greatness, a similar contingency occurred, and became the occasion for systematized attempts to intervene in the domestic affairs of one section of the Union, in defiance of their rights as States, and of the stipulations of the constitution. These attempts assumed a practical direction, in the shape of persevering endeavors, by some of the representatives of both Houses of Congress, to deprive the Southern States of the supposed benefit of the provisions of the act authorizing the organization of the State of Missouri.

But, the good sense of the people, and the vital force of the constitution triumphed over sectional prejudice, and the political errors of the day, and the State of Texas returned to the Union as she was, with social institutions which her people had chosen for themselves, and with express agreement, by the re-annexing act, that she should be susceptible of subdivision into a plurality of States.

Whatever advantage the interests of the Southern States, as such, gained by this, were far inferior in results, as they unfolded in the progress of time, to those which sprang from previous concessions made by the South.

To every thoughtful friend of the Union—to the true lovers of their country—to all who longed and labored for the full success of this great experiment of republican institutions—it was cause of gratulation that such an opportunity had occurred to illustrate our advancing power on this continent, and to furnish to the world additional assurance of the strength and stability of the constitution. Who would wish to see Florida still a European colony? Who would rejoice to hail Texas as a lone star, instead of one in the galaxy of States? Who does not appreciate the incalculable benefits of the acquisition of Louisiana? And yet narrow views and sectional purposes would inevitably have excluded them all from the Union.

The same struggle on the same point ensued, when our victorious armies returned from Mexico, and it involved on Congress to provide for the territories acquired by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo. The great relations of the subject had now become distinct and clear to the perception of the public mind, which appreciated the evils of sectional controversy upon the question of the admission of new States. In that crisis intense solicitude pervaded the nation. But the patriotic impulses of the popular heart, guided by the admonitions of the Father of his Country, rose superior to all the difficulties of the incorporation of a new empire into the Union. In the counsels of Congress there was manifested as intense antagonism of opinion and action between some representatives, who sought by the abusive and unconstitutional employment of the legislative powers of the Government to interfere in the condition of the inchoate States, and to impose their own social theories upon the latter; and other representatives, who repelled the interposition of the general government in this respect, and maintained the self-constituting rights of the States. In truth, the thing attempted was, in form alone, action of the general government, while in reality it was the endeavor, by abuse of legislative power, to force the ideas of intervention upon the States, in their original formation, which have succeeded in forcing on this issue, and their pretensions fail to be met by counter pretensions! Will not different States be compelled respectively to meet extremes with extremes? And, if either extremes carry its point, what is that so far forth but dissolution of the Union? If a new State, formed from the territory of the United States, be absolutely excluded from admission therein, that fact of itself constitutes the disruption of union between it and the other States. But the process of dissolution could not stop there. Would not a sectional decision, producing such result by a majority of votes, either Northern or Southern, of necessity drive out the oppressed and aggrieved minority, and place in presence of each other two irreconcilably hostile confederacies?

It is necessary to speak thus plainly of projects, the offspring of that sectional agitation now prevailing in some of the States, which are as impracticable as they are unconstitutional, and which, if they are persevered in, must and will end calamitously. It is either disunion and civil war, or it is mere angry, idle, aimless disturbance of public peace and tranquillity. Dismiss for what? If the passionate rage of fanaticism and partisan spirit did not force the fact upon our attention, it would be difficult to believe that any considerable portion of the people of this enlightened country could have so surrendered themselves to a fanatical devotion to the supposed interests of the relatively few Africans in the United States, as totally to abandon and disregard the interests of the twenty-five millions of Americans—to trample under foot the injunctions of moral and constitutional obligation—and to engage in plans of vindictive hostility against those who are associated with them in the enjoyment of the common heritage of our national institutions.

Nor is it hostility against their fellow-citizens of one section of the Union alone. The interests, the honor, the duty, the peace, and the prosperity of the people of all sections are equally involved and imperilled in this question. And are patriotic men in any part of the Union prepared, on such an issue, thus madly to invite all the consequences of the forfeiture of their constitutional engagements? It is impossible. The storm of phrensy and faction must inevitably dash itself in vain against the unshaken rock of the constitution. I shall never doubt it. I know that the Union is stronger a thousand times than all the wild and chimerical schemes of social change, which are generated, one after another, in the unstable minds of visionary sophists and interested agitators. I rely confidently on the patriotism of the people, on the dignity and self respect of the States, on the wisdom of Congress, and above all, on the continued gracious favor of Almighty God, to maintain, against all enemies, whether at home or abroad, the sanctity of the Constitution and the integrity of the Union.

FRANKLIN PIERCE.

WASHINGTON, December 31, 1855.

"GEBEL NAKOUS"—The Bell of the Buried Convent in Syria.—We were now within two days of Mount Sinai. Our intention has been to go directly there; but Dr. Leider and his lady, English missionaries at Cairo, had strongly advised us to take another direction, and to visit the Gebel Nakous, a mountain near the sea, which they assured us no American has ever visited, and was very little known, although exceedingly interesting. It presented on one side a bright white cliff, over two hundred feet in height, while on the other was a sloping talus of fine glisteling sand reaching nearly to the summit. Many years since, it was found under certain circumstances to emit a sound, which the Bedouins, in the love of the wonderful, attributed to the tolling of the bell of a convent buried beneath the long slope of sand, and thus their name of "Gebel Nakous," or "Monutain of the Bell." We proceeded at once on our arrival to seek the phenomenon, and were not long in suspense. Ascending the hill, as we were directed by our friends at Cairo, we at length caught a sound as of music, rising and falling in successive cadence; but for a long time, it was entirely impossible to tell from whence it came. It was all on nearly the same key, but differed much in intensity. At times it was low, trembling, and even mournful, like the wind, and we held our breath to catch it. Then it increased to the sweet mellow notes of a flute, and finally underwent a rapid change to the powerful vibrations of a huge organ, pealing tremendously, until everything around seemed to be imbued with it, and the whole mountain to tremble.

It was indeed awe-striking; for it could be traced to no quarter, but seemed to proceed now from the air, now from the mountain, and then even from within our very selves. An occasional peal reached those below, but the full effect was only realized upon the bank itself. This led me to seek there the solution of the phenomenon, and I at length found it to my full satisfaction. I noticed that the music and the flowing of the sand were simultaneous, and that, when a foot was withdrawn from the land, the sand which gradually flowed in to fill the depression, was accompanied by the first sound, which I have mentioned, low and uncertain. As the current grew larger, it increased to a clear, melodious tone, like that caused by a flame of hydrogen gas passing through a glass tube, while a large mass set in motion gave rise to a sound which I can only compare to the most powerful notes of an organ. Examination seemed to show that the whole was caused by the particles of sand, highly heated by the sun, slipping over and past each other. In the shade, the thing was scarcely, if at all, discernible, and was much duller—as parts which had already been moved.—[Cor. Genesee Evangellet.

THE MAN WITH WHITE HAIR.—On the excursion train from Utica to Bocuville, at the opening of the Utica and Black River Railroad, our attention was arrested by the singular appearance of an apparently middle aged man, whose hair and whiskers were perfectly white. We learned, upon inquiry, that he was a native of Oneida county, but was now a resident of California, where he has resided for several years, engaged principally in mining. The cause of his white hair he explained as follows: He was engaged in mining and had several men at work in a mine, which extended some ways under ground. One day he went to carry the dinner to his men, and when he had been there but a few minutes, they heard the unmistakable sounds of the caving in of the sides at the mouth of the shaft.

Four men started at once, hoping to escape, but were met by the falling earth and crushed to death. He was enclosed in a space of about six by twelve feet, while three men below him were cut off from any communication with him, and he supposed they were crushed to death.—He had a light and plenty of water and provisions, but his chance of ever seeing daylight were not very flattering, as he was some sixty or seventy-five feet under the surface of the earth, and he was not certain that the disaster would be discovered in time to make any attempt to relieve him; and if such attempt should be made, the prospect was that it would prove ineffectual.

Fortunately the disaster was early discovered and a large force was set at work, and after unremitted exertions for three days and nights, he was discovered in an exhausted condition. The three men below him were also found alive. When taken out his friends declared that for a day or two he was partially insane. His hair had also become nearly white during his confinement. His feelings during those three days he claimed could not be imagined, but that his whole life passed rapidly in review, and that every act was brought vividly to mind. In fact those three days appeared a life-time to him. He said that the sight of one of those shafts always caused a shudder to pass over him. [Watertown (N. Y.) Journal.

We are glad to have it within our power to say that the weather, since Thursday morning last, has been clear and cold. The rainy season appears to be at an end; and should the present delightful spell continue for a few days longer, our roads will be in a passable condition. Many of our sugar planters have finished rolling. In every instance, the quantity made, is much short of that of last year.

DOCTOR HOOFLAND'S CELEBRATED GERMAN BITTERS,

Payment to be made at the close of each term. Board, including lodging, washing, lights and fuel, can be procured in the village and immediate neighborhood, at ten dollars per month. Students will be received at any time during the session, and will be charged only from the time of their entrance to the end of the term. We would however, respectfully urge all parents or guardians who design placing their daughters or wards in the institution, to do so at the earliest convenience, as it will tend much to the individual interest of the pupils, and the general prosperity of the school, facilitating, as it will, a proper arrangement of the various classes in their respective branches of study.

School books, stationery, &c., may be had at any of the various stores in the village at the usual rates.

Reports will be sent to parents and guardians quarterly, in which will be stated the health, improvement, social and moral deportment of their daughters or wards, with such other information as may be deemed important.

As the design of the Faculty is to render the instruction thorough, and lay the foundation of a substantial education, no young lady will be permitted to rank higher than her attainments will justly entitle her, nor to pass into another department in the course of instruction without having made sufficient proficiency in the preceding studies.

The government of the school is to be understood as that of authority—though parental and mild, yet decided and firm. The institution, in a religious point of view will be nondenominational without reference to sectarian influence.

Pupils will be required to attend church at least once on the Sabbath, and recite a Bible lesson on each Monday morning.

The scholastic year, embracing ten months, will be divided into two equal terms of five months, one immediately succeeding the other.

The first session commencing on the first Wednesday in October, and closing the last week in February; the second session commencing on the first Wednesday in March, and closing the last week in July. At which time the annual examination will be held, and the usual rewards and honors conferred. The vacation will embrace the months of August and September.

All applications for admission of pupils, &c., to be made to the president of the College.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE REPORTS.

TEMPERANCE.

Our committee have had the subject of temperance under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following resolutions:

1. Resolved, That we are as much as ever opposed to the use of intoxicating liquors, and other vicious or distilled, as calculated to perpetuate the destructive effects of intemperance.

2. Resolved, That it is the duty of all our members strictly to enforce the rule of our Church forbiding dram-drinking.

All of which is respectfully submitted,

J. M. JENNINGS,
J. E. NEWMAN,
F. G. FERGUSON.

BIBLE CAUSE.

Our committee beg leave to report that $72 has been collected within your bounds, and that $22 15 of this amount has been paid over to your committee; the balance has been collected by or paid over to agents. Your committee regret that so little has been reported, and are of opinion that some means ought to be adopted in order to ascertain more definitely the amount raised among our people. Your committee believe that in view of the public statements made by the advocates of a revision of the Bible, that an expression of opinion by our Conference on this subject is necessary. Therefore they would recommend the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That we approve of the course pursued by the American Bible Society, and disclaim all co-operation or sympathy with the revisionists.

JOSIAH BARKER, Chairman.

EDUCATION.

The committee to whom was referred the general matters connected with our educational interests, beg leave to report:

That it is with mingled feelings of surprise and satisfaction that they have witnessed the interest which is being felt and developed in almost every section of our Conference limits in the cause of education, and the growing and extending confidence of the public in your association as the guardian friend of these general interests. The unprecedented scenes upon this floor connected with the location of the male college, the interest manifested in its settlement, the recent investigation, the animated debate of several days' duration, and the happy and peaceful result, is calculated to inspire new zeal in the friends of education in this Conference, as well as to confirm the expectation of the public as to your ability to discharge such a trust. Without referring to details, to be made public through other channels, the committee must be permitted to congratulate the Church and the country upon the wonderful developments of the present and the bright prospects of the future.

We have had under consideration the several matters referred to us, and though unable, from the pressing nature of other and absorbing duties, to give to these several subjects all the attention they deserved and their importance demand, would yet hope that their labors are not without profit, and their suggestions may prove the basis of important action in and results to this Conference.

LAGRANGE.

The committee regret to find that a difficulty has arisen between the trustees of LaGrange College and the friends of LaGrange College at Florence, which, under the action of this and the other patronizing Conference, retains to this body the relation heretofore held by the former. The trustees of the old college refuse to admit the right of the Conference to remove the college.

The committee are glad to have been informed of the favorable circumstances of the college at Florence, arguing for it a successful future. Its site being quite accessible by the Memphis and Charleston Railroad, which runs within five miles of it, as well as by the Tennessee River, which is but a short way off. It is said also to be in a most healthy location, and surrounded by a moral community. The college edifice is nearly finished. It is a long built in Gothic style, 144 feet long, 84 feet wide, and three stories high, and it is secured to the Church by a proper deed.

There are at present 160 students in attendance, all of which circumstances are well calculated to cheer the hopes of its friends.

The committee recommend the adoption of the following resolutions:

1. Resolved, That Drs. S. and H. Bendr be hereby appointed a committee to represent the Alabama Conference, and to co-operate with the commissioners of LaGrange at Florence in the management of existing difficulties, with full power to act in the premises, so that this Conference incur no pecuniary liabilities therein.

2. Resolved, That this Conference request the Legislature of Alabama to so alter, change or amend the charter of LaGrange College as to sanction its removal to Florence, or grant a new charter legalizing its claim to the name and property of the college.

TALLADEGA CONFERENCE INSTITUTE.

In regard to the Talladega Conference Institute, this Conference had a report laid before it touching its success. In that report the conditions of its transfer is set forth. The agent to solicit subscriptions for it was appointed at the last session of this Conference, but owing to his bad health and the almost entire failure of a crop through that region of country, only about $5,000 was secured.

It appears that the judgment creditors of the East Alabama Masonic Institute insisted upon the sale of the property by the Sheriff, in order to prevent the transfer to this body. The whole property was therefore sold, and all the property which seemed desirable was purchased by one of the trustees, with the design of turning it over to the Conference, on the terms first agreed upon. It is thought that much has been done towards simplifying the transfer and securing to the Conference good fee simple titles.

The institution, under a good faculty, promises to do well, and so afford the educational advantages to the friends of Methodism in that beautiful and romantic region of our State. The trustees ask an agent at the hands of the presiding bishop of this Conference. Your committee would therefore recommend the appointment of such an agent if the bishop can spare one from the regular work.

MACON FEMALE INSTITUTE.

We beg to report, in regard to Macon Female Institute, that owing to pecuniary embarrassments it passed, during the summer, into the hands of private individuals, thus dissolving its connection with the Conference.

In respect to Oak Bowery Female College, we report, that though supplied with a faithful faculty, its success has not met the expectations of its friends.

GLENVILLE MALE HIGH SCHOOL.

Your committee have two communications—one, report of Examining Committee, consisting of Bro. J. W. Shores, (only one in attendance,) who reports the institution in a flourishing condition, increasing in the confidence and patronage of the community, and also recommends it to our continued oversight and attention. The other communication was a memorial from the principals, A. S. Andrews and W. M. Robbins, praying your continued patronage and influence upon the terms received, and recommending the Conference to continue as permanent the son of Bro. Pilley, P. E., in ons of the five scholarships under its control; with all of which recommendation the committee would suggest your compliance.

CENTENARY INSTITUTE.

In regard to the Centenary Institute, at Summerfield, your committee have no report of visitors, but from all that can be learned, would report the institute as still pursuing its wonted way of usefulness and success under a faithful and able corps of instructors, and while we rejoice at the past in its history, we are still left to wonder and inquire why it has not enjoyed a still larger patronage?

They would suggest, if now, when our educational resources are being more largely than ever developed, this were not the time to secure for that institution a permanent endowment.

MEMORIAL OF R. A. BAKER.

The committee have had under consideration the memorial of R. A. Baker, committee in behalf of St. Francis street Quarterly Meeting Conference, and are deeply impressed with the importance of the subject. They feel obliged to return their heartfelt thanks to the Quarterly Meeting Conference, composed as it is principally of laymen, for the interest and zeal they manifest on the subject of providing adequate means for the education of the children and youth connected with our itinerant ministry. They congratulate the Church and the country on the fact that our lay brethren, in many sections of our Conference limits, are awaking to the importance of this interest, and with a zeal and liberality truly commendable, are coming forward to our relief. They would, in view of furthering the objects presented by the memorial, and of presenting the whole interest to the people of our brotherhood and congregations, recommend the union of the two educational societies; that proper means be devised for soliciting donations and aid, and a permanent fund created, the interest of which might in whole or in part meet the demand.

They are somewhat at a loss what course to adopt to meet these views, from the peculiar relation these distinct societies bear to the Conference and to each other; but as the best which now occurs to your committee, they recommend the passage by the Conference of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Alabama Conference advise and request the brethren forming the two educational societies connected with us to unite their interests, and to adopt such measures as will secure a permanent fund for the maintainance of the contemplated objects.

All of which is respectfully submitted,

J. J. HUTCHINSON, Chairman.

TUSKEGEE FEMALE COLLEGE

With regard to the Tuskegee Female College, the Committee are happy to report that a magnificent building, of Gothic architecture, 124 feet long and five etories high, and conveniently arranged for school purposes, will be completed by the first of February, when the regular exercises will begin. The agent appointed by the last Conference has secured in good notes about $11,000, which, added to the original subscriptions, will nearly liquidate all existing liabilities. Perhaps not more than $5,000 will be owing when the edifice is completed and finished.

The entire cost of the building and fixtures will be a little over $35,000. We find that the local Board of Trustees which was recognized by this body when the institution was received, have made the necessary arrangements for opening the college with a full and competent faculty. Dr. Andrew A. Lipscomb, a man widely known for his great natural endowments and extensive learning, and also for his experience and success in teaching, has been chosen President. Under his auspices, assisted as he will be by competent instructors, we have the most sanguine hopes with regard to the permanent success of the college. From what is before us it appears that the brethren who have had it in charge are determined to make it a female institution second to none in the land. All the appearances seem to indicate that it will afford all necessary facilities for the requisition of a thorough and finished education. We indulge the hope the time will soon come when our daughters will go there by scores and hundreds to be prepared in heart and mind for usefulness in life and happiness beyond the grave. In view of what has been done, and of the fact that this Conference has not as yet appointed any trustees from its body, we ask the adoption of the following resolutions:

1. Resolved, That this Conference does heartily approve of the election of Rev. A. A. Lipscomb, D. D., to the presidency of the Tuskegee Female College.

2. That in view of the fact that a local Board of Trustees will be likely to look after and preserve the interests of the institution much better than one which is constantly changing, this Conference do recognize the existing Board of fifteen individuals and add to it ten itinerant ministers.

3. That the Presiding Elder of the Montgomery District, the preachers stationed at Auburn, Montgomery, Eaon and Chuaanenuggee, and the preacher in charge of the Tuskegee Circuit, be, and are hereby, ex officio members of the Board of Trustees.

4. When it happens that any one of the permanent trustees shall fill any of the appointments mentioned in the third resolution, he shall be entitled to two votes in all the deliberations of the Board.

C. D. OLIVER,
M. S. ANDREWS,
J. L. COTTON,
D. C. A. CONNELLY.

The Conference then appointed the following trustees:

M. S. ANDREWS,
S. ARMSTRONG,
J. A. HEARD,
T. J. KOGER,
O. R. BLUE.

BOOKS AND TRACTS—READ THIS.

Let me speak a word or two to the local and itinerant preachers, and the members of our Church in the bounds of the Mississippi Conference.

As agent of the Book and Tract Society of our Conference, I feel that I need the co-operation of every one of you to enable me to carry out the objects of the society—the supplanting of an evil, corrupting literature, and the dissemination of a pure, moral, instructive and religious one in its place. Is it important that this should be done? Who hesitates to answer? Look at the thousands of volumes of light, frothy, corrupting, mind-benumbing literature that are scattered over our country, are eagerly sought for, and read, too, by many. Look, too, at the fact that the press, in many instances, has been corrupted by catering to a vitiated taste created and encouraged by such a literature, and if you doubted before, you will then be prepared to say, there is a work, a great work, to be done. Is it not high time for us to be at work—to be at it in earnest? Can this work be done? Who doubts? But can it be done by one or by a few? Or in a day, or month, or year? Then I wish to have every preacher interested in this cause—selling and giving away books and tracts, and getting funds to help forward the cause by taking collections, receiving donations of five, ten, twenty, fifty and a hundred dollars from the liberal people in our bounds.

Will you engage in this work? Let me hear from you soon.

There is a vast field held out before us—one of great interest, in which great good can be done. There are many families without books, and others with but few, to read. Seek them out and see that they are supplied, and you will do a great and praiseworthy work. You may supply them with the books which will preach effectual sermons when you are far away, and after you are gone to heaven. Let me entreat you, then, by the worth of souls and hope of doing good, to engage at once in the work. May God's blessings be with you in the undertaking.

TO THE MEMBERS OF THE CHURCH.

Brethren, sisters, we cannot get along and succeed in this work without your aid. I am in earnest. We (the managers, &c.) desire to raise from ten to twenty thousand dollars in money in our bounds this year to help on this good cause. With this amount to assist, we can put into circulation from twenty to forty thousand dollars worth of books and tracts, good and religious, that will do great good.

You think the figures too large? Can you tell me how many millions of dollars worth of property are owned by you and the friends of our Church in our bounds? You would weary in the attempt to make the estimate. What, then, are twenty thousand dollars out of the vast amount?

Are there not many of you making from fifty, one hundred, up to one thousand and fifteen hundred bales of cotton, or hundreds of hogsheads of sugar?

Think! Are there not a score of you reading this that could send $100 each, and not feel the worse, but the better for it? Just try. Shall I receive it, to enable me to carry out the instructions of the Board? Thank you for that. I am confident you feel better.

Are there not a hundred reading this who could send me $50 each? Wont you be one of the number? It is now needed; and I shall expect you to respond to the call. God bless you for that response.

Now are there not one thousand more of you who can send and will send me $10 each. I hear you responding: "Yes, Mr. Agent, I'll do that much anyhow. You seem to be so in earnest and determined to have the money, I'll do so to get rid of you, as well as to do good." Thank you, every one, for your kind and generous response. I like to see such promptness. But don't forget to tell me by what route I can send to you, in books, one-half the amount you send me in money. Here, you see, I am a generous beggar. You can read the books and circulate them among your neighbors, give them to the poor. So you will get into business by attending to my call—business that will do you good as well as others.

And oh! how many more can send me five dollars each? I am not authorized to send you one-half that amount in books, yet if two or more of you, living in the same vicinity will unite your fives, you shall have the books. The great object is to have the books and tracts distributed and read. And when you are apprised of the fact that in some portions of our Conference we shall have to distribute gratuitously two-thirds or three-fourths of the books circulated, then you will see the work we want to have accomplished with the other half of your money. Need I say more? Brethren, sisters, friends, will you respond by sending me a hundred, or fifty, or twenty, or ten, or five dollars? Will the preachers send their orders for books? A large supply on hand at Vicksburg.

If you know any local preacher or layman who is willing to enter upon such a work as that of colporteur, please let me hear from you in reference to him.

Respectfully, yours in the work,

H. H. MONTGOMERY, Agent.

VICKSBURG, Jan. 8, 1856.

MR. SPURGEON—HIS FANATICISM.

Our English correspondent, says the Zion's Herald, gave an account, some weeks since, of this latest wonder of the British pulpit, Mr. Spurgeon. It now appears that the wisdom of this young orator is not equal to his genius, that his judgment is far inferior to his assurance. The following account of his preaching is from the English correspondence of the Western Christian Advocate:

"In doctrine, Mr. Spurgeon is an out-and-out Calvinist. He has a belief, it is stated, that his mission is to restore the old thoroughgoing Calvinism, now all but extinct. He is undoubtedly possessed of unusual ability for addressing a popular audience. In person he is short and thickset, dark, but with little beard—altogether juvenile in appearance. His voice is shrill and sharp, not full and deep, nor capable of varied modulation, yet it may be heard distinctly at a great distance. In his language he is very plain, often vulgar. He is on excellent terms with himself. 'Six days in the week I live up there,' said he, pointing upwards, 'and on Sundays I come down here to talk to you folks.' His whole manner is exceedingly irreverent, especially in prayer. One Sunday morning he began his prayer thus: 'Draw near, Lord,' then a pause. 'A little nearer, Lord,' another long pause. 'A little nearer, Lord,' and another pause. 'That'll do, Lord,' and then he went on with his prayer. In common with the generality of higher Calvinists, he appears to have no proper sense either of reverence for the Divine Majesty, or of the insignificance of man in comparison with his Maker. He treats his audience almost with contempt, in his style and manner of addressing them, notwithstanding his extreme youth. He has succeeded, not in winning sinners from out of the world to repentance and faith in Christ, but in attracting together in one focus the sermon-hunters and oddity-hunters from every part of London. He is scarcely acknowledged by the other ministers of the Baptist denomination. He said the other day, after preaching a charity sermon, 'I preach for more charities and get larger collections than any man in London.' This last is far from true. 'And yet,' he continued, 'there is scarcely one of my brethren that will shake hands with me.' His popularity has been wonderful, but it is very much on the wane; already his name is seldom heard."

The testimony of this correspondent is confirmed by a recent private letter to a friend of ours, from which we are permitted to make the following extract:

"Mrs. B had an opportunity recently of hearing Mr. Spurgeon. He made a wonderful impression on her mind. The chapel was crowded, and admission obtained by ticket. She expected eloquence, at least, but there was nothing of the kind, and she infers that his self confidence succeeds in fascinating a certain class of minds. His subject was 'For in time of trouble he shall hide me in his pavilion, &c.' She says manner and matter were both objectionable. He preached the highest Calvinism, in the most dogmatic manner. He told us that he was elected to be a child of God before the foundation of the world, and that he was as sure of eternal glory as the brightest angel in heaven—as safe, but not as happy. 'What care I,' he asked, 'for what men say of me? Let them applaud me; I just catch the faint murmur in the distance. Let them hiss at me; 'tis the voice of a tiny newborn serpent.' He uttered many vulgarities, to catch the ear and make people laugh, in a way quite inconsistent with the solemnities of worship—such as, 'I tell such people this world is only a howling wilderness to such as go howling through it.' Speaking of a man who went to a particular chapel, but who cared nothing about the souls of his wife and children, he said, 'And yet this man calls himself one of God's elect, forsooth!' He does, does he? A pretty sort God's elect are, if they're such as he. God save us from his own elect!' I think I never saw a young man so full of himself. Ever since I heard him these words have followed me, 'Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall.'"

OUR PERIODICAL INTERESTS.

When, in compliance with the wishes of the General Conference, it was determined to reduce the price of our popular literature, and to adopt the cash system in relation to the periodical issues of the Publishing House, it was supposed that all our brethren in the ministry, both traveling and local, would take a lively interest in extending their circulation, and would be equally prompt and faithful in sending up the sums realized on subscriptions. We are happy to announce that, in many sections of the work our anticipations have been fully realized; but we regret to say that the result in other portions has been very different. There are scores, if not hundreds of our brethren, even in the itinerant ministry, who have not yet favored us with the name of a single subscriber to any of our periodicals; while, in some cases, brethren who have evinced a commendable zeal in procuring subscribers, have been slow in making their financial returns. We now have on our books, charged to our agents, on account of periodicals sent out by their orders during the current year, several thousand dollars. This money has been, and still is, greatly needed by the agents. It should be known and well understood by all concerned, that the rates at which we are now sending out our periodicals, taking into the account the large commission allowed to agents, are but just sufficient to cover expenses. But if the funds realized are to be retained by our agents for three, six, nine and twelve months, it must be evident to all that the loss to the Publishing House will be very considerable. All such funds should be transmitted to the agents with as little delay as practicable.

And now, in relation to the future, we would respectfully ask at the hands of all our brethren in the ministry, throughout the entire connection, that they bring the subject of our periodical literature at once before the people of their charge.

THE QUARTERLY REVIEW of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, edited by Dr. Doggett, a work of high standing, and deserving a large patronage, will be furnished to subscribers, laymen as well as ministers, at one dollar and a half per annum, if paid in advance; or two dollars, as heretofore, if not paid within three months after the commencement of the volume. The first number of the new volume will be issued in January next; this is therefore the proper time to begin or renew subscriptions.

THE HOME CIRCLE, an excellent monthly for the fireside, is edited by Dr. Hunton, and is furnished to subscribers at $2 per annum in advance.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL VISITOR is a monthly for the children, principally, as its name indicates, for the Sunday Schools. It should be in every school and family in the connection. It is edited by Dr. Hunton, and is furnished at the following rates: Single copies, 25 cents each; from five to twenty copies to one address, 23 cents each; from twenty to fifty copies to one address, 20 cents each; one hundred copies and over to one address, 15 cents each.

Agents will be allowed a commission of 20 per cent. on all moneys received and transmitted to us for the Nashville Christian Advocate and Home Circle, whether on account of new subscriptions or the renewal of old ones. No commission can be allowed on subscriptions to the Quarterly Review and Sunday School Visitor.

All moneys received for periodicals should be promptly transmitted to us by mail, at our risk.

STEVENSON & OWEN, Agents.

NASHVILLE, Tenn.

CALLED AND UNCALLED FOR.—Of the 2261 ministers of the Old School connection, only 1088, or less than one-half, are pastors or pastors elect; 465 are stated supplies; leaving 608 as professors, teachers, secretaries, editors, domestic and foreign missionaries, or infirm. Of 3079 churches, only 1108 have pastors; 951 have stated supplies, 751 are vacant, 269 are not classified—most of them vacant, doubtless.

LATER FROM THE ISTHMUS.

ARRIVAL OF THE STEAMSHIP PROMETHEUS.

The steamship Prometheus, Capt. Churchill, arrived at an early hour Thursday morning, from San Juan. We are indebted to her purser for the following memoranda:

Affairs in Nicaragua are progressing very favorably. The country continued healthy and all parties seemed contented. Gen. Walker was becoming more and more popular every day. A party of Col. Kinney's men had gone up the Indian River with a good supply of provisions, and there was no doubt but that they would return with gold. The towns of San Juan and in fact the whole Isthmus, was particularly healthy.

Dr. James A. Nott, who came on board the Prometheus at San Juan in a very debilitated state, died on the night of the 8th inst., of bilious diarrhea.

We have received by this arrival two copies of El Nicaraguense, published in Granada, the headquarters of General Walker, dated 22d and 29th of December. We find in the paper of the 22d, a report upon the mines in the District of Chontales, addressed to the Minister of Relations, from which we make the following extracts:

I saw the mineral mountain of San Buenaventura, discovered and denounced by Mr. Manuel Montiel. The ramifications of its veins extend themselves over the bread and fertile plains of Hormiguera, near the waters of the great river Mico, which empties into the Pearl Sea Lagoon. It is so advantageously situated that on every side are facilities to establish machinery for grinding the rich metals during the entire year. The virgin veins recently discovered are from thirty to thirty-six inches in breadth, and a little digging of four yards has sufficed to discover metals of a superior quality; or I should rather say that on the surface even of this extensive and fertile plain is found common ore, that elsewhere would enrich the skillful miner. A quick and imperfect grinding gave as a result a pound of gold, which I have now in my possession. It was examined and assayed by the connoisseurs in this city, who rated it at 20 carats fine. I have started the development of this wealth by means of an association now organized here.

I can say to the Minister that the State possesses, in this beautiful district, only to be properly described in poetry, and inexhaustible treasury of immense riches—wealth consisting of Madera wood and common cedar, mahogany, ebony, granadillo, etc., and also of beautiful cattle that increase wonderfully; wealth of pasture and tillage land, mines of gold, silver, copper, lead, coal, and all other rich productions known to the geologist.

In regard to this matter, El Nicaraguense remarks:

We have testimony from a hundred sources as to the literal truth of its statements, and we confidently look for an immigration of good working men and settlers that shall not be second to California in its palmiest days.

From El Nicaraguense of the 29th we extract the following items:

Amongst the arrivals by the last steamer we notice the names of Messrs. Wm. R. Garrison and C. J. McDonald, of San Francisco. We understand that Mr. McDonald has entered into a contract with the Government for the establishment of a mint in Nicaragua.

Dr. W. E. Rust leaves Granada to-morrow, to meet the steamer at San Juan del Norte, for the United States. The Doctor goes to Washington as bearer of despatches both from this Government and Col. Wheeler.

Col. Fry, with his battalion of voltigners, returned to this city this morning. The Colonel represents the country to be in a peaceful state, and that he was every where received by the natives with manifestations of great kindness.

The Potomac, flag ship of the home squadron, arrived a few days ago at San Juan del Norte. Dr. Dillard, the fleet surgeon, came on the last steamer to this city, bearer of despatches to the United States Minister here. The Minister was en route for Leon, but a special courier was despatched for him, and he returned on Monday evening.

We learn that last week a body of some sixty men led on by Roman Rivas, had fortified themselves near Castillo Rapids, and threatened to take the steamer of the Transit Company and the property of the passengers. The agent, Mr. Hutchison, called on Com. Paulding for the protection of the lives and property of the Americans, and Capt. Powell of the Potomac was sent with a gig of the ship and an armed crew, who proceeded up the river; and as soon as the insurgents saw them coming, they took to their heels and fled. Col. Herneby was despatched from this place on Monday night with a strong force to repel any attack and protect the property and fort at Castillo.

We learn that the U. S. steamer Massachusetts, Com. Swartout, was at San Juan del Sur last week, and that the Independence, the flag ship of the Pacific squadron, is daily expected at that port.

Granada is becoming quite healthy again. November and December are represented as being the sickly months, and when they are passed there is no healthier climate under the sun than this.

Mechanics of various kinds are much wanted in Granada. There is a fine field opening for good, steady mechanics.

Houses in the lower part of the city, which a week ago were tenantless, we are glad to see have occupants. A feeling of protection and safety is being experienced by the natives, and every hour their confidence in the Government is increased.

We learn from the Captain of the Port that the work on the wharf is advancing rapidly.—Capt. Swift thinks the whole structure can and will be completed by the 1st of April. When finished, it will be the only wharf of the kind in the Republic, and will be a great convenience and credit to Granada.

A gentleman by the name of Richardson, a member of Company E, was shot at the quarters, in the San Francisco church, on Monday last. It appears that he was standing near a comrade who was endeavoring to revolve the cylinder of a navy revolver which had become rusted, when the weapon accidentally went off, the ball passing through Mr. R's leg, making a severe flesh wound. Nothing serious.

In regard, says the same paper, to Gen. Wm. Walker, every one here, in and out of the army, will bear us out when we say that his course in Nicaragua has been noble, generous and honorable, alike to the soldier and civilian. The more intelligent of the native population would view his departure from the Republic at this time the direst calamity that could possibly befal them.

For more than thirty years has this garden spot of the world been the scene of internal commotion. Towns and cities often deserted, villages and haciendas burned or sacked, while the probably well-meaning and peacefully inclined inhabitants were forced either to fly their native country or take to the fastnesses of the mountains. The civil war in Nicaragua has been terrible, and one who has not visited the scenes of its battle-fields, has no conception of the amount of devastation to be witnessed.

Granada, it is computed, once contained thirty thousand inhabitants, with a much larger number of buildings than is now to be found within its limits.

To-day there are not six thousand people living in the town, while two-thirds of the former city—and the handsomest and wealthiest part at that—lies one vast pile of ruins. Churches and stately edifices that have withstood the onslaught of the enemy's cannon, bear upon their bruised fronts letters so indelibly impressed that "he who runs may read" the tales of former havoc.

When the leading spirits of the Democratic party invited Gen. Walker's assistance, which he afterwards so magnanimously extended, it was that a stop might be put to these bitter civil heart burnings, that peace and quiet might once more reign throughout the length and breadth of the Republic. The treaty of the 23d of October last, secured these blessings, and all is now as placid and calm with us as is the bosom of the beautiful lake which fronts our city.

We cannot for the life of us see why our position is not as stable and secure as that of any nation upon the civilized globe. Knowing the people as well as we do, we believe, in all candor, that ere many years have elapsed, the anniversary of the landing of Gen. William Walker at Realejo will be commemorated throughout Nicaragua as only a people once oppressed know how to keep a gala day in honor of their deliverer.

Later from Texas.

By the steamship Charles Morgan, which arrived on Saturday last, we have received our regular files of Texas papers. The Galveston News of Thursday last has the following paragraphs:

We have no arrivals from Northern ports. Bremen bark Francisca arrived from Liverpool with a cargo of salt.

The Sabine, Angelina and Neches rivers are reported rising. From Trinity and Brazos rivers we have no advice, however, of a rise having commenced. Hauling has in a measure been interrupted by rains, by cold weather, which has killed grass on the roads, and by holidays; receipts, therefore, have been small at Houston and other shipping points.

The railroad from Harrisburg has reached Brazos river. The accumulated stock of cotton may be expected here from Richmond during the ensuing week.

In transportation from lower Brazos and points on the Bay, very little progress has been made during the week for want of means of transportation, and on account of interference of weather. Business under these circumstances is unusually dull for the season.

The weather has been less cold than during Christmas week, but rain has been scarce here, and appearances are by no means favorable for river navigation in Texas.

The January term of the U. S. District Court commenced its session on Monday morning, Judge Watrous presiding.

The people of Richmond have had a meeting, which adopted measures preliminary to a celebration of the completion of the railroad to that place.

We think it is now about twenty days that we have had a severe cold norther almost uninterruptedly. This inclement weather commenced on Christmas day, and we have had no respite since, with the exception of a few hours on Monday morning last, when it was spring. This morning it commenced to rain, which froze as it fell, causing a sleet, but as the rain has increased the ice has melted away. We, however, look for a sleet or snow before morning.

The News publishes a letter from Austin, from which we extract the following:

Since the holidays the Legislature have gone to work in good earnest. Within the past few days more bills have been finally disposed of than during all the preceding portion of the session.

The great measures, however, still remain to be acted on in the House. In the Senate the Public Debt bill was passed by a vote of 17 to 14, on the 5th inst., with an immaterial amendment, which was, that no claim of any citizen of Texas against the United States for Indian spoliations, should thereby be released. The House will most likely pass it, as it was passed in the Senate. On a full vote of the House, it is understood there is a majority of two or three in favor of the bill.

The San Antonio Texan says:

It will be remembered that in the Texan of December 6th, we gave an account from our correspondent of the robbing of a safe at Franklin, near El Paso, and what one of the robbers named Mackleroy wrote on a slate and left behind. We learn that the robbers were overtaken and two of them killed. Several Pueblo Indians were among those who went in pursuit, and upon overtaking the thieves three lances were thrust into the body of Mackleroy in succession, and each time he cut the lance off with a large knife he had in his hand. Mackleroy and one other were overcome and killed; the others we believe escaped.

The city of San Antonio has gained a suit in the Supreme Court, by which it will add one-third more space to our main plaza.

We are also informed that the suit for the "Alamo property" has been decided in favor of the city; this will bring to San Antonio some $12,000, and also a large amount for rent each year.

The American party State Convention will meet in Austin on the 21st inst.

The Matagorda Chronicle states that Capt. H. L. Petty, postmaster at Preston, committed suicide on Sunday evening, the 23d ult., by shooting himself at his residence. The Chronicle says:

No cause is assigned for the melancholy catastrophe, as he exhibited his usual demeanor just previous to the fatal act, by familiarly requesting the family to go into another room to supper, though symptoms of the mind's aberration had been evinced on several occasions. They had scarcely been seated when the report of a gun notified them of the horrible tragedy just enacted. He had shot off the top of his skull, and his brains were scattered on the floor of the apartment—a horrible sight for a devoted wife and loving children. Capt. Petty was well known to this community as an energetic and enterprising planter on old Caney. He had emigrated to this country about twelve years since from Petit Gulf, Miss.

THE END OF THE WAR IN ST. DOMINGO.—A letter from Macoe, St. Domingo, November 28th, says:

The Emperor Soulouque, so recently at the head of a formidable force against the Dominicans, is on his return, without having fired a shot at his adversaries. Two French men-of-war ships hove in sight on the 25th inst. off this place. The senior officer in command hoisted his flag, and soon after was in correspondence with the French representative on shore. A courier was immediately dispatched to the Emperor with sealed dispatches, on the perusal of which his Imperial Majesty immediately gave orders to turn right about and march back again. It is rumored and generally believed that France will not permit the Haytiens to invade or molest the Dominicans.

Cholera continues prevalent along the coast and interior, but seldom is fatal when medical aid is early applied. Business is dull, but now that peace is being proclaimed, trade will revive and produce come in rapidly.

The Italian sculptor Chelli has just terminated the model of the prophet Ezekiel—one of those destined to be placed at the foot of the column which the Pope is causing to be erected at Rome, to commemorate the proclamation of the dogma of the Immaculate Conception.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Christian Advocate.

Terms: $2.50 per annum, in advance.

NEW ORLEANS:

SATURDAY, JANUARY 19, 1856

Tract Agents.—Read the terse and telling pronunciamento of Montgomery and Ferguson. Read and respond. Those who wish to subscribe or make payments to the N. O. C. Advocate will find in them both willing agents for that, too.

Columbus, Miss.—As published, there was an error in crediting this station with $12 20 in the Missionary Treasurer's Report. It should have been $1,220, and so adds up. A punctuation point will not deprive this banner station of its well merited honor.

Bishop Kavanaugh.—Our Churches are much gratified and blessed at this time by a visitation of Bishop Kavanaugh. His services in the pulpit have been freely rendered. On Sabbath and on Thursday night he preached—on the latter occasion ordaining a deacon. He leaves in a few days for California, via Panama. Mrs. K. accompanies him.

Tract Meeting.—The first anniversary of the New Orleans Tract Society was held in Carondelet street, on last Sunday evening. Bishop Kavanaugh delivered a suitable and effective address—"The truth shall make you free." A very large audience were interested and edified. Collection, about $120. The Society is thoroughly organized and doing good. A colporteur has been engaged for nine months. An excellent report was read.

A New Methodist College.—The Western Advocate says: "An official announcement has been made that the $200,000 for the endowment of the new college at Troy, N. Y., has been secured. At a meeting of the Board of Trustees, held on the 22d of November, the Rev. John McClintock, D. D., of Carlisle, Pa., was unanimously elected President or Chancellor of the University. Dr. McClintock is at present editor of the Methodist Quarterly Review.

The South Carolina College.—Professor C. F. McCay has been elected President of this institution, in place of Dr. Thornwell, resigned, and Dr. Lieber has given notice of his resignation, to take effect in December next.

Another Advocate.—The Pacific Christian Advocate is the title of a new paper published at Salem, Oregon Territory, by a Methodist association, and edited by Thomas H. Pearne. The first number (Sept. 1st) is before us. It is made up with editorial taste and judgment.

Louisiana Baptist.—We have received the first number of this denominational organ, published under the auspices of the Convention at Mount Lebanon, Bienville parish, La., and edited by Rev. Mr. Lee.

It says:

"We issue to-day the first number of the Louisiana Baptist, unfurl our banner to the breeze, and hazard another experiment of a Baptist paper in Louisiana. Now, shall it be sustained? Is a paper of the kind needed, and is this the proper place of publication?"

The Three Graves.

It is not forgotten that in 1853 the three Methodist preachers stationed in Mobile died of yellow fever. They fell within the course of one month, self-sacrificed to duty. Their graves are a refutation of the oft uttered slander that Protestant ministers desert their posts in the hour of danger—that they fear and fly.

The churches and citizens of Mobile have not forgotten these things. A late visit there brought us to the knowledge of a fact creditable to them and exceedingly gratifying to our feelings. In the new graveyard—quite in a dry and sunny spot—are the three graves, to be seen, side by side. An iron railing encloses a space of 12 by 24 feet. Room for others! At the west end of this plot the deceased lie, in the order they died: Powell, Hughes, Starr. Over the middle mound is raised a monument to the noble trio. A base of granite 3½ feet square; upon this a neat block of marble; four shafts of marble, 9 inches square and 2½ feet high, resting on the corners of this block, support a marble cap, on the faces of which are suitable inscriptions. On the south face, an inscription for Rev. A. H. Powell, looking towards his grave; on the north, one for Rev. J. W. Starr, and on the east one for Rev. J. S. Hughes, stating facts of their lives, ministry and death. A tapering shaft rises about 6 feet, making the whole monumental height 12 feet. Upon the sides of the shaft, corresponding to the lower inscriptions, are the words, POWELL, STARR, HUGHES. On the other, are carved three acorns, united to one stem, and falling! The ground is neatly turfed and laid off. The whole cost $600. Bros. Dorman, Neely and Garrett deserve the thanks of the Church for the tasteful and substantial manner in which they have performed this testimonial to the dead. A sad and pleasant spot for their brethren, the preachers, to visit. To visit will do them good.

Unequal Distribution of Missionaries and Funds.

PRESBYTERIAN BOARD.

Dr. Talmage, of Georgia, is calling the attention of Southern Presbyteries to the working of what our Old School brethren insist on calling their national Church; knowing no North, no South! He publishes in the Southern Presbyterian a paper read before the Florida Presbytery, in which some items are figured out. They suggest several reflections besides showing the comparative expenditures in the field named. We therefore make some extracts:

"There is a very great inequality in the distribution of the missionaries of our Board of Missions. This inequality, I am inclined to suspect, has not been sufficiently observed by our Southern Churches and Presbyteries. It is very much to be regretted that we have so little zeal in the good cause as to ask or receive no more aid from the Board. * * *

Here is a table that gives a view of a large number of our missionaries, and of the expense of several of the larger States, North and South. The Board had, in the last year, reported the following number of missionaries:

In North Carolina,	12....	cost,	$1,550
South Carolina,	4....	cost,	375
Georgia,	7....	cost,	1,100
Florida,	4....	cost,	1,000
Alabama,	1....	cost,	200
Mississippi	10....	cost,	2 395
Louisiana,	3....	cost,	650
Texas,	19....	cost,	3,535
8 Southern States,	60....	cost,	$11,005

The population of these eight Southern States, in 7,181,467.

In Ohio,	63....	cost,	$7,147
Indiana,	47....	cost,	6,710
Illinois,	56....	cost,	8,055
Pennsylvania	71....	cost,	9,930
In four States,	239....	cost,	$31,843

The population of these four Northern States is 6,132,099.

You will observe that in making this comparison I have not selected States at a distance from one another, but in both parts of the table the States mentioned are contiguous to each other. You will also observe that in the Southern table are included the large frontier States, Texas and Florida, both more needy and more extensive than any State in the other table, and increasing in population as fast as Iowa or Wisconsin. Yet in the four Northern States there have been in the service of the Board, in the last year, 179 more missionaries than in the eight Southern States. And the appropriations of the Board were $20,837 more in the former than in the latter; while the population of the eight Southern States is more than a million the greatest. In the Northern table the missionaries and one to every 25,000, and in the Southern one to every 119,000.

Nor is it difficult to account for this great inequality. It arises, in great part, from the excess of ministers and churches in the Northern States, that labor incessantly to make call the young ministers they can rear, and all others they can lay their hands on, fixtures among themselves, until every nook and corner is filled up, and every pastor and stated supply has half a dozen ministers located within ten or fifteen miles of him. And in order to do this, they cannot spare a single minister for distant and more destitute places; and they must draw largely upon the Board for funds to support those who have located among themselves. We need not inquire whether there is in this course any selfishness and sectionalism that is different from the spirit of Christ, who said "the field is the world," or of Paul, who gloried in preaching the gospel 'in the regions beyond.' * * * * *

The Southern Presbyteries ought to draw a much larger portion of the Board's missionaries in their bounds. I cannot suppose that the anti-slavery feeling has any great influence in preventing Old School Presbyterian ministers from coming Southward. If the mantle of Alexander or Miller has overshadowed them, they will not fear to cross the line, nor will we hesitate to welcome them as co-laborers in our Master's service. No doubt some are afraid of our climate. Disease and death and the South are closely united in the minds of many in the Northern and Middle States. * * * *

Here is also another item:

Old Advice--But Very Good.

ABOUT SAVING SOULS.

One of the dangers of a large and prosperous church is in losing sight of the simplicity that is in Christ. If not in doctrine, yet in practice. Standards may be sound, but the system of operations too complex and indirect. Forces that ought to be centralized and spent on the one great work of saving souls, are dispersed in this, that and the other direction. In the multitude of collaterals, of side issues, the main issue escapes.

John Wesley's advice to Methodist preachers must not go out of print, even if it go out of practice:

"You have nothing to do but to save souls; therefore spend and be spent in this work; and go always not only to those who want you, but to those that want you most.

Observe! It is not your business to preach only so many times, and to take care of this or that society; but to save as many as you can; to bring as many sinners as you can to repentance, and with all your power to build them up in that holiness without which they cannot see the Lord."

Emory College, Ga.

We learn that Rev. J. R. Thomas, A. M. has been elected President, and will enter promptly upon the duties of his office. Mr. Thomas is one of the early graduates of Randolph Macon College, Va., under the Presidentship of Dr. Olin. An able minister, a thorough disciplinarian, a ripe scholar, a true man. He was the first Rector of the Collinsworth Institute in Talbot county, Ga., a high school, under the care of the Georgia Conference, which began a career of usefulness in 1839. We well remember, and with satisfaction, those days—having had the happiness of being one of his pupils, seven of whom are now in the Ministry of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Collinsworth, of Georgia, as it was in those days, and Cokesbury, of South Carolina, as we knew it in 1837, under Dr. Mitchell, are our models of conference high schools. They were never called colleges.

Besides Mr. Thomas's scholarship and fitness by experience of teaching, his character fills the bill for President of a college. Vim and momentum of moral and intellectual forces are of more consequence in that post than mere scholarly accuracy. An impulse is given to surrounding mind, and young men have a model upon which to form themselves, and from which elevated conceptions of honor and worth are derived.

Some have literary and classical qualifications to a high degree—know every idiom, accent and variation to the utmost nicety—skillful in conjugations, great on vowels and diphthongs; but their elevation to the head of school, college or university would be a misfortune. A great mercy and wonder if the next generation of thinkers is not an abortion, under such educators. Men of minutiæ, they are dwarfs and begetting dwarfs. Davy Crockett, with his boldly outlined character, vigorous mind and great honest soul, would better suit. But instead of going into the subject, we return to the man—Rev. J. R. Thomas. We congratulate Emory College upon her new President. The restoration of his health, which enables him to undertake the duties of his office, gratifies us more than the honor done him in his election to it.

Care for the Orphan.

The Baton Rouge Advocate comments favorably on the Seventh Annual Report of the Female Orphan Association of that city:

"The Female Orphan Association of Baton Rouge was organized on the 21st of August, 1848, and incorporated by act of Legislature on the 5th of February, 1850, since which time it has gone on quietly in its work of love and benevolence, with an order and system peculiarly gratifying. The present officers are: Mrs. Tennessee Davis, President; Mrs. Rebecca Elam, Vice President; Mrs. Mary Isett, Treasurer; Mrs. Mary W. Read, Secretary; which, together with a Board of Directors, Committee on Building, Committee on Supplies, &c., constitute the management of the institution.

From the report of Mrs. Read, the Secretary, we learn that the entire number of orphans during the present year was 33, of which 28 are still in the Asylum. Of this number 2 are from West Baton Rouge, 3 from Plaquemine, 2 from East Feliciana, 2 from Manchac, 2 from Livingston, 2 from New Orleans, and 15 from our own parish. The report says that all of sufficient age are learning to read, write and sew, and also to attend to the various domestic duties required in so large a family. The report adds that two of the orphans, possessing minds of strong promise, have been placed at select schools, and are pursuing a course of study intended to qualify them for teachers. The Treasurer's report shows that the receipts in the Treasury for the past year amount to $4,260 33, while the amount paid out is $1,782 25.

The closing paragraph of the Secretary's report demands the attention of our Legislature and the citizens generally. It is as follows:

'On account of the great inconveniences which have always been experienced by the inmates of the asylum for want of sufficient room, and especially in view of the sickness, suffering and death to which the orphans are exposed during an epidemic, by being crowded together in rooms unaired to them, the society have contracted for the erection of such additional buildings as are necessary to the future protection and comfort of their charge, and for pecuniary aid to meet their obligations arising hence, they trust to the noble sympathies of those whose hearts can throb in pity o'er an orphan's woes—to the generous impulses of those who love to ameliorate 'the deep sorrows of humanity,' and to the honorable, high-minded decision of those to whom the public voice has given the power of dispensing the charities of the State of Louisiana.'"

Southern and South-Western Commercial Convention.—This convention assembles in Richmond on the 30th of this month. As it was deemed important that New Orleans should be represented, his honor, Mayor Lewis, has appointed the following gentlemen to represent the city, and will cheerfully make other appointments if suitable persons signify a desire or a willingness to be present on the occasion: Senators Slidell and Benjamin, and Representatives Eustis, Taylor, Sandidge and Davidson, are the gentlemen named thus far.

We think it would be well enough if a larger delegation went from New Orleans, although the probabilities are they could do little or nothing for the city, except to defend her. In this connection it strikes us it would be eminently proper for the Chamber of Commerce to take the matter under consideration. At all events, we throw out the suggestion, and are willing to let it go for what it is worth.

There are now laid up in winter quarters at Chicago, two hundred and eighteen steamers and sail-craft, representing carrying room for sixty thousand tons. These ships and steamers will leave with full loads for Eastern ports in the spring.

GOD IS MY REST.

"Return unto thy rest, O my soul, for the Lord has dealt bountifully with thee.

"For thou hast delivered my soul from death, mine eyes from tears, and my feet from falling.

"I will walk before the Lord in the land of the living." Psalm 116:7-9.

God is my rest! Yes, for I am conversing with my own soul. Strange power of self-communion, prerogative and proof of my spiritual nature. To whom should I go but unto him, its Divine original, its necessary end and good!

My rest—though I have wandered from him. Thou didst "tell my wanderings." I left him with averted eyes; but his gracious gaze was always fixed on me, watching until with weary steps I should come back again to him. Did not the Infinite heart yearn after me—me, a soul made in the image of Infinite Intelligence? My rest—because I wandered from him. Always at home with him I had been always happy; yet I had known nothing of the joy of recovery and My rest! Already there is "no more curse." Thou hast smitten my Substitute for my sins. Far be it from thee, O Faithful and Just, to smite me likewise.

My rest, too, meekness and loveliness of heart—first and last lesson which I learn of him whose yoke I bear. Humility is the garment of charity; and charity stills my passions, composes my faculties, regulates my will. So is my whole nature rectified; and I am a new man, at the feet of God.

Always my rest! Care casts its load on thee. Pain presses me to thy bosom. Poverty asks and has thy riches. Perplexity locks my hand in thine; and "I walk," a little child, "with God." Disappointments are the loving discloseures of thy will. Yea, and dying, I hang, another malefactor, upon the cross, where the last shame of my humanity must be endured. But that cross is next to thine, and I hear the promise of an instant paradise. The unknown future brightens before me. Then shall I know thee, "the true God, and eternal life." Not lost in thee, as poets coldly sing; but found by thy side; not absorbed in thy fullness, but filled with it; a separate, conscious, exultant, adoring existence—a flame of fire on thy altar, forever fed by thee.

"Return," then, "unto thy rest!" Eyes, delivered from tears, wait, in reverent love, on him. Feet, preserved from falling, walk before him in the land of the living. Soul, redeemed from death, wake up after his likeness, and be satisfied.

Yet a moment more I commune with my own heart and with God. "The Lord is my portion, saith my soul." "O my soul, thou hast said unto the Lord, thou art my Lord." How quick the answer! "And they shall be mine, saith the Lord." And, O, the unutterable tenderness of that still, small voice! "They shall be mine, in the day when I make up my jewels!"

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

THE TRACT CAUSE.

Mr. Editor—Allow me to speak to the ministers, members and the friends of the Methodist Episcopal Church in the bounds of the Alabama Conference on the Tract Cause. The first year of our operations is past, and the second is began. Most of you are aware of the hindrances in the way of that large measure of success which was anticipated. But, notwithstanding, we have much reason to thank God, take courage, and on with the work.

The whole amount collected by myself, by Dr. Hamilton and a few of the preachers, and at the anniversaries, makes an aggregate of over three thousand dollars. In the meanwhile, books and tracts to the amount of about four thousand dollars have been disposed of. The immediate and apparent benefits of these operations are to be found, first, in the spread of so much religious reading; second, in the cheapening of our religious books, and the facilities with which they are obtained; and, thirdly, the amount which has been given away to the poor, the destitute. What fruit such precious seeds, watered with tears, as sown in hope, shall bring forth, we must have patience until the harvest of the world is gathered, and then, like our Lord, we shall see of the travail of our souls, and be satisfied.

Dear brethren, we may build up many fine churches, schools, and colleges, as we may think best, provided we see to it that the poor have the gospel preached to them. This is not done by good wishes, fervent prayers, only, but material aid, as much as may be necessary to support the preacher and supply him with the means of usefulness. If we would encourage and promote home education and piety, social refinement and purity, and a permanent love of letters, we must encourage the tract cause, and thereby prepare the people everywhere for the larger advantages which schools and colleges give.

I am coming among you, as I have opportunity, earnestly asking all to help. Help as God hath prospered you. If you have but little, give but little; but if you have much, do not put me off with little, may be nothing. We must do more than last year. The times are better, and you must not deny. I shall therefore go forth to my work expecting not only to be met by the preachers, with hearty welcome, but by the people who shall hail my coming as a precious opportunity "to give to the poor, that thereby they may lend to the Lord."

Very Respectfully,

F. G. Ferguson.

Summerfield, Jan. 5, 1856.

NOW, AND THEN.

The Natchez Courier, of the 27th, says, in reviewing the condition of Natchez in 1807, that at that early day the only cotton gins in the neighborhood were located within the the city limits, and that the most of the merchants received pay for merchandise in seed cotton, which was delivered at the public gins, and the tenth pound taken as a toll for ginning and pressing; the which concentration of cotton gins, by the rotting of the seed, the tramping of hogs and cattle, and the failure of the buzzards and carrion crows to act as scavengers, produced a compound of "villainous smells" and fated exhalations which was pronounced to be an intolerable nuisance by the unreformed council of that city, and abated by a stringent ordinance thereanent.

The same paper says that whereas, in 1807, one month, and often longer, was required to perform a trip from New Orleans to Natchez, now the splendid steamers Princess and Natchez, leave New Orleans at 5 P. M. and take tea in the city of Natchez next evening. And it confidently predicts that in less than five years Capt. Leathers or Holmes, or both, will bring out a boat that will run from New Orleans to Natchez in less than twelve hours. It makes the following extract from the Mississippi Messenger, published at Natchez in the territorial times before steamboats were in use:

"We have to apologize to our patrons for the diminished size of to-days Messenger. It has arisen from the non-arrival of paper expected from New Orleans, which has been more than a month on the river."

The latter paper (the Messenger) continued a price current of Bordeaux, showing that coffee brought, in 1807, from 70 to 80c. per pound; sugar, from 28 to 43c; tobacco, 43c; and Louisiana cotton, 74c per pound. Whereas, at the present time, the rates are: For coffee, from 10 to 15c; for sugar, from 6 to 7c; for tobacco, from 6 to 8c; and for cotton, from 7 to 11c. What a contrast!

PEWS—THEIR HISTORY.

In Anglo-Saxon and some Norman churches of early date, a stone bench was made to project within the wall running round the whole interior except the east end.

In 1319 they are represented as sitting on the ground or standing. About this time the people introduced—low, rude three-legged stools promiscuously over the church.

Wooden seats were introduced soon after the Norman conquest. In 1287 a decree was issued in regard to the wrangling for seats, so common that none should call any seat in church his own except noblemen and patrons, each entering and holding the one he first entered.

As we approach the Reformation, from 1530 to 1540 seats were more appropriated, the entrance being guarded by cross-bars and the initial letters engraved on them.

Immediately after the Reformation, the pew system prevailed, as we learn from a complaint the poor Commons addressed to Henry VIII., in 1546, in reference to his decree that a Bible should be in every church at liberty for all to read, because they feared it might be taken into the "quyre" or some "pus." In 1608 galleries were introduced.

As early as 1611, pews were arranged to afford comfort by being boxed or cushioned; while the sides around were so high as to hide those within—a device of the Puritans to avoid being seen by the officers who reported those who did not stand when the name of Jesus was mentioned. The services were often greatly protracted, so that many would fall asleep. Hence Swift's pithy allusion:

"A badstead of the antique mode,
Compact of timber many a load,
Such as our ancestors did use,
Was metamorphosed into pews;
Which still their ancient nature keep,
By lodging folks disposed to sleep."

With the reign of Charles I. the reasons for the heightening of the sides disappeared.

Recent Publications.

The History of England: from the accession of James II. By Thomas Babbington Macaulay—vols. III. and IV. New York: Harper & Brothers.

The two latest volumes of Mr. Macaulay's great history of England, embracing the period from the proclamation of William and Mary at London to the highest glory of the reign of William the Third, has been received by us from the publishers, through courtesy of H. D. McGinnis. The period treated of is full of interest, and the two present volumes are worthy of their predecessors; but we must leave all further notice until some such time as we have been able to compare Macaulay with the other historians who have written of the same era, and observe in what respect he differs either in narrative or inference from those who are our present acknowledged standard. The volumes are well printed and do honor to the house from whence they issue.

Notes on Central America; particularly the States of Honduras and San Salvador: their geography, topography, climate, population, resources, productions, etc., and the proposed Honduras Inter-Oceanic Railway. By E. G. Squier. With original maps and illustrations. New York: Harper & Brother.

The work of Mr. Squier, concerning that region which is the present land of promise and modern Eden, will be read with much pleasure by those who are interested in the earlier portion of our American history, and desire to know of those times that had being before Pizarro or even Columbus swept the Western Atlantic and passed San Salvador. Mr. Squier, well known as a scholar before his departure for Central America, enjoyed opportunities for research and investigation there which few previous to him could have obtained, or, obtaining, could have made available. The result of his explorations is embodied in the very handsome, well-printed and copiously illustrated volume, which we have received—a work that embraces the historical, agricultural, mechanical and geological nature of the region, and which should be placed in every library, by the side of Stephen's.

The Tragedies of Sophocles: In English prose. The Oxford translation. New York: Harper & Brothers.

Herodotus—A new and literal version, with a geographical and general index. By Henry Cary, M. A., New York: Harper & Brothers.

The History of the Peloponnesian War, by Thucydides. A new and literal version. By Henry Dale. New York: Harper & Brothers.

The three translations above named, of Herodotus, the father of history; of Sophocles, the master of Tragedy; and of Thucydides, the clearest and most succinct of those who have embalmed the deeds of the past for future ages, are very well and carefully done by scholars whose names alone insure the accuracy of their works. They record more or less fully the history of what was thought and what was done when Rome and Greece had the civilization of the world. Those who might not be able to read them in the original, will be happy to avail themselves of the present opportunity for reaching them by means of a translation.

The volumes are well printed, with an abundance of notes and explanatory references, that heighten their value.

We are under obligations to H. D. McGinnis, 36 Camp street, for copies of the foregoing.

COMMERCE OF NEW ORLEANS.

The business of our city this season far exceeds our most sanguine expectations. It has already attained an amount without a parallel. Though we hear of complaints regarding depreciation of real estate, we do not learn that they proceed from the proprietors or owners of cotton presses and warehouses. As an evidence of the stupendous business now in course of progress, we give the value of the exports of produce, which include cotton, sugar, flour, corn, wheat, etc., from this port for the three months ending the 31st December last, as also the value for the corresponding quarters of 1853 and 1851. It will be observed that there is an increase for the present season of eight million two hundred and seventy-three thousand dollars.

This daily shipments which are made by the boats composing the mail line, via Lake Pontchartrain to Mobile, go from port Pontchartrain and are not included. Of the value of sugar, molasses, flour, bacon, whisky, bagging and rope, which go this route, there is no means of approximating a correct value.

Exports of Produce from the port of New Orleans for the 3 months of October, November and December.

	To Foreign Countries.	Coastwise.	Total.
1853	11,997,377	4,758,706	15 856 083
1854	13 158 539	6 951 722	19 101 261
1855	19 940 784	7 429 004	27 378 788

This shows an increase in the gross exports for the three months ending 31st December, 1855, of forty-three per cent over the year 1854, and an increase of eleven million four hundred and twenty-two thousand dollars over 1853, or a fraction of over seventy per cent. The increase to coastwise ports for 1855 over 1854 is twenty-four per cent, and over 1853 of fifty-six per cent. For details of each month, see our financial column.

Public Whipping in South Carolina.—The infliction of the punishment of public whipping upon two white men on Monday, says the Charleston Mercury, reminds us to renew our protest against the continuance of this mode of punishment. We believe that a vast majority of the people of the State feel that this penalty, as it is now inflicted, is an evil and ought in some way to be changed. The public exhibition is one which no man can ever witness without feeling that its effect must be demoralizing.

The Philadelphia Ledger says that since the new organization of the Fire Department of that city, once noted for its rowdyism, there has been not only a decrease in the number of fires and false alarms, but the loss of property compared with former years has been but trifling. What is still better, the disposition to fight and riot on the part of the firemen has been almost entirely checked, and the citizens of Philadelphia can now look with pride upon their Fire Department. The loss by fires from April to December, 1855, has been $123,000.

The Seminole War.—The Tampa Peninsular of the 29th ult. comes to us filled with reports of public meetings and exciting appeals of a most warlike tone. It is evident that our friends of Southern Florida, after the inhuman massacre we have already recorded, will be satisfied with nothing short of the removal or extermination of the savages, who, in violation of all faith, have committed repeated acts of barbarity, and by whom the peace and security of the inhabitants are constantly threatened. Volunteer companies were rapidly forming, in accordance with resolutions adopted at public meetings on the 23d and 24th to march immediately into the Indian Territory. And among these was one under the command of Capt Simeon L. Sparkman, one of the most effective officers of the old Indian war.

Besides these voluntary corps, the people call upon the Governor of the State and the Federal Government to furnish the necessary protection to the citizens, and take immediate steps for the speedy and forcible removal of the savages, and if necessary, to wage war of extermination against them.

The time for negotiation, says the Peninsular, is past. It is high time the United States Government, which is the boast of every American, should assert her supremacy in her own territory, and teach these marauding outlaws that their repeated outrages have rendered "forbearance no longer a virtue." In this connection, the Peninsular speaks in high terms of Col. Monroe, Commandant of U. S. troops in Florida, and expresses its opinion that under his conduct there will be a speedy termination of the war.

The Cherokee College Burnt.—By a letter from Cassville, to the editor of the Savannah Journal, we regret to learn that the new Baptist College edifice recently erected at that place, was destroyed by fire on Friday morning week. The institution was about to go into operation. The building was a handsome brick edifice—the main building three stories in height, with two wings of two stories each. The west, when completed, would have been about $14,000, and that amount had been raised by private subscription.

"A Piece of her Mind."—In the Baton Rouge Advocate we find the following peppery communication from the Advocate says: "A young and handsome widow, who some time since discarded the weeds of woe." It appears that three young gentlemen of that town had published a card, which the widow chose to consider in some degree personal. Her letter is a model in its way:

Baton Rouge, Jan. 10.—Eds. Advocate:—I gave you credit for possessing more good sense than you exhibited in giving publicity to the impertinent card of the "Trio Bachelors," copied into your columns yesterday from that worthless G by O sheet known as the Baton Rouge Comet; but I regret to say that I have heretofore over-estimated your characters, [oh, scissors!] and hasten to alter my judgment to suit the circumstances. But it is with neither you nor the upstart editor of the Comet I wish to deal, but that worthy and henceforward notorious "three" pettifogging limbs of the law, who parade themselves for sale in the advertising columns of a newspaper, to the highest bidder, as though sensible women—"widows and old maids" included—could not better invest the sums mentioned as necessary to purchase them, in stock, cattle, horses, hogs, sheep, or, Mr. Editor, even a drove of Kentucky mules for plantation purposes. These graceless sprigs of impertinence are well known to the writer hereof, who would advise all heiresses of a speculative turn to invest in Nicaragua land scrip if they wish to run a risk, but if they wish to make dead loss a certainty, let them turn over their capital to the care of the sick-coming sap-heads of "Magnolia Retreat."

Yours, &c.,

A Widow.

A dispatch of the 5th from Cincinnati says:

Nine persons, all Irish, were arrested here last night, by the U. S Marshal, for a violation of the neutrality laws, and held to bail for their appearance for examination on Monday. The impression is that they were acting in concert with parties in New York and elsewhere, having for their object a descent upon Ireland.

Free Love in Iowa.—The Dubuque Herald says:

We understand that this pernicious doctrine is spreading in Iowa. An association is said to exist in Linn county, two and a half miles from Cedar Rapids.

Thirty-Fourth Congress—First Session.

Washington, Jan. 3.—Senate.—The financial report of the Secretary of the Treasury was received.

Mr. Mason moved that 10,000 copies be printed by the printer to the Senate of the last Congress.

A discussion ensued as to the power of the Senate to take such action, since it would, it was contended on one side, be a violation of the law of the last session relative to the public printers. The resolution, however, was adopted.

Mr. Hale remarked that he was not in his seat when the President's annual message came in, else he should have objected to its reception as irregularly sent here. He would not pretend to state the reasons why the President took such an extraordinary and unprecedented course, but Yankees are allowed to guess, and he would by no means presume to say that the President has taken this opportunity to go down on his knees to the South, because several Southern States are to hold Democratic conventions on the 8th of January. [Laughter.]

If that was the case, he was sorry the President had taken so much pains for nothing, for there is just as much chance for one of the Senate's pages to be nominated for the Presidency as for Mr. Pierce. [Laughter.] The President takes up much of his message in talking about Central American affairs, but he (Mr. Hale) thought there was a place in the central part of the United States on which the eyes of the people are turned with vastly more attention, namely, Kansas. He stated on the authority of Mr. Calhoun that the Monroe doctrine so much talked about was originally suggested by the British Cabinet. True, as said by the President; acts have occurred in Kansas contrary to good order, but they had taken place by instigation of the President. This is not the first time the President has delivered a lecture on slavery.

It was insulting to the majority of the nation for the President to say, in effect, that men who disagree with him on that subject are enemies of the Constitution. Mr. Hale eternally rebukes such an imputation. God, for punishment of our national sins or the humiliation of our national pride, permits Mr. Pierce to occupy the Presidential chair; and he comes down into the arena of the demagogue, stripped of everything which should clothe him with Executive dignity. [Laughter.]

Mr. Wilson offered a resolution, which lies over, calling on the President for information relative to the troubles in Kansas.

The Senate then adjourned to Monday.

House.—Mr. Mace offered a resolution that the acting Doorkeeper of the House be requested to lock all the doors leading to this hall instanter; and keep them securely fastened till the Speaker be elected, unless opened for the admission of absent members. [Laughter.]

Mr. Mace said that they had ecclesiastical precedent for this in the election of a Pope. [Laughter] to succeed Clemont IV., in 1268. The cardinals had been for nearly three years unable to agree on the choice of a successor, and were on the point of breaking up, when the magistrates of Rome, by advice of St. Benjamin, shut the gates of the city, locking up the cardinals till they agreed.

He was not so much of a Know-Nothing as not to acknowledge the binding authority of this precedent. [Laughter.] If the resolution should be adopted, he ventured to say that the calls of nature would be such, either for refreshment or otherwise, [laughter] as to force an election in ten hours. [merriment.]

On motion of Mr. Boyce, the resolution was tabled, and the House again proceeded to vote.

Mr. Walker, with the view of uniting the conservative elements, offered a resolution declaring Mr. Boyce speaker, regarding him as eminently qualified, and as having taken no part in the democratic caucus. The American party could not carry out their wishes, and therefore he was inclined to surrender Mr. Fuller solely for the purpose of organization.

Mr. Galloway moved to substitute the name of Mr. Banks, and defended the Republicans from Mr. Walker's charge of sectionalism. On the contrary, they are national, seeking to carry out the cardinal principle of freedom.

Mr. Dunn appealed to Mr. Banks' friends to accommodate themselves to circumstances. To secure some degree of harmony in all quarters, he suggested the name of Mr. Pennington for speaker.

Mr. Sage moved to table the resolution.

Before the vote was announced, various gentlemen took the opportunity to define their positions.

The resolution was tabled—yeas 141, nays 75.

Mr Corodo offered a resolution that from and after Saturday next, no member of the House be entitled to receive daily pay until a Speaker be elected. This was received with laughter, and laid on the table.

After another ballot for Speaker, the House adjourned.

a ter from South America.

By the steamship North Star, we have received a copy of the Panama Star and Herald, from which we extract the following intelligence:

Chile.

On the 17th ult., the Government convoked Congress for an extraordinary session. The matter for consideration consisted of a project of civil law, the treaty celebrated with the Argentine Republic, the Consular Convention with New Grunada and with Ecuador, supplementary estimates of extraordinary expenses, etc.

The treaty with the Argentine Republic and the Consular Convention with Ecuador and New Granada were approved.

The new code of civil laws was first discussed in the Senate and approved. It is to come into operation on the 1st of January, 1857 (?) The extraordinary expenses are for the purpose of enlarging the school of arts, and for completing the outfit of the steamer Esmeralda, already launched in the Thames.

It was expected that the session would be a short one. On the 20th November the treaty of amity, commerce and navigation between Great Britain and Chile was duly signed and exchanged at Santiago.

Peru.

Our private advices inform us that every symptom of another revolution is apparent. Castilla is fast losing his influence, and the friends of Vivanco and Echinique are both waiting for "something to turn up" to try their chance once more. Arrests are made nightly in Lima of persons supposed to be inimical to the Government, and every one feels that Castilla's rule will soon come to an end.

The splendid new frigate Apurimac, just arrived from England, was got on shore in the harbor, and with some difficulty hauled off by the steamers in port.

The Herald publishes an interesting letter from Valparaiso, from which we extract the following interesting statements:

This town continues to be in a gold fever, and hundreds are rushing to the diggings, which are about fifteen miles from here.

We see almost daily the old familiar sights of San Francisco, and gold washers, cradles, long toms, etc., are toted along, as well as picks, crow bars and sieves. The miners even are at the mines. The southern diggings near Conception do not turn out so well as those in the vicinity, and consequently we hear southern prospectors are coming this way.

Considerable quantities of quartz gold have been found, and some nuggets. The quality of the gold is fully equal to any I ever saw either in California or Australia.

Several vessels have sailed from here for Australia with samples of gold, and in six month's time we may look for a small increase of our population, which will astonish the natives of this Republic. A person to dig has to pay some three or six dollars for a site, and the mining laws of Chile are so liberal that a miner, if he has any reason to believe that gold exists even in a gentleman's garden or in the cellar, can lay claim to dig there by paying his three dollars and taking out his certificate of the location.

To give you an idea of the vicinity and reality of the gold, I would state that a well known merchant of this city, offered to bet five hundred dollars that he would leave Valparaiso at 6 A. M. and return at 6 P. M., with an ounce of his own digging. From what I can see of the diggings, it seems to me that companies of determined men cannot fail to do as well as in California, if not better.

Marriages.

Married—On the evening of December 20th, 1855, in Perry county, Ala., by Rev. A. R. Ramey, Mr. Wm. Avery to Miss Sarah Elizabeth, eldest daughter of Mr. Joseph M. and Lucy Walton.

Married, January 5, in Sumpter county, Ala., by Rev. Wm. Shapard, Dr. William D. Boyken to Miss Mary G. Clanton.

Married, January 7, in Eutaw, Ala., by Rev. Wm. Shapard, Mr. Edward Brandon of Mobile, to Miss Virginia Bell, of Eutaw.

Deaths.

Died, of consumption, at the residence of her parents, in Orville, Dallas county, Ala., in the 35th year of her age, Mrs. Frances R. McDaniel, consort of Rev. Walter H. McDaniel, of the Alabama Conference. In early life she was taught the Holy Scriptures, which formed the basis of that religious character for which she was remarkable in after life. In 1836 she joined the M. E. Church, and was converted in 1843, at a camp meeting held at Asbury, on the Cahawba Circuit. From that period she dedicated herself to God without reserve. As the wife of an itinerant minister, she seemed especially to feel the weight of responsibility upon her, and amid the many toils and privations incident to such a calling, she seldom complained, but often spoke words of encouragement in the hour of gloom and disappointment. Her motto was, "Work while it is day, for the night cometh, when no man can work." Life is toil, heaven is rest. It is said by those who knew her best that she was well adapted to this position in life. Reliable in judgment, prudent, firm, systematic, she was well enlenlated to manage the affairs of her household. The rules of piety constituted the groundwork of her domestic government—children, servants and all saw and felt the influence. Plain, unassuming and agreeable, she moved in the different circles of society, whether among the rich or poor, winning upon the confidence and friendship of all. For many months previous to her death she was confined to her room, a patient consumptive, and watched the gradual but sure advances of her last enemy, as he moved forward to attack the citadel of life. There was no misgiving or fear as to the approaching conflict. When questioned by her husband as to the prospect of heaven, she calmly replied, "I see nothing in the way." Being blessed with consciousness, she distributed a few mementoes among her weeping relatives, and gave directions concerning her two little boys, who lay so near her heart. Her work was now ended. Calmly folding her arms, she passed away into a sweet and heavenly sleep, to wake no more on earth until the Master calleth. Though dead, she yet speaketh.

H.

It has become my painfully pleasing task to pen a brief memorial of Sister Elizabeth Ellis, late consort of Bro. T. M. Ellis, of Jackson, Miss. This is painful, because the writer, with many more, must feel that he has one less warm and faithful friend on earth; but pleasing, because he can so confidently state that our loss is her eternal n.

Sister Ellis was a native of Greenville Co., Virginia. She departed this life November 29, 1855. She had been a member of the M. E. Church, South, since 1839.

It has been the privilege of the writer to know her and share her friendship for the last nine years. I believe I have never known a more devoted or a more observful Christian. She was eloquent in prayer, triumphant in praises, and zealous in every good work. Many have been the sorrowing souls she has led to the altar of prayer and cheered and encouraged with the great and precious promises of the Bible. When health and domestic duties permitted, she rarely failed in attendance upon the means of grace. She loved to go where saints "assembled together with one accord," and where they "spake often one to another."

She filled the various relations of a good woman with grace and respectability—faithful as a wife, fond and attentive as mother, kind as a mistress, and courteous and obliging as a neighbor.

Sister Ellis never seemed happier than when making her home the home of the ministers of her Master. Her last illness was brief, but she was ready, and perfectly composed, and commending all about to God, and bidding them "a kind farewell," she sweetly fell asleep in Jesus, in sure and certain hope of the resurrection of the just. May all who mourn her loss meet her in the skies.

J. B. W.

New Orleans, Jan. 8, 1856.

Died, at her residence, Rusk county, Texas, Nov. 12, 1855, Elizabeth Bynum, wife of Elijah Bynum, daughter of Solomon and Celia Martin, aged 36 years and four days, of consumption, after an illness of about ten months; leaving a husband and six children, besides many relatives, to mourn her loss. But their loss is her eternal gain. Her end was peaceful and triumphant. She called her family and friends to her bedside, a short time before she died, joined in singing the sweet songs of Zion, sang a part or all of the "Old Ship of Zion." Death to her had lost its sting. She would exclaim, "O, death, where is thy sting! O, grave, where is thy victory?"

The subject of this notice embraced religion when about fifteen years of age, joined the Methodist Church, and lived a consistent member to her death. She, with her family, emigrated from Talladega county, Ala., in the fall of 1850, settled in Rusk county, Texas. During her residence in Texas she made many friends, who were ready to minister to her in her last hours. She selected the minister to preach her funeral, also the text—Isaiah, 3:10, "Say ye to the righteous it shall be well with them, for they shall eat the fruit of their doings." She often spoke of her sainted father, brother, sisters and little babe, and said she would soon be with them in heaven. May our end be like hers.

James Lloyd.

Departed this life on the 8th of November, Sister, Melissa Ann Hendrick, in the 34th year of her age.

Sister K. was born in Henry county, Ga., April 22, 1822. She was Methodistically educated and brought up. Embraced religion and joined the M. E. Church in 1842, from which time until she left her earthly friends she lived the life of a Christian. Some seven years ago, with her husband, she emigrated to North Louisinna, settled in Union parish, lived in fellowship with the Church at Shiloe, where she was highly appreciated for her example of constant piety and faithful attendance at the house of God. Her days of affliction were few but severe. She was conscious of her approaching dissolution, and told her friends to prepare to do without her. She died as she had lived, in the faith of the gospel and in full hope of a glorious immortality. She has left behind her to mourn an affectionate husband and five little children. May God bless them and bring them all to their mother's heaven. May we all imitate the example of Sister Kendrick, and be as ready to depart and be with Christ as was she.

R. M. Crowson.

Farmerville, Dec. 20, 1855.

Died, Mary Arrendall, only child of Rev. Wm. R. and Nannie P. Goher. She was born in Sacramento, June 27, 1852, and died in San Jose, November 27, 1855. Her death was very sudden and startling. A few hours before she breathed her last she was laughing and talking with her parents; but in a very short time their hearts were made sad, and the whooping cough (which has been quite fatal in this country) hurried their darling Minnie to the grave. It will doubtless be gratifying to the friends of the afflicted family to know that all that sympathy and friendship could do to relieve the sorrowing hearts of the stricken parents was promptly rendered.

☞ We have frequently heard the celebrated German Bitters, sold by Dr. C. M. Jackson, 121 Arch street, Philadelphia, spoken of in terms of the highest commendation, and we believe that it is one of the best medicines advertised for the complaints for which it is recommended. They are pleasant to the taste, and can be taken under any circumstances by the most delicate stomach. The press, far and wide, have united in commending this invaluable remedy for dyspepsia, debility, etc.; and such are the healing effects of this panacea, that we hope it may be introduced to every family where dyspepsia is or is likely to have a victim. 19 Bottles Perform 19 Cure

LETTER FROM A POSTMASTER.

Maxwell, Del. Co., Ohio, Aug 10, 1855.

Mr. Rhodes—Dear Sir: Your medicine has met with the most favorable success in this neighborhood. I have about five bottles left. I gave it to them at first, "if no cure, no pay," although I was not authorized by you to do so, but I took the responsibility on myself. But not a bottle has come back, and as I am almost out of the article, I wish you would forward me one gross of the bottles, if you see proper to do so, and I will be punctual in payment. I enclose $15 on the medicine I have received, for which please send me a receipt. Ship the Cure to me as soon as you can. There never has been so much chills and fever since I lived in the State as at present.

15,000 Acres of Land for Sale.

The lands are situated in Morehouse parish, Louisiana, and is what is known as the "Bastrop Grant." They are of the richest quality of alluvial soil, unsurpassed in fertility by any lands in the South, and fully capable of producing from one and a half to two bales, or fifty to sixty bushels of corn to the acre. They lie near the Ouachita and Bœuf rivers—good navigable streams—and likewise in convenient distance of the route of the Vicksburg, Shreveport and Texas Railroad, now in course of construction and hastening to a rapid completion. A portion of these lands are highly improved and in a flourishing state of cultivation; the country in which they lie is very healthy, the water is excellent and abundant, and altogether they will be found to possess greater advantages and present inducements to purchasers than any lands now offered for sale in the Southern country. They will be sold in quantities to suit purchasers, and on the most favorable terms. Titles perfect.

For further particulars inquire of the undersigned either personally at his residence in Prairie Jefferson Morehouse parish, or by letter addressed to Point Jefferson, Morehouse parish, Louisiana.

LATER FROM CALIFORNIA.

PROGRESS OF THE INDIAN WAR IN OREGON.

TWO MORE SEVERE BATTLES.

By the Prometheus we have received dates from San Francisco to the 20th of December, fifteen days later than by the last previous arrival. From the news summary of the Alta California we extract the following items:

From the mines, the only news we have is the activity, occasioned by the rains. Miners are leaving their river leads and directing their efforts to getting out the gold from the dirt collected during the dry season. The excitement produced by the discovery of gold in immense quantities, in Table Mountain, is unabated.

Authentic reports from the Colorado river contradict the previous rumors of a threatened rising of the Indians in that quarter. Colonel Washington's surveying party had suffered severely from want of water on the plains, and had lost several mules, but had received no hostile demonstrations from the Indians.

The steamer Senator, which had arrived from San Diego on the night of the 10th inst., brought news of another reported filibustering expedition in Lower California. Dispatches were forwarded by the commander of the Mexican frontier to Capt. Burton, stating that he had received an express from Gov. Blancerta, stating that 500 filibusters, under the command of Capt. Zerman, had landed at Cape St. Lucas, with the intention of taking the country. Dispatches were sent to Capt. Burton from Blancarte, addressed to Gen. Wool, and have been forwarded to him.

Later news informs us that the expedition was on the bark Archibald Gracie, which left here on the 10th of October for Acapulco, having been purchased by the agents of Gen. Alvarez, and converted into a Mexican corster. It seems that since Alvarez has got into power he has declined the contract. On the 18th of November the bark put into La Paz, and was seized and taken to Mazatlan.

A man named Jacob Wilde was lost in a snow storm in Eldorado county a few days since. He was found frozen to death.

The Sacramento Valley Railroad has been completed eighteen miles of the twenty-two which are inlcoed to be laid at present.

The case of Charles Cora, charged with the murder of Gen. Richardson, U. S. Marshal, is still pending, and attracts a great deal of attention. Upon the arraignment of the accused, it was found that some informalities existed in the indictment, when, for greater security, judgment was entered on the 7th inst., to resubmit the case to another grand jury. The counsel for the prisoner thereupon made a motion for his final discharge, which was, however, promptly overruled. On the 14th inst. another grand jury was empanneled, and proceedings again Cora re-commenced.

The U. S. revenue cutter Joseph Lane, from Norfolk, arrived safely in the harbor on the 8th inst.

Edward McGowan was arrested on the evening of the 16th, charged with attempting to blow up with a bag of powder and bullets the dwelling of a French woman on Pike street.—The woman was named Fanny Perrier, and it is said McGowan formerly lived with her. The powder was thrown on the front door step, and a servant coming to the door picked it up just as it exploded. She was considerably injured. McGowan denies all knowledge of the action, but is under $5,000 bonds for his appearances on the 22d.

The homicide calendar for the first eleven months of the year shows a list of 535 homicides, 7 executions by sheriffs in accordance with statute, and 49 executions by the people, in accordance with Lynch law.

The U. S. frigate Independence, with her armament on board, weighing in all 5,800,000 pounds, was raised in the dry dock at Mare Island. Five out of the ten sections of the dock were used on the occasion.

The Grand Jury of Tuolume county has indicted five persons, among others, J. W. Colfroth, a State Senator, on a charge of having murdered John S. Barclay. Barclay was lynched. The Grand Jury of Monterey has indicted several reconn a charge of having lynched a men about a year ago.

The U. S. surveying steamer active, and the Pacific mail steamship Panama, which was chartered for the purpose, have taken their departure for Oregon, freighted with ordnance stores and other supplies for the army under General Wool. It understood that they will be used by the General on their arrival, in the manner best calculated to promote the interests of the campaign against the Indians.

In the Herald of the 20th we find the following, which it will be seen confirms a statement in our news from the Isthmus:

The steamer Cortes will carry away to-day one hundred and twenty men, recruited for Gen Walker's army in Nicaragua. Col. Kewen has appointed Capt. Skerrett in command of the company. It is stated that there were upwards of three hundred applicants for enlistment in the service of the Nicaragua Government.

The Herald has also the following piece of information:

We learn of a gentleman from Monlocino, that a tremendous and unaccountable swell of the sea occurred at that place on Wednesday, which rushed into the bay with such force as to break the Chilian ship La Paz from her anchorage and wash her upon the beach, where she soon went to pieces. The vessel was loading at the time with lumber for Chili. The wife of Capt. Chazelle was in the cabin at the time of the swell, together with the mate and his wife, and all three were drowned: also two sailors were drowned. The balance of the crew escaped by crawling up on a bluff close by, from which they were rescued. The brig Kingsbury was in port at the time, and was also wrecked, although her crew was saved. The brig North Bend was driven ashore and wrecked, with a load of 100 000 feet of lumber for San Francisco on board.

THE WAR IN OREGON.

From an extra of the Oregon Times, dated December 14, we copy the following important intelligence:

Headquarters, Left Column, 1st Reg. O. M. V., Camp on the Walla Walla River, Dec. 8, 1855.

To Wm. H. Farriar, Adjutant Regiment—Sir:—Yesterday morning, as my command was on the line of march from the mouth of Touchet River to Whitman Valley, we were attacked by about four hundred Indians, with whom we kept a running fight all day, and for a distance of about ten miles from Walla Walla river. At dark yesterday, the battle was suspended by the Indians withdrawing. We drove them from every position which they took, both in the brush-wood, along the river bank and on the adjacent hills. This morning the battle was renewed and raged all day. At dark this evening, the Indians again withdrew. The number of the Indians who fought us to-day has been considerably greater than yesterday, and is supposed to exceed six hundred. To-morrow morning we expect a renewal of the battle, which, in all probability, will last for some time to come. I regret to say that yesterday and to-day we have lost many brave and excellent men, who fell nobly fighting for their country. Subjoined to this dispatch you will find a list of the killed and wounded.

The loss of the Indians must be very great, as their killed alone, during the two days, cannot be less than fifty men. Among their killed yesterday was the noted Chief of the Walla-Wallas, the celebrated Pee-i-eu-Mox-Mox. He was taken prisoner by my command on the 5th inst., near his camp on the Touchet, and during the battle yesterday made an effort to escape. In doing so, he was killed, together with four others who were made prisoners at the same time, and who also attempted to get away. To-morrow, as I said, we expect a renewal of the battle, and I regret to say that we are not in a situation to repel the attack of the Indians with that vigor that is desired. This arises from our scarcity of ammunition and the broken down condition of our horses. The animals have become so poor and jaded, that it is impossible to make a successful charge against the Indians, who are mounted on fleet horses, and can easily escape. We are therefore compelled, in a measure, to act in the defense of our position, which we are now fortifying, by making a Stockade Fort. Our ammunition will be exhausted, I fear, with another day's hard fighting; and unless we can receive a supply from Fort Henrietta, our position will be critical, indeed. Of provisions, we have only enough for about three days, but we expect to get a supply in two or three days. I must insist on supplies of all kinds being sent forward, at once, as I do not intend to abandon this position until the last extremity. By so doing, the enemy would be greatly emboldened.

This dispatch is written in great haste, and is disconnected and exceedingly brief, and I know will be unsatisfactory; but I wish to send the messenger forward immediately, so that he can reach Fort Henrietta by day-light. At another time I will give you a more detailed report of all transactions that have occured since leaving the post on the Umatilla. Respectfully, etc.

Fight with the Indians near the Yakima Pass.

A correspondent of the Oregonian, writing from the Sinose Mountain, under date of Nov. 17th, says:

On the next morning Capt. Cornelius, with twenty-five men from our company, and ten from each of the other companies, were sent out on a scout, with orders to proceed up the valley and join them near the pass of the Yakima, about twenty miles. We traveled up a valley and came to a creek where the Indians encamped the night before; they had been killing beef and the fires had not gone out. This is the first sight we had had, and we felt confident of hearing from them before night and we were not disappointed. From there we struck across the valley and came upon a trail where they had been driving their stock lately; we followed it up to within about five miles of the gap, where we discovered a few Indians in front of us. We kept along at a good pace, and after traveling a mile or two, they began to be pretty plenty about a mile ahead of us. We formed a square with our men in front, company C on the right, and companies E and F on the left and in the rear; we kept on, intending to get to the camp that night, if we could find it; they commenced firing on us and were coming down from the pass pretty fast, when we dismounted and commenced firing upon them; they had good guns and seemed to know how to use them. We kept firing upon them for about half an hour and then mounted to proceed to camp.

Not being acquainted with the country, we were uncertain about the distance, and supposed their whole force to be concentrated at the pass. After riding a few minutes, two men were shot; Holmes, of company C, in the shoulder and Waymire, of company G, in the leg. We then dismounted and retired slowly and in good order, until after dark, when they ceased firing upon us; we reached camp at six o'clock. The next day we expected to meet Haller's "1000," supposing that they would dispute the pass. We left our camp, five miles from it, our company in the lead, and proceeded to the regular camp, from which we could see the Indians ahead. We charged about two miles through the sage, but they were not so keen to fight as the day before, and kept out of the way. When we reached the mouth of the pass, they were on the steep hills on either side. The howitzer was brought up and some shells thrown to the lowest bench, which set them to climbing. By this time the infantry came up, and after camping, about two hundred volunteers and regulars ascended the hill, and after firing a few shots, drove the Indians off. Next morning they were back again, and arrangements were made to cut them off, but from some misunderstanding there were only two Indians killed, the balance escaping. Their whole force amounted to not over seventy men, although some who are interested will make it out five hundred.

We then went through the pass to another valley, and camped two miles from the Yakima mission. A great deal of time and travel was lost for want of a good guide. Next day about three hundred men were sent to the Natchez pass, to meet the volunteers from the Sound. We traveled sixteen miles the first day, the snow falling nearly all day and all night. Next day we made six miles and camped, and were fortunate in finding some Yakima beef. As it continued snowing the next morning, and as we started with only three days' provisions, the expedition was given up and we returned to camp. Our 3d Lieutenant, J. H. Smith, was taken with inflammation of the lungs, and we were obliged to carry him on a litter; he is still quite sick. On our return to camp, we found that the mission had been discovered and destroyed. The priest had left; he is undoubtedly aiding and abetting the Indians, and if he had fallen into our hands, he would have lost his hair.

Position of the Indians at Walla-Walla.

A correspondent of the Oregonian, writing from the camp of Lieut. Col. Kelley, says:

"The boys are eager for the fray, and, from present indications, we will have a hard fight, as the enemy is in large force at Fort Walla-Walla and vicinity. The fort is in their possession, and they have fortified the canon leading to its approach by building stone breast works on each side of the pass. Their force is variously estimated at from one to two thousand warriors. There can be but little doubt that all or nearly all who opposed Maj Haller have crossed the river since the evacuation of the Yakima country, and have joined the enemy on this side, which shows the importance of having a military post established in the Yakima Valley when the troops were there, but through some strange fatality it was not done, and the lives of some of Oregon's best men may yet have to pay the penalty of this sad military blunder.—Col. Kelley promises well; the future alone can prove their fulfillment. The Multnomah boys are all right, and hope to return to the hands of the ungelio donore, the ladies of Portland, their banner riddled with bullets. I send this hastily written note by the express which leaves this evening, and will be the last opportunity to send till after the engagement. It rained last night, and is still raining, with every indication of stormy weather for several days to come."

The Indian War on Rogue River.

We are informed, says the Oregonian, by Gen. McCarver, that an express arrived at Roseburgh on the 30th ult., from Little Meadows, on Rogue River, bringing news that a fight had taken place a day or two before, at that point. Part of Major Martin's battalion was engaged in crossing Rogue River by means of a raft. On placing the third log in the water, they were fired upon from the brush on the opposite side, by a superior number, and not being prepared for fighting, were compelled to lay behind the rocks, or anything which would shelter them from the enemy's fire, till night covered their retreat. A Mr Lewis, of Capt. Kinney's company, was killed; one of Captain Kinney's, two of Captain Williams', and one of Captain Rice's company were wounded; one other was wounded, but of whose company was not learned. It is not known that any Indians were killed in this engagement. During the day, a beef belonging to the volunteers was killed, and at night the Indians crossed and carried it off, together with a quantity of arms, ammunitions and provisions.

Since the above reached us, a letter has been received by the Governor from Gen. McCarver, who is at Roseburgh, which states that instead of one hundred Indians attacking Mr Rice's house, as reported, the number did not exceed twenty or thirty, who were repulsed by the men in the house, though not until Mr. Rice was wounded in the arm, fracturing the bone. His out buildings were burned, and several unsuccessful attempts made to set fire to his house.

Up to the date of his letter, Dec. 2d, Gen. McCarver had received reliable information that about ten houses had been burned in the vicinity of Roseburgh. All, however, had been vacated or were outbuildings. The inhabitants had received intelligence of the approach of the hostile band from a friendly Indian, and fled leaving their houses and property to the mercy of the savages, who burned and destroyed them. A small party of volunteers was hastily made up at Roseburgh on the 1st inst., which, together with a part of Capt. Bailey's company and the citizens in the vicinity of the attack, numbering in all thirty or forty men, immediately started in pursuit of the Indians. A party under J. P. Day, discovered the camp of the enemy, about sixteen miles from Roseburgh, on Olilly creek, and attacked them on the morning of the 2d, at daylight, killing two on the spot and effectually routing the band. They captured twenty-three head of horses, and their bed clothing, provisions, etc., and three rifles. Many of the balance of their guns were lost in swimming the creek. Only one man was wounded in the fight—Assistant Quartermaster General Castleman. The wound is in the abdomen and is thought not to be dangerous. Information had been received that part of Capt. Gordon's company which had started through the canon, in compliance with Major Martin's orders, had returned to the Cow Creek settlements, where the Indians were killing cattle, etc. It was also said that they, together with the neighboring citizens, were fighting with another band of Indians, about ten or eleven o'clock on the 2d inst., as they were in hot pursuit, and persons who had arrived from the canon reported much firing in that direction. From this it would appear that the scene of hostilities has changed, and that while the citizens were preparing to pursue them in Rogue River Valley, the enemy have made their appearance in the Umpqua, and commenced their depredations in that quarter.

The Pioneer and Democrat has received intelligence from Lieut. Slaughter's command, stationed near the forks of White and Green rivers. It appears that Lieutenant Slaughter and a party of his command were unexpectedly fired upon by a party of Indians, immediately killing the Lieutenant and several others, besides wounding a number. The killed includes Corporale Berry and Clareudon, of Captain Wallece's company. Privates Beck, Nolan, McMahon and Grace were wounded. One of Capt. Key's artillerymen was mortally wounded, and has since died. From an extra we extract the following:

Headquarters, Puget Sound District, Fort Stellacoom, W. T. 6 P. M., Dec. 7

To Capt. G. Hays, Company B, W. T. V.—Information has just been received at this post that on Tuesday night, while Lieut. Slaughter was encamped about fifteen miles below Morrison's, and about two miles and a half above Capt. Hewitt's camp, Lieut. Slaughter, while sitting in a small house on Brannan's prairie, near the forks of Green and White rivers, engaged in consultation with Capt. Hewitt, Lieut. Harrison and Dr. Taylor, they were fired upon by a large number of Indians, and at the first discharge Lieut. Slaughter was shot through the heart. Two others were killed outright—one mortally wounded (since dead) and five others wounded.

Lieutenant Slaughter left forty men and his animals at Morrison's, and it will be necessary to relieve them at once. Upon the receipt of this I wish you to concentrate your command immediately at Bradley's, and in advance, report to me when you will be ready to march from that place.

Very respectfully, your most ob't serv't,

E. D. KEYS, Capt. 3d Art., com'g.

The Oregon Standard published a long letter from Father Pandosy, a Catholic priest, who resides among the Indians, and has charge of the Yakima Mission. It purports to give the views of the Indians in regard to the war and causes which induced them to commence hostilities. Father Pandosy kept himself in seclusion, as the whites, believing that he had helped to stir up the troubles and instigate the Indians to violence, entertained no very friendly feelings towards him. His letter conveys from the Indians a defiant message to the whites. They declare that they have been forced into the war by wrongs and outrages, and that they will fight to the last, and "if vanquished, the men who protect the camps will kill all the women and children, and the country will, then be at the white man's disposal." They asserted that they numbered at the beginning of the war, 1050 warriors, that they were expecting 10,000 more in a few days, and if that number should prove insufficient, they could raise many more.

The Oregonian says:

Maj. Gen. Wool, U. S. A., is still at Vancouver. We regret that he health has not permitted him to visit the seat of war as yet, but he is, we are happy to learn, rapidly recovering from his indisposition. Several officers of the army have recently visited the city, among whom were Major Haller, Capt. Wallen, Lieuts. Gracie and Day.

Correspondence between General Wool and Colonel Nesmith.

Colonel Nesmith recently addressed a letter to General Wool, asking artillery and men to manage the same. General Wool in his reply says:

"I have only to say that I have no authority either to employ or to receive volunteers in the U. S. service. I am, therefore, unable to comply with your request. I will, however, observe that, owing to the condition of the United States troops, animals and other requisite supplies necessary to carry on an efficient campaign

AGRICULTURAL.

GRAPE CULTURE AT THE SOUTH.

SIR—Yours of the 31st July was received yesterday evening, inquiring my process in making wine, but I fear this, my answer, will be too late to be useful to you, as my vintage is begun. Warrenton's coming off to-day, Bland's next week; Catawba's are in casks several days ago.

Your grapes being ripe, quite ripe, cut the stems close to the bunch, lay the grapes on a table, in the shade, and pick off the rotten, dry and green berries. Bunches that have only a part, say half of the berries, remaining, should be picked off the stems. This done, crush or mash the berries on the stems, till the skins are all broken. This may be done with the hand, or with a pestle in a tub or trough, taking care that the seed be not broken nor the stems of the grapes bruised materially, and pour all into a vat, press out some juice, a gallon or the like, and try the strength with Beaumie hydrometer for syrups, or that for Epsom salts will do. If the instrument rises eight degrees, twenty-eight ounces of brown sugar may be added to every gallon of juice which is the must for wine. Thus, if the sugar is added after pressing, the sugar expands the juice, and there will be only about 22½ ounces in a gallon; if the instrument rises to nine degrees, add 25 ounces to every gallon; if to ten, 20¾ ounces to a gallon; if to eleven, add 18¾ ounces to every gallon; if to twelve degrees, (the strongest I have ever had,) add 15¾ ounces to every gallon. Such must will raise a nearly laid egg one-eighth or seventh part of its length above the surface.

When your grapes are mashed and in the vat, let it remain there from six to ten hours, according to the heat of the weather, when it will begin to ferment, and when air bubbles rise along the staves of the vat, and begin to rise through the top or cap, draw off the wine from the vat, and press the grapes without delay. The first fall of the press gives much wine, and when it nearly stops running, raise the beam and stir up the cheese loosely, and press again, and again mix all the wine in a vat and add the sugar. Observe, it is best to add something less than the quantity of sugar mentioned above, and more afterward, till you have it of the proper weight, which is known when the hydrometer rises to sixteen degrees, or rather more, say sixteen and one-quarter. If you weigh nearly a gallon of rain water, and observe its weight, and then add a gallon of must, juice and sugar, prepared as above, the must should weigh 12½ per cent. heavier than the water; or, indeed, well or spring water will do to compare with. When your must is mixed and sweetened, pour it into casks, and the scum run out, which should be moderately encouraged by pouring in wine reserved for the purpose. When the froth rises clear and breaks quick, fill in no more to force it to run over, and let the wine subside and cool to a simmer, when lay on some vine leaves over the bung, and fasten them down with some small weight which will yield to the pressure from within, and let off the gas; keep the casks filled to within an inch or an inch and a half of the bung; when the ferment is done, close the bung, and bore a gimlet hole with a spike near the bung, which should be drawn occasionally to let out the air or gas; pour in some wine when necessary till last of October, when taste the wine and try its weight by the hydrometer; if the instrument rise one and a half degrees it will do, or if it rises more, stir up the lees and revive the ferment, as it is too sweet; if the instrument sinks to 0, or nearly so, it will be right to add one or two ounces more of sugar to every gallon of wine, and stir the lees to mix the sugar with the whole mass.

Draw the wine when it becomes clear, in clear, cool, northerly weather, in November or the first of March, into very clear vessels, rinsed with French brandy or boiling wine; the wine is decantered, it should raise the instrument one and a quarter degrees, and sulphur the cask with an inch or two of match, if only one, use the match more freely; if more than one and a quarter, do not use the sulphur. Beware that the wine is drawn free from the lees. This year I drew my wine from tierces into pipes, in June or beginning of July. T. M. CALL.

INDIAN RELICS.—A few days since, while the workmen on the railroad were digging through a mound on the other side of the creek, they came upon interesting relics of a tribe that has probably been strangers to these parts for many years. The articles found were a part of the thigh bone, a very large jaw bone, a copper kettle containing some tobacco, some silver trinkets, rings and ear-bobs, a shell ornament and a silver crucifix. The kettle is of the pattern said to the Indians since a date anterior to the recollection of our oldest Indian traders, by the American Fur Company and by them only; it is very heavy, and of a peculiar construction; being lined with a hard metal, apparently a kettle within a kettle, and so made that opposition traders were never able to procure the same kind of articles, although they spared no expense and tried numerous establishments; their peculiar construction seems to be a secret known only to the factory whence the Fur Company have always procured their supplies.

The crucifix, which is three or four inches long, is of the best of silver, and is evidently a relic of the early Catholic Missionaries, who visited this section as early as the middle of the seventeenth century.

In the neighborhood of this mound there are numerous others—the mode of burial having evidently been to place the body upon the surface of the ground and heap a tumulus over it. From the fact that the Bees and Foxes do not bury in this manner, it is evident that these relics belonged to some tribe occupying this section of country before them—probably the once great and powerful nation of the "Illinois." [Ogawka (Ill.) Spectator.

According to a Calcutta correspondent of the London Times, a Dutch official, selected especially from the Hague, was sent to Japan to make such suggestions to the Japanese as would be acceptable to them, in their negotiations with the United States embassy under Commodore Perry. The Dutch being more familiar with the Japanese character and institutions, on account of their long intercourse with them, know what restrictions it would be necessary to put in the way, to prevent a free commerce with foreign nations, to the injury of the Dutch, and thus, while fully acquiescing with Commodore Perry, in a desire for a treaty of peace and amity with us, with permission to our ships to enter two ports merely for supplies, they studiously deterred us from extending our commercial relations, save through Japanese officers. Even then they were so much trammeled, and so completely at the mercy of the government, that a commercial intercourse, to any extent, was quite out of the question. It is also stated that the Dutch official before alluded to, has, since his arrival in Japan, acted as a kind of foreign Secretary to the imperial government.

The Household Sacifice.

This story of the constable and the cow is told by that inimitable old maid, Selina, in Mrs Stephens' last novel "The Old Homestead."

"Well, as I was a saying, when I was a gal, my father and mother moved from old Connecticut into the Luckawana valley in Pennsylvania, with ten little children, all younger than I was. They had lost everything, and went ont into that dark, piny region to begin life agin.

"Well, they got a patch of wild land, partly on credit, built a log house, and went to work Before the year was ont father died, and we found it hard dragging to get along without crops, and deep in debt. We gave up everything to pay store debts, and should have felt as rich as kings, if we could only have raised what the law allowed us. But we had no barrel of beef and pork, which even the law leaves to a poor family, but we lived on rye and Injun, with a little molasses when we could'nt get milk.

"The law allowed us two pigs and a cow with her calf. Our cow was a grand good critter, capital for milk, and gentle as a lamb—you don't know how the children took to her, and well they might—she more than half enpported them.

"Marm did her best for the children, and I worked as hard as she did, spinning and carding wool, which she wove into cloth on a hand-loom.

"Well, in a year or two, the calf grew into a fine heifer, and we calculated on having milk from her after a little. So we began to fat up the old cow, though I hain't no idea that we should ever have made up our minds to kill her.

"There was some debts, still, but we had given up everything once, and neither marm ner I thought of anybody's coming on us again. So we were prond enough of our two cows, and as long as the children had plenty of milk, never thought of wanting beef, and the old cow might have lived to this time for what I know, if we'd been left to ourselves."

Here Salina's voice became disturbed, and the girls settled themselves in an attitude of profound attention.

"Well, as I was saying, things began to brighten with us, when one day in came the town constable, with a printed writ in his hand.

"He'd found ont that we had one more cow than the law allowed, and came after it.

"I thought poor marm would a-gone crazy, she felt so bad; and no wonder, with all them children, and she a widder. It came hard, I can tell you.

"But the constable was determined, and what could she do but give up. There stood the little children huddled together on the hearth, crying as if their hearts were broke, at the bare thought of having the cow drove off, and there was poor marm, with her apren up to her face, a-sobbing so pitiful!

"I couldn't stand it; my heart rose like a yeasting of bread; I determined that them children and that hard-working woman should have enough to eat, constable or no constable.

"'Wait,' says I to the constable, 'till I go and drive up the cow; she's hard to find.'

"He sat down. Marm and the oblidren began to sob and cry again. I tell you, gals, it was cruel as the grave.

"I went to the wood-pile and took the axe from between two logs. Across the clearing and just in the edge of the woods I saw the old cow and heifer browsing on the undergrowth. The old cow had a bell on and every tinkle as she moved her head went to my heart. I had to think of marm and the children before I could get conrage to go on, and with that to encourage me, I ebook and trembled, like a murderer, all the way across the clearing.

"The old cow and the heifer were close by each nther, browsing on the sweet birch undergrowth that grew thick there. When I came up they both stopped and stood looking at me with their great earnest eyes, so wishfully, as if they wondered which I was after."

Here Salina dashed a hand across her eyes, and the color rushed into her face, as if she were opposing a pressure of tears with great bravery.

"It was enough to break any one's heart to see that old cow, with the birch twigs in her mouth, coming toward me so innocent. She thought—poor old critter—that I'd come to milk her; but instead of the milk-pail I had that axe in my hand. She could'nt a-known what it meant, and yet, as true as I live, it seemed as if she did.

"There she stood, looking in my face, wondering, I hain't no donbt, why I did'nt sit down on a log as nanal, and fix my pail—and there I stood, trembling, before the poor dumb animal, ready to fall down on my knees and ask pardon for my cruel thonghts, and there was the heifer looking on us both—ob, gals, gals, I hope none of you will ever have to go through a thing like that."

The girls thus addressed were very still, and a sob or two was just heard while the tears leaped like hail-stones down Salina's cheeks.

"My heart misgive me—I wnuld'nt a done it. Those great innocent eyes seemed as if they were human; I grew so weak that the axe almost fell. I turned to go back ready to starve or anything rather than look that animal in the face again with the axe in my hand. Yes, I turned away, but there half across the clearing was the constable with the writ flying ont in his hand. My blood rose—I thought of the children with nothing to eat—I don't know what I did'nt think of. He was walking fast, I turned—the cow was right before me. Oh, girls, there she stood so quiet, obewing the green birch leaves, I was like a baby, the axe would'nt rise from the ground, I could not dodt.

"He called out, I heard his step in the nnderbrush. Then my strength flew back. I was wild—strong as a lion, bnt my eyes seemed hot with sparks of fire. I shnt them, the axe swung back—a crash, a deep wild bellow, and she fell like a log. I had struck in the white star on her forehead. When I opened my eyes she was looking at me, and so her eyes stiffened in their film. I had to hold myself up by the axe-belve with both hands. It seemed to me as if I was dying too.

"'What have you been about, where is the cow?' said the constable, in a passion, as he came up.

"'There,' said I, pointing to the poor murdered critter with my finger, 'the law, you say, won't allow us two cows, bnt it does give us a barrel of beef. This is our beef—touch it if you dare!'

"He skulked away and I fell down on my knees by the poor critter my own hands had killed. It seemed as if my heart would break! There she lay with the fresh leeves in her month, so still, and there stood the heifer looking at me steadily as if she wanted to speak, and I could'nt make her understand why it had to be done. Oh, gals, gals, it was tough!"

AN INCIDENT THAT BEARS ITS OWN COMMENT. Isaac, a body servant of Gen. Quitman, arrived home a few days since. Shortly after the General reached Washington city, Isaac expressed a great desire to return home to Mississippi. Upon being pressed for his reasons for so sudden a wish, he told his master that he had been repeatedly beset by two white men from Boston who urged him to accept their aid to run away from his master. He stated that he was afraid he would be kidnapped into freedom, as he believed the two men were capable of any atrocity. The General gave Isaac a pass with which he safely reached home to his infinite satisfaction. [Natchez Free Trader.

THE CENTRAL AMERICAN QUESTION.—We publish in another colnmn, says the Baltimore Sun, the closing letters of the correspondence between Mr. Buchanan as the representetive of the United States, and Earl Clarendon on the part of the British Government. This correspondence fully sustains the sentiments of the President's message, and will confirm the people of the United States in the conviction that Great Britain is trifling with the plain language and purport of the treaty, for the deliberate purpose of maintaining her own interests in Central America, to the exclusion of the United States.

The subterfuge which affects only a prospective application of the treaty is unworthy of the British Government, and entirely inexousable. If it was a reserved policy at the time the treaty was made and ratified, it only betrays the uncandid nature of the diplomatic intercourse of Great Britain, and throws into relief the frank and honest spirit and design of that of the United States. The arguments of Lord Clarendon do not reach the quality of respectable sophisms. And in view of the very latter of the treaty, can only be esteamed as evasions of the obligations which it distinctly imposes.

Milly Francis, the Indian Maiden.

The story of Pocahontas is familiar to every American and English child who reads a book, because of the noble deed she performed, and because of the romance of her after life. But we presume few have heard the name of Milly Francis, though she displayed the same heroism, magnanimity and tenderness of feeling.

Her father was denominated a prophet among the Seminoles, but was also a chief and warrior, and a man of great renown among his people. In the war of 1812, he joined the British forces, and was conspicuous in several engagements, and a terror to all who heard his name, among Americans. He at one time visited England, and a London paper said in noticing his arrival:

"The double sound of a trumpet announced the approach of the patriot Francis, who fought so gloriously in our cause in America. He was dressed in a most splendid suit of red and gold, and by his side he wore a tomahawk, mounted in gold."

These things were of course given him by his English friends, as Indians were not accustomed to dress in this manner among themselves; and something of his princely bearing and accomplished manners may have been acquired by his association with English officers, but his noble form and fine countenance he obtained from nature herself.

He had two daughters, who are said by American historians to have been accomplished young ladies, who could speak English with remarkable fluency, as could all the family, except the mother, who began too late in life to succeed in learning a foreign tongue.

During the war, all who were ranged upon one side were of course considered enemies to all who were upon the other side, and the country was full of soldiers and military stations, open at all times to attack. At one time a soldier nemed Dnnoan M. Krimner, stationed at Fort Gadsden, near Milledgeville, Ga., went forth upon a fishing excursion and lost his way in the woods. For several days he wendered about in the wilderness and at length was found by a party of Indians who were commanded by the prophet Francis. He was a soldier, and by the rules of war a prisoner, and by the Indian code of warfare, doomed to die. The ordinary preparations were made and the victim was bound to the stake, aronnd which faggots were piled that were soon to be kindled to consume him.

Bnt Milly, the youngest daughter of the chief, looked on in sadness. Why she should have been so much more grieved at such a sight now than ever before, we do not know. It could not be the first time she had witnessed death at the stake, bnt there had been no recent battle, and therefore none of the excitement which would attand the cospture of prisoners of war on ordinary occasions, or perhaps it coomed to her a more ornal deed. Her people had received no recent injury, and he who was to suffer was not known to have perpetrated any particular act of oppression or outrage. It might be imagined that some particular interest had been awakened in bor heart toward him, but after circumstances prove this not to have been the case. A sense of justice and sympathy for suffering alone prompted her, when the torch was about to be lighted, to throw herself between the prisoner and the fatal knife which was to slay him before the fire was kindled, and declared that she, too, would die if he were not spared.

All were astonished at so unexpected an act, for not a word had been before spoken to betray her intentions, and the executioner paused as if paralyzed. Seeing there was hope, she threw herself at her father's feet and implored his mercy.

The obleftain looked long and intently upon her face, which was very beautiful, and in silence listened to the tones of her voice, which were full of anguish, and was melted from his fierce anger to yield to the passionate entreaties of his child. The victim was released, and while he remained among his captors was treated with the utmost kindness, and from Milly received many proofs of the noble and generous spirit she had at first manifested in offering herself a sacrifice for the life of a stranger and an enemy.

A few days afterwards, Mr. Krimner was rescued by a party of Spaniards, and soon returned to his friends and his duties as an American soldier.

Soon after this the American army was reinforced, and very efficient measures taken to destroy the Indian and Spanish towns along the frontier. "They marched," saye the historian, "upon St. Mark's, a feeble town with a Spanish garrison, which surrendered without firing a gun." Among the prisoners who thus almost passively fell into the hands of the enemy, were the prophet Francis and his family. The principles of honor, gratitude and humanity, would prompt us to expect that these would at least be spared an ignominious death, after the magnanimity which had been shown by them. But it is unblushingly recorded that "Francis and another chief were hung without trial and ceremony." They had probably shed much blood, and had long rung the war-whoop through the wilderness, and fearlessly brandished the war-club, but it was in self-defence. It might, and probably would have been bad policy to permit the proud chieftains to go on free again, chafing with a sense of the wrongs they had experienced, and would continue to experience, but it would seem to us that some way should have been devised other than to hang the father of Milly Francis, who had saved the life of an American soldier, and without exacting from him any promise as to his future course as their friend or enemy, and delivered him up, to return to his poet and take up arms against them.

The Indian chief was decoyed on board an American schooner, and his eldest daughter, supposing it to be a British vessel, soon came near in her light canoe, but on discovering her mistake, quickly obanged the dip of her oar and glided away. The younger was made prisoner with her father, and it was soon known that she was the heroic girl who had saved the life of Dnncan M. Krimner. Her beauty as well as her heroism made her the object of attraction, and the officers denominated her the "modern Pocahontas," and bestowed upon her the most flattering attention. If she had married an American, and come among her husband's friends as the savior of his life, she might have become as famous in history as the Virginian damsel, and her postarity have been proud to owe their origin to the daughter of an Indian chief. Bnt when the young soldier offered the maiden his hand in gratitude for having saved his life, she refused. She did not consider this a proper consideration upon which to found such a union, and she did not wish to become the wife or daughter of a people who had murdered her father in cold blood. She said, too, she had only performed her duty and would have done the same for any other. She could not understand the policy—she only knew that she and her proud father had been magnenimous and merciful, and that their family were now loaded with calamity and disgrace. So the mother and daughter turned mournfully away, and sought again the solitude of the wilderness, where their names have gone out in darkness, like so many that should have been preserved in brightness besides those whose only glory was gained in their destruction, and who have grown rich on the soil watered by their blood.

LOSS OF AN ELEPHANT.—The steamship Robert Swen, which arrived yesterday from Baltimore, experienced heavy gales on the passage, and was compelled to put into Norfolk to refit. She left Norfolk on Friday week and again encountered a gale which continued up to Saturday evening. She had on board four or five elephants, belonging to the menagerie of Robinson and Eldred, which were greatly distressed by the rough weather and the rolling of the ship; and one of them, a celebrated animal, known as Monterume, on Saturday, became very violent and ungovernable, and about midnight fell overboad, when thirty miles from land, and was lost. He was valued at $4,000, and we believe was insured.—[Charleston Mercury.

The Memphis Appeal says:

Memphis presents a fearful record of crime for the past year. From the recollection of the present moment, we can call to mind nine murders that have been committed in this city within one year, and we think, from present prospects, that none of the murderers will suffer much punishment by law for their deeds.

SHARP SHOOTING.—An Eastern paper having remarked that "it is only twenty-two years since the first log cabin was erected in Burlington, Iowa, and it now contains ten thousand inhabitants," a western paper observes that this is a specimen of a pretty populous cabin.

Catacomba in the Mount of Olives.

"And his feet shall stand in that day upon the Mount of Olives, which is before Jernsalem on the east, and the Mount of Olives shall cleave in the midst thereof toward the east and toward the west, and there shall be a very great valley.....It shall be one day which shall be known to the Lord.....And the Lord shall be king over all the earth: in that day shall there be one Lord, and his name one."—Zech. xiv. 4, 7.

It is impossible for the student of Holy Scripture to visit Palestine without being struck with the forcible illnstrations which it furnishes, at almost every step, of God's written word; and among the many passages thus brought home to the imagination with all the power of reality, is that which has been quoted above.

On a fine bright day during that season of the year which in Jerusalem is most favorable for exploring (viz: the winter or rainy season,) I was invited, early in 1816, by a friend well acquainted with the environs, to visit the catacombs in the Mount of Olives. So few travellers mention them, that my curiosity was excited; and accompanied by a party of young people, I started in search of these almost unknown caverns. We were each provided with twisted English tapers, and our friend who acted as guide, with a small ball of twine.

The dignified beauty of the scenery, the abundance of association which it supplied, and the glorious anticipations of its coming destiny, seemed to inspire some of us with emotions of deep and mysterious pleasure, while the freshness of the atmosphere, and the rich display of wild flowers, imparted elasticity and gladness to the junior members of the party, who, some mounted, and some on foot, hurried forward with joyous laugh as they rivelled each other in the pursuit or possession of some new plant. When we had ascended the mount about half way, our guide requested us to help him in his search for a hole in the ground, as such was the entrance to the mysterious caverns. While thus employed, he amused himself in exciting our alarm by saying that some time previously, three Jews had entered the catacombs, and having been watched by a Mussulmen, their egress had been rendered impossible by his placing a large stone to exclude the daylight, so that only after many days was their horrible position discovered, when they were found dead not far within the entrance.

This narrative being true, produced a sudden change of feeling in the party. The younger ones turned pale, and declined the undertaking, preferring to remain with the armed native servant, who, as a guard, was to wait outside with the animals. Thus, when the aperture was found, only our guide and two others ventured in. This aperture is a natural opening formed by the decay and falling in of a part of the roof, and is just large enough to easily admit one adventurer at a time, while the crumbled wall and large stones formed a rude kind of staircase by which, clinging with hands and feet, we descended into the darkness below.

Feeling ourselves on firm ground, we lit our tapers and looked aronnd; we were in a circular chamber, out of which there appeared at first no means of egress except by the roof again, but as our sight adapted itself to the obscurity, we observed that all around the floor of this chamber were low arched passages, so low and so narrow as only just to admit us singly, as one after the other we crept through the one selected on hands and knees, holding our tapers as well as we could. Happily the passage was only a few feet long, and soon emerging thence, we stood upright in a long narrow winding corridor, the low ceiling of which we could mark with the smoke of our tapers. Old dates and strange characters were there in great variety, bnt the only smoke written autograph which I can now recall to mind was that of "John Cierke, 1794."

On either wall of this corridor, on the floor, were low arched recesses, quite near together, which once had contained the dead, long since returned to dust. From this corridor branched others; we selected one, and from it again branched others, all apperently alike, appropriated to the long-forgotten dead. Thus on we went till our twine failed, then remembering the sad stories told of the catacombs at Rome, we did not proceed; but silent and thoughtful, through this wilderness of sepulchres we retraced our steps to the round chamber.

Here for a few momente we paused to think on the mysteries of this remarkable mountain. We had only explored one path, and that not to a great distance—where did the others lead?—all perhaps to similar scenes, and through grovee of sleeping dust, awaiting that day when He shall appear again in like manner as He ascended from the said Mount Olives (Acts, i. 11, 12), who shall cleave the Mount asunder and reveal to its awakened inmates the dawn of the resurrection. Imagination attempts to picture these corridors suddenly filled to overflowing with mortals who have put on immortality. The mountain breaks with its burden (Zech. xiv. 4), groans and bursts asunder, while, myriads rise to meet their Lord!

But then by what age or people have these caverns been filled? The answer may produce a sad reverse to the solemn picture. Alas, that question cannot be satisfactorily answered, for most travelers have assigned them originally to the worship of Ashtaroth in the days of Solomon, while they were probably afterwards used by repentent Israel, and converted into a burying place for their dead.* Whatever may be their history, they furnish much profitable reflection, and much illustration of Scripture; and to my own mind, as I have hinted, they furnish a literal interpretation to the passage quoted above, standing as it does in connexion with the events of the latter days.

A REMARKABLE CASE OF ASSAULT.—The Burlington (Vt.) Free Press has the following:

John Chout, President Pierce's Postmaster at Underhill Centre, was arrested on the 27th ult., and brought before Justice Hollerbeck, charged with assault and battery on his daughter, a young lady of 30 years of age. The offence committed by the young lady, for which she was beaten by her father, as appeared before the court, was the reading of Know-Nothing papers. He pleaded guilty, and was fined four dollars and costs.

New Principle! No Poison!

Rhodes' Fever and Ague Cure,

OR ANTIDOTE TO MALARIA,

FOR THE PREVENTION AND CURE OF

Fever and Ague, or Chill and Fever, Dumb Ague, and other Intermittent and Remittent Fevers; also of Bilious Fevers, accompanied by Typhoid Symptoms; Typhoid Fever, Yellow Fever, Ship and Jail Fever, General Debility, Night Sweats, and all other forms of disease

WHICH HAVE A COMMON ORIGIN IN

MALARIA OR MIASMA.

This subtle atmospheric poison, which at certain seasons is unavoidably inhaled at every breath, is the same in character wherever it exists—north, south, east or west—and will everywhere yield to this newly-discovered ANTIDOTE, which neutralises the poison, completely purifies the system, and thus entirely removes all the causes of disease.

The proprietor distinctly claims these extraordinary results from its use:

It will protect any resident or traveler, even in the most sickly or swampy localities, from any ague or bilious disease whatever, or any injury from constantly inhaling Malaria or Miasma.

It will instantly check the ague in persons who have suffered for any length of time, from ONE DAY TO TWENTY YEARS, so that they need never have ANOTHER CHILL, by continuing its use according to directions.

It will immediately relieve all the distressing results of bilious or ague diseases, such as general debility, night sweats, etc. The patient at once begins to recover appetite and strength, and continues until a permanent and radical cure is effected. And as a proof that it is

Payment to be made in equal pieces of each term. Board, including lodging, washing, lights and fuel, can be procured in the village and immediate neighborhood at ten dollars per month. Students will be received at any time during the session, and will be charged only from the time of their entrance to the end of the term. We would however, respectfully urge all parents or guardians who design placing their daughters or wards in the institution, to do so at their earliest convenience, as it will tend much to the individual interest of the pupils, and the general prosperity of the school, facilitating, as it will, a proper arrangement of the various classes in their respective branches of study.

School books, stationery, &c., may be had at any of the various stores in the village at the usual rates.

Reports will be sent to parents and guardians quarterly, in which will be stated the health, improvement, social and moral deportment of their daughters or wards, with such other information as may be deemed important.

As the design of the Faculty is to render the instruction thorough, and lay the foundation of a substantial education, no young lady will be permitted to rank higher than her attainments will justify, nntil in her, nor to pass into another department in the course of instruction without having made sufficient proficiency in the preceding studies.

The government of the school is to be understood as that of authority—though parental and mild, yet decided and firm. The institution, in a religious point of view will be conducted without reference to sectarian influence.

Pupils will be required to attend church at least once on the Sabbath, and recite a Bible lesson on each Monday morning.

The scholastic year, embracing ten months, will be divided into two equal terms of five months, one immediately succeeding the other.

The first session commencing on the first Wednesday in October, and closing the last week in February; the second session commencing on the first Wednesday in March, and closing the last week in July. At which time the annual examination will be held, and the usual rewards and honors conferred. The vacation will embrace the months of August and September.

All applications for admission of pupils, &c., to be made to the president of the College.

PREMIUM UNDULATORY CORN AND FLOURING

MILLS,

French Burr Stone, and each Burr in one solid block.

Seven different sizes of these mills are manufactured adapted to all the various motive powers used or known in milling. The burrs of the smallest size are fourteen inches in diameter, and the largest size are three feet; which last size will grind a greater quantity in any given time than any other mill known. These mills range in prices from one to five hundred dollars apiece, and will grind from four to seventy-five bushels to the hour, according to the diameter of burr, power applied and velocity given.

The mill that took the premium at the Crystal Palace, New York, was the smallest size (14 inches) and ground a bushel of corn into one meal in four and a half minutes. Those desiring such mills can be supplied by addressing the patentee and proprietor,

CENTENARY COLLEGE OF LOUISIANA.

Centenary College of Louisiana is located in Jackson, La., 12 miles east of Bayou Sara. Its location is beautiful, retired and healthy. It has commodious buildings, a large library, a good chemical and philosophical apparatus, a well selected mineralogical and geological cabinet, and a full Board of Instruction.

As this section of the South west is but poorly provided with academies and preparatory schools, there is connected with the College a Preparatory Department, in which all necessary instruction may be received for entering College proper.

The College is now in a highly prosperous condition, and under the management of the present Board of Trustees and Faculty it promises permanency and extensive usefulness.

EDUCATION.

The Committee on Education have had little time to obtain information respecting the general interests of this great auxilinry of civilization and religion, and less time to digest any plan for more successful efforts to promote it. The Methodist Church has ever been the zealous patron of education; and, considering the years of her history, has accomplished more towards elevating and instructing the masses than any other Christian Church. How wisely she has acted in multiplying academies and colleges which depend upon capricious patronage, we do not undertake to decide. Her zeal has been shown in their establishment, and her moral force, rightly applied, can sustain them.

We have, in some instances, failed; and local hindrances have obstructed our movements. But these failures are not indications of our inability to project or sustain institutions of learning. No period of our history has been so favorable for our entering with increased vigor and purpose upon a more enlarged and general scheme of education than the present. Our colleges are training men and women who look to teaching as the business of life, and we enjoy the confidence and share the liberality of the people of the State. We are not seeking to monopolize the educational interests of the State, but we think that our institutions of learning should afford ample means of education—thorough education. We entertain no fear for our success if but qualified teachers are employed, and the internal regulations of our schools and colleges is such as shall obviate the lack of domestic training, the necessity of which is felt and the absence of which is feared by those who commit the training of their sons and daughters to strangers. The demand for thorough education is growing in the fullness of its importance over the State, and while our Legislature is providing for the intellectual training of the people, the Church must make provision, not for these only, but for the utmost wants of those whose tastes and whose circumstances point them to the most thorough scholarship. We have not had time to gather about our colleges the renown of centuries, or to fit our graduates to fill in full maturity places of State or national distinction; but we have had time to test the capacity of our citizens for intellectual culture, and to bring to bear upon our youth, at our own firesides, the appliances which have wrought greatness out of minds not more gifted or ambitious than theirs.

Our climate opposes no barrier to laborious study; our country controls wealth enough; and we are lacking in no element necessary to successful competition with the oldest institutions in the Union. We entertain no hostility to Northern colleges; we cater to no sectional prejudices. Indeed, we utter no word of censure against those who send their sons or daughters to distant institutions. It should be our business to furnish the facilities for the most liberal education at home, thoroughly convinced that the intelligence and economy of the people will check the needless alienation of their sons and daughters from Southern sentiments and Southern homes. And we cannot hope to do this until facts and figures convince them that mind may grow as mighty and understanding as profound at Centenary or Oxford as at Cambridge or Yale—at Sharon as at Troy.

We may chide as we will the prejudice which sends our youth from home to be educated, chiding cannot check it; sectional prejudice cannot check it. Our sons and our daughters must be educated; and if Southern institutions do not furnish the appliances our patronage will go to the North. We can check this vast wealth which goes annually to endow other colleges, but it can only be done by that commendable rivalry which furnishes at home that for which men go abroad. And this we are endeavoring to do—not, we fear, with the individual yet united effort which the great work is worth, but with an indifference which transfers to the few the labor which ought to be performed by all.

Centenary College of Louisiana, under the joint patronage of Louisiana and Mississippi, is now entering the eleventh year of its history. It is doing a noble work, but its patronage is far too small, its friends are too few, its interests are not felt enough by us. We seem not to have realized the great truth that this institution, if properly supported, is to be the most successful agent we can yet employ for bringing Catholicism and Protestantism into not unfriendly contact, and thus disabusing the minds of the Creoles of Louisiana of their hereditary prejudices. We seem to forget that the Church is here fashioning the men of the future; we seem to overlook the fact that we are annually investing in moral wealth and intelligence capital by which the Bible and Christianity shall yet control the State. This institution ought to be endowed. Its location is eligible, situated in one of the most healthful and wealthy districts of Louisiana. It has numbered at no time within the last five years less than 230 students. At present we have employed in it a full faculty, giving instruction in all the departments of education taught in the best colleges in the Union. A contract has been entered into for the speedy erection of the centre building, which is to contain a chapel, recitation rooms and society halls, and $26,000 has already been secured towards defraying the expense. Of this amount the Legislature of Louisiana, at its last session, appropriated $10,000. To the agent, Rev. L. Campbell, appointed a year ago by this Conference, we are mainly indebted for this appropriation.

Sharon Female College has long been under our patronage, and, although its fortunes have been various, we have never felt like faltering in our efforts to sustain it. It is at present under the management of the Rev. J. W. Shelton, of whose character and ability in placing it in its rightful position the trustees speak in terms of highest commendation, and whose reappointment to its presidency they most earnestly request.

Within the past few months Fayette Female Academy came under the control of the Quarterly Conference of the Colo's Creek Circuit. Rev. J. L. Forsyth was elected Principal, and the school went into operation on the 1st of October. We have also a Methodist school at Clinton, La., under the control of Mrs. Wall; another at Jackson, La., under the control of Rev. B. Jones, once a prominent member of this Conference; one at Natchez, under the control of Rev. S. W. Speer, D. D.; and one at Port Gibson, under the control of Rev. T. H. Capers. These, however, are not enough to meet the growing demand of the times, nor are they as extensively patronized by the Church as they deserve to be.

It is matter of regret to your committee that the plan of district male schools, proposed to and adopted by this Conference some years ago, was permitted to fail without the test of experiment; and we think that some such system as that proposed of establishing district schools, or patronizing those in existence using the text-books of Centenary College and conforming the course of study to that of that institution, ought to be adopted. We are fully convinced that it is better that the preparatory processes for entering college should take place under the more immediate guardianship of parents; and to do this properly, men of education and moral worth must be employed.

Our friends in the neighborhood of the Castillion Springs, in Holmes county, have tendered us the building in that very favorable locality as the seat of a district school. Feeling assured of the importance of establishing a school in that locality:

Resolved, That we pledge our influence in securing the success of that institution, and recommend it to the patronage of the people.

We propose for your adoption the following resolution:

Resolved, That we will patronize, and by all just means promote the patronage and success of those institutions of learning which are directly or indirectly under the control of the M. E. Church, South, within our own bounds.

We also recommend that Rev. J. C. Miller be appointed President of Centenary College, and Rev. A. G. Miller Principal of Preparatory Department; that Rev. J. W. Shelton be appointed President of Sharon Female College, Rev. T. C. Thornton President of Madison College, and Rev. J. M. Pugh Professor of Mathematics in the same institution; and that Rev. S. W. Speer, D. D., be appointed President of Wilmarth Female College.

W. H. WATKINS, Chairman.

MISSIONARY REPORT.

We cannot be induced to review the history of this great means of the world's regeneration, nor can we discern the future with distinctness enough to map the fields of its successes or its failures. Still we cannot pass unimproved an occasion like this, when attention is thrust upon us, to pledge each other to increased prayerfulness and labor as part of our contribution to the general work. Our mission field is a wide one. We send the gospel to the poor, irrespective of complexion or character, and find that God vindicates his own truth by making it powerful to save the believing. Indeed, by common consent, this department of evangelical labor seems to be committed to us. This, it is probable, is owing to the structure of our government, the number of our ministers and their special adaptation to the work.

Nor is our sphere narrowed to the limits of civilization. We occupy some territory in the Empire of China. Our missionaries there have entered upon the work of preparation, and all of our information confirms us in the judgment that in sending Bro. J. W. Lambuth and his wife to China, we acted wisely. Both are young, intelligent, self-sacrificing and religious. Our prayers and our hands shall sustain them.

The field, however, which to us seems most inviting, and which in our judgment demands of the moral might of the Church, presses us on all sides. Experience has demonstrated to the fullest conviction of intelligent planters the utility of moral and religious training among their slaves, and the era when relative responsibilities are felt is at hand. The demand for suitable men to occupy this important department of our work is greater than the supply. There are at present within our bounds twenty-five missions exclusively among the people of color, and eight among white and colored.

These are exclusive of colored charges in circuits and stations, and in these we have over 1,000 whites and over 6,000 colored members.

The Church has reason to be thankful and diligent. W. H. WATKINS, Sec'y.

THE BOOK CONCERN.

Your committee beg leave to report their conviction that the present is a time requiring no small diligence on our part in spreading far and wide our own books. In times of quiet we should prepare for the contest. The present condition of our country is peculiarly inviting.

We are not overrun by infidelity in its open rebellion against God; but while iniquity abounds, men acknowledge His right to rule and visit on man his sins. We are not overrun with new "isms"—the strongholds in which the powers of darkness secure their victims against the light of truth.

While we are free from these evils and rejoice in this liberty, wherewith God hath made us free, we have the privilege of knowing that the itinerant, self-sacrificing man of God, who came with the pioneer when these our cities, towns and smiling fields were dense forests, the abode of wild beasts and savage men—the itinerant, with his Bible and hymn book, and Discipline, taught our hardy sires the hopes and blessings of Christianity—taught them the Bible, and the religion of the Bible, in the language of purity and simplicity; and the father and the mother, by the wayside as well as in the social circle, taught their children and childrens' children the same blessed gospel; and now a vast multitude of them, their descendants and neighbors, stretch out their hands to us for the bread of life. Shall we refuse it? Can we deny them? Many of them are surrounded by subtle foes, who would seduce them from their steadfastness. We must afford them the means of defence, or they and their little ones will fall by an enemy.

Again, we must not only care for the fold, but must seek the lost sheep of the house of Israel and restore them to the Good Shepherd. We must become aggressive to carry out the spirit of Methodism. We need lights to shine in the dark places of the world. Men's minds are aroused to thought everywhere and on all subjects, and we must assist in giving direction to thought, or it will be directed by others into other channels. Are we not under obligation, then, to avail ourselves of the help afforded by books as the very best aid to the living ministry in teaching the way of life?

We profess by our relation to the Church to teach the way of God in truth. Then, without any want of charity for other evangelical Christians, may we not and ought we not to strive to win and secure every one and every influence to the cause we honor and advocate; and while we love those who differ with us, be provoked by them to love and good works?

We should avail ourselves of every facility for supplying as cheap and attractive a religious literature as any society in the land. We must compete with other societies and denominations in style and cheapness, or lose ground.

Let us arouse ourselves, then, brethren, not only to correct any evil we see or think we see in those who follow not with us, but more particularly that we may assist in driving off and keeping out the common enemy. We must compete with a depraved, licentious press, which is deluging our land with poisonous trash, and hushing to silence the convictions of awakened consciences, and lulling to the sleep of death others who might be bright and shining lights in Messiah's Kingdom—who might else lift the standard of the cross to the multitudes whom they now lead to perdition.

We must keep out infidelity and drive back the powers of darkness, and introduce the light of the glorious gospel of the Son of God, and establish God's Kingdom in the earth.

The report of our book agents shows the progress we are making in manufacturing and affording facilities for the supply of our wants. We hope the time is not far distant when our establishment will be able to afford such cheap books and provide them to the preachers and others with so much promptness as to cause us to fear no competition.

Respectfully submitted,
W. P. BARTON,
J. MACLENAN.

Your committee offer for adoption by the Conference the following resolutions:

Resolved, That our young but promising and vigorous Book Concern ought to be sustained.

Resolved, That, so far as consistent with our other duties, opportunities and abilities, we will energetically engage ourselves, individually, in spreading far and wide the publications of our own concern among our entire people and congregations.

W. P. BARTON,
J. MACLEMAN,
J. L. FORSYTH.

QUARTERLY REVIEW—HOME CIRCLE.

As this is a reading age, it is the duty of the Church to supply the world with a pure literature. As it is the age for periodical reading, it is certainly the duty of the Church to publish such periodicals as will pay for reading them—periodicals calculated to instruct, improve and elevate society; and we rejoice to believe that in our Church we have such periodicals.

We regard it as the duty of every preacher to exert himself to procure subscribers for our periodicals, and see that every family in his charge takes at least one of them. And surely from the Quarterly down to the Sunday School Visitor any family, however poor, might take one, and pay for it, too.

From documents submitted and the report of the agent, Dr. Stevenson, we learn that the circulation of the Quarterly Review is not sufficient to sustain it. Is not this a burning shame? Only think, that in the rich and intelligent South, and in the M. E. Church, South, of 6,451 local and traveling preachers, and 428,511 white members, with its hundreds of millions of property, one Quarterly Review, ably edited, with a corps of able and intelligent contributors, and always freighted with matter for thought and improvement—matter well calculated to interest a reading and thinking and progressive age, whether religious or not, is not and cannot be sustained—does not receive patronage enough to sustain it! Can we longer boast of our intelligence, our liberality, while this is the case?

We do verily believe that every preacher ought to take the work and exert himself to get at least one subscriber. This would give it a list of 12,902 subscribers. Then it would live.

Resolved, That we believe the circulation and patronage of our Review ought to be increased; and that we urge every preacher in this Conference to interest himself to procure subscribers to it during the ensuing year.

We regret to learn that the Home Circle and Sunday School Visitor have not received such patronage this year as we believe they merit, nor sufficient to support themselves. Ought this to be the case? We believe that every one of you will say no. What, then, are we to do? What will we do? Do? Why, go to work in good earnest. Let every preacher resolve that he will get ten subscribers for the Home Circle, and one hundred for the Sunday School Visitor, and the difficulties will vanish.

These periodicals are intended to fill a special place among our people. The former for the ladies, the latter for the children and youth, and ought to have an increased patronage and circulation.

Resolved, That we will exert ourselves to increase the patronage of the Home Circle and Sunday School Visitor.

We are pleased to learn that the other periodicals of our Church are all on safe footing and doing well.

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

The importance of sustaining a Protestant and Methodist paper in New Orleans is so apparent that we need not stop to argue it with you. It is believed that such a paper as the New Orleans Christian Advocate is will do more good for these causes there than in any other city in the Southwest. We ought, therefore, to exert ourselves to sustain this paper. The only way to do this is to procure new paying subscribers and collecting old accounts.

We regret to learn that the receipts of the year ending November 1, 1855, did not by $1,713 73 pay the expenses of the office. The amounts due on subscriptions up to the above date was $13,500, while only $6,526 16 were collected; leaving the sum of $6,973 84 due on subscriptions for one year!

Is not this sufficient to embarrass the concern? Can it live at such rates? Verily we believe the only safe plan for the publishing committee to pursue is to adopt the cash system. If they do not, we fear the consequences. Will not the preachers exert themselves to collect the amounts due the N. O. C. Advocate in their respective charges, that when the next report from the Publishing Committee is laid before us we may learn that all embarrassments are removed?

Resolved, That we believe the New Orleans Christian Advocate is doing a good work for Protestantism and Methodism in New Orleans and the great Southwest, and that we will help to sustain it.

Resolved, That we suggest to the Publishing Committee that, in our opinion, it will be to the pecuniary interest of the paper to adopt the cash system.

H. H. MONTGOMERY, Chairman.

BIBLE CAUSE.

The report of the Committee on the Bible Cause is as follows: Your Committee have had the subject under consideration, but do not consider it important to set forth its claims or argue its importance, as the members of the Conference are all Bible readers. Your committee look upon the Bible as the only safe basis of all true religion, and as the only sure foundation of moral obligation, and the great dispenser of life and liberty. It is through the Bible, attended by the Holy Spirit, the soul is to be converted, enlightened, purified and prepared for heaven.

Dear Brethren, though the publication and circulation of the Bible is of the first importance, yet we as a State and as a Conference have done comparatively little. The receipts of the American Bible Society show that only $1,450. 38 were collected last year, ending May 10, 1855. Your committee have received reports from only three circuits, embracing small sums. In view of the importance of the subject we should wake up and go to work.

In view of the fact that there is one of the Secretaries of the American Bible Society present, and desires to address the Conference, and as he has furnished us with a number of copies of the reports of the American Bible Society, which the preachers can obtain without money and without price, we shall make this report brief.

In conclusion, we submit the following resolutions:

Resolved, That we still cherish entire confidence in the American Bible Society as an institution worthy of our confidence and support.

Resolved, That we will receive and aid its accredited agents.

That each preacher having charge of a circuit and station be required some time during the year to take up a collection in aid of this noble institution.

Respectfully submitted,
D. M. WIGGINS,
H. J. BOOTH,
J. Y. GRIFFING.

TRACT CAUSE.

In the providence of God, the printing press has arisen to great efficiency and power, either for good or for evil. It has been made greatly to minister to vice and immorality; but may be made, and, in truth, is made, to minister with equal force in the cause of virtue and religion.

We rejoice that recently the efficiency of the press has been brought into co-operation with the ministry of the gospel, in the distribution of a pure and sanctified literature over the land.

The book and tract enterprise is a most powerful auxilinry of the gospel, and deserves the countenance and support of all good and pious men. Therefore—

Resolved, That, as a Conference, and as ministers of Christ, we will give the Book and Tract Agent for this Conference our support and assistance fully and readily in all his labors among us.

JAMES A. GODFREY.

SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

Your committee most earnestly recommend to the members of this Conference increased attention to this institution, which we regard as the greatest and most efficient of all the auxiliaries of the gospel of Christ. We do also suggest to the preachers the importance of preaching to all their congregations, at least once a year, the subject of Sunday Schools or religious instruction; that they organize schools wherever ten children can be collected; that they take up collections for their benefit, that they may be furnished with books and Sunday School Visitors.

Resolved, That we highly appreciate the Sunday School Visitor, as an excellent auxiliary in advancing the interests of the Sabbath School cause.

Resolved, That we acknowledge with gratitude the indefatigable and successful labors of our book and tract editor in furnishing the Church with an excellent supply of Sunday School books. We recommend them to our people.

J. L. FORSYTH,
J. T. DEW,
R. T. JONES.

VIRGINIA CONFERENCE APPOINTMENTS.

This Conference held a very protracted session at Petersburg, Bishop Andrew presiding. The Richmond Advocate says:

"After a protracted and laborious session, of three weeks, our Conference closed on Wednesday afternoon, Dec. 19. Its length was nearly equal to a General Conference of the whole Church. The usual and proper business of the body might have been comprised within half the time.

The membership of the Church, as copied from the Secretary's report, stands as follows: Local preachers, 184; probationers in the Church, 2,954; Church members, not including probationers—whites, 30,522; col'd, 6,576; total whites, including preachers and probationers, 33,660; white and col'd, 40,230. There is a decrease of 11 local preachers, and an increase of 527 whites and 282 col'd. An increase of any size is gratifying. Would that we could report thousands instead of hundreds.

Of Sunday Schools, the Secretary reports 304 schools, 355 superintendents, 2,317 teachers, 13,228 scholars, 35,326 volumes in libraries, and $1,958 90 expended in support of schools.

The Tract Society, owing to the want of a traveling general agent, occasioning an imperfect organization of branch societies, was not as successful as it would have been under more favorable circumstances. We anticipate larger results for the current year, under the administration of Rev. F. J. Boggs, the newly appointed General Agent. The receipts for the year amounted to $888 62; the expenditures, $693 83. Cash on hand at the close of the year, $194 79. Upwards of $300 were raised at the anniversary meeting.

For the Bible Society, $705 31 were reported as raised within the several pastoral charges. This report is certainly very imperfect.

We must close this brief notice of the longest, most laborious and most painful session of the Virginia Conference ever held. May it never have a successor.

The appointments for the ministers of the year are annexed:

THE "IRON WHEEL" AND ITS AUTHOR.

The friends of Methodism have hitherto treated that farrago of nonsense, malignity and falsehood, "Graves' Iron Wheel," with the silence which its character and that of its author, deserves, wisely judging that if let alone, it would defeat itself. But since some men claiming respectability have endorsed it, and are aiding in its circulation, a gentleman, not unknown to the country, and who is fully qualified for the task, has determined to take some notice of the work. In addition to animadversions upon the "Wheel," his work will contain an exposure of the history and character of its author. The public will then find a satisfactory answer to the question, "What is the character of Graves?" If we are not much mistaken, Mr. Graves will rue the day that he turned "Wheel" right, and some who are now befriending him will regret the day when they consented to be his scavengers.

TENNESSEE.

JEWS WITNESSING FOR CHRIST.—The Christian world has been scandalized within a few years by the bold attempts of cultivated skeptics, like Francis Newman, to impeach the perfection of the Saviour's character. One must pity the moral obtuseness of such men, who seem overtaken by judicial blindness, so that while the light shineth in darkness, the darkness comprehends it not. In contrast with such moral debasement, it is cheering to note how Jewish prejudices are gradually abating, and candid and honorable Jews are admitting the moral sublimity of the Saviour's life. The late Dr. Noah, of New York, gave the following testimony, and out of the temple, with an eloquence such as no mortal has since possessed:

"It has been said, and with some commendation on what had been called my liberality, that I did not in a former discourse term Jesus of Nazareth an impostor; I have never considered him as such; the impostor generally aims at temporal power, attempts to subsidize the sick and weak believer, and draws around him persons of influence whom he can control. Jesus was free from fanaticism; his was a quiet, subduing, retiring faith. He mingled with the poor, communed with the wretched, avoided the rich, and rebuked the vain-glorious. In the calm of the evening, he sought shelter in the secluded groves of Olivet, or wandered pensively on the shores of Galilee. He sincerely believed his mission, courted no one, flattered no one; pointed and severe in his denunciations, he was calm and subdued in his religion. These are not the characteristics of an impostor; but, admitting that we give a different interpretation to his mission, when one hundred and fifty millions believe in his divinity, and we see around us abundant evidence of the happiness, good faith, mild government and liberal feelings which spring from his religion, what right has any one to call him an impostor?—that religion which is calculated to make mankind happy, cannot be a false one."

Dr. Raphael, the elegant scholar and eloquent Rabbi, speaks in a similar strain:

"If you are desirous of knowing the opinion of a Jew, aye, of a teacher in Israel, respecting the proceedings against, and the condemnation of the Master from Nazareth, I do not hesitate to tell you that I do not by any means feel bound to identify myself, or my brethren in faith, with these proceedings, or to uphold that condemnation; I, as a Jew, do say that it appears to me, Jesus became the victim of fanaticism, combined with jealousy and lust of power in Jewish hierarchs, even as in later ages, Huss and Jerome of Prague, Latimer and Ridley, became the victims of fanaticism combined with jealousy and lust of power in Christian hierarchs; and while I and the Jews of the present day protest against being identified with the zealots who were concerned in the proceeding against Jesus of Nazareth, we are far from reviling his character or deriding his precepts, which are for the most part those of Moses and the prophets."

The Duke of Argyle has been always putting himself forward with pamphlets, speeches, lectures, soirees. His Grace once thought that, because on one occasion Lord Derby did not reply to his speeches, therefrom the palm of victory rested with the Duke, who crowed lustily. "My Lords," said the Earl of Derby, "a short time since there was one of those persons called 'navvies,' who was in the habit of allowing his wife to beat him. He was a very large man, and she was only a small woman. The neighbors asked him why he permitted her. 'O, never mind,' said he, 'it amuses her and don't hurt me.'" Shouts of laughter greeted this allusion.

Terms: $2 00 per annum, in advance.

NEW ORLEANS:

SATURDAY, JANUARY 26, 1856.

A Correction.—The Rev. C. C. Calloway writes, Greensboro', Jan. 14:

"The Advocate came yesterday, containing a list of the Trustees of the Southern University, and I see the name of Dr. Summers has been omitted. I call your attention to the fact, because we count him one of our best, and wish his presence at our meetings."

We gladly correct the omission, and hope when that list is called the response to the name of Thomas O. Summers may always be solemn.

A New Advocate.—The first number of the "North Carolina Christian Advocate," Jan. 4, 1856, Raleigh, N. C., is on our table. Rip Van Winkle can do some things as well as others—He can get out a good paper—plain, solid, sensible. It is published by a committee of the N. C. Conference, and edited by one of its members, R. T. Heflin. Price, $1 50 a year, in advance.

From the N. C. Advocate we learn that the superannuates, widows and other beneficiaries of the Conference were paid off at 60 per cent.

The increase of membership in the N. C. Conference for the year ending November 4, 1855, was as follows: Increase of whites, 1,791; colored, 819; and 18 local preachers; in all, an increase of 2,628.

Annals of Methodism.—In our advertising columns the reader will find something under this name that will be apt to strike his fancy. We do not know one so competent as the author for getting up a hand book of that sort judiciously and tastefully.

Harper for] February.—Through H. D. McGinnis, 36 Camp st., we have our number promptly.

London Quarterly.—This staunch republication of L. Scott & Co., N. Y., is on our table—One article alone—"School Sermons"—is worth the price of this number.—We know of no more economical method of maintaining a familiar acquaintance with the literary progress of the age than subscribing for these reprints. They are republished from advance sheets, and at a very low price. Only $10 per annum for the four Reviews and Blackwood. The postage on the whole is but 80 cts. per annum. In large cities they come postage free. Clubs ordering four copies or over, direct from L. Scott & Co., are allowed a discount of 25 per cent. from the above prices.

Southern Methodist Quarterly.—The January number is exceedingly rich, in the literary department. One objection to the contributors may be that so few are of the Church to which the Review belongs, and for whose development it was instituted. A portrait of Dr. McFerrin embellishes this number. That to hundreds will be worth $2,00—the subscription price of the Review. Most too young looking, light and handsome—If heavier in material, and a little older, the portrait would have been true to the noble original.

Harper's Books.—This great publishing house is unusually prolific of books that are books. They have made valuable additions the past year to every library. This classical course has before been noticed in our columns which notes the extension nearly every week of their catalogue. The popular volumes of Macaulay are among the latest.—See advertisement.

A LITTLE INCIDENT.

I spent the second Sabbath of January in Jackson, Miss. Although the weather was very inclement, there was a pretty good turn out to the morning services. I presented the claims of the Book and Tract Society, and received a response in what will help us on in the good cause—all things considered, a good collection.

At 3 o'clock, by invitation, I preached to the colored people—a large and attentive congregation. This is one of the most religious congregations in our bounds. They have Sunday School at 9 o'clock Sabbath morning, class at 11, preaching at 3 P. M., and prayer meeting at night. Class again Tuesday night, and prayer meeting again Thursday night. It will do any one good who spends a Sabbath in Jackson to attend their services.

After they were dismissed from the 3 o'clock service, I learned that some of them were disappointed a little that I did not call on them to help me in my work. Will any white congregation complain if I do not give them a chance to contribute? But I was with them at their prayer meeting at night; and Bro. E., who has been their leader for a long time, told them they might contribute then, if they wished to do so. Up they walked to a table and laid down their dimes, quarters and halves, seeming to be glad they had such a chance to do good. Do you ask how much they gave? More than some white congregations to whom I have appealed in days past. I shall send them books for it all to be used in their Sunday School, too.

Agent.

APOLOGISING FOR THE APOSTLES!

The latest dodge we find in the correspondence of the Zion's Herald. Indianapolis is to be the seat of the General Conference in May. From that city the writer addresses his letter. Its naivete is refreshing:

"The hospitalities of the city will be cheerfully given as far as possible. Some interest begins to be felt in reference to the great quadrennial gathering of our branch of the church of God. Other questions seem to sink before the great one that now agitates the nation. Some fear that too much will be done, and some that too little will be done, and others seem confident that nothing can be done. Dr. Durbin's articles have some weight in the West, and we have heard no one dispute his main position, to-wit: 'That slavery existed in the Roman Empire in the time of the apostles, and that there were probably slaveholders connected with the church.' There are some differences in regard to our position, that may present the subject in a new aspect.

American Methodists, and Methodist preachers are sovereigns, are parts of the great power of the government. We are responsible for the existence of slavery, when our will and act is not clearly against it. If Paul had not only been a Roman citizen, but a Roman Prince, or Emperor, and yet a follower of Christ, he most likely would have exerted his power to save the poor slave. If two-thirds of the Roman Empire had been free, and each individual a sovereign voter, a law maker, and prince, I should have looked for something earnest for freedom, on the part of the apostles. Each American freeman who votes for slaveholders, who sanction slavery, who writes or speaks for slavery, is a tyrant, a despot, a Caligula, a Nero. I do not mean that he is as reckless or wicked as those, as bloody and vile, but that as a sovereign he misuses, or vilely prostitutes his power to injure and oppress. So in the church—we Americans are freemen and sovereigns, ex dei gratia, and must act, not as though we were the subjects and slaves of Augustus Cæsar, but the Lord's freemen. 'What did the apostles do under similar circumstances?' This is asked in reference to this slavery question. I would answer, simply, that the apostles never dreamed of such circumstances as those which surround us, save by the spirit of prophecy."

"Most likely!" Paul and the rest of the Apostles were great cowards, time-serving teachers and narrow-minded, according to these apologists. What next?

Since the division of the M. E. Church in these United States (1845) the abolition controversy has taken a new phase. By that event compromise ceased, because the ecclesiastical union had ceased for which it had been maintained. Half a million of thinkers, talkers and writers ceased to apologise for the institution of slavery, and concerned themselves more about correcting its abuses and enforcing relative duties according to the Bible. The prejudice—half formed into opinion—that had grown up under the NINTH SECTION disappeared, and that meddlesome section with it. Concessions for peace sake, qualified protests, and such hollow but well meant efforts, were at an end. Southerners planted themselves on the teaching of the Bible and the practice of the Apostolic Church. There they stand and will. What do their accusers now? Failing to dislodge them, they wrest the words of the Bible and apologise for the Apostles.

FACT, CAUSE AND REMEDY.

The fact is, that class meetings have not only declined, but continue to decline. This alarming fact will not be denied by any. The only difference of opinion is as to the extent. This deplorable truth being admitted, let us inquire into

THE CAUSE.

This, we aver, is found with the traveling preachers. With them was its origin. They neglected their duty; the leaders and the Church followed. Let the wholesome though mortifying truth not be disputed, neither disguised, that if they had continued faithful to class meetings, and consequently to themselves and to the Church, we would not now have to deplore their declension.

All this will the more plainly appear, if we consider that class meetings are committed to the keeping of the traveling preachers especially; and that their claim to his personal attention is second only to preaching the gospel. See Discipline, page 65, Answer 11. And that, instead of discharging the duty of leader himself, has turned it over, in many instances, to bungling proxies. This was the cause of decline in the first place; and the reason why the declension continues and increases is, that the preachers are become more and more derelict, until now it will be found that preachers, for the most part, hold class meetings like overseers work the road, namely, just before court (quarterly meeting.) And, may I not add, for a similar reason—viz., the court! We talk about turning members out of Church for not attending class meeting! What shall be done with preachers whose duty it is to hold them, but by whose neglect members—faithful, pious members—have been so frequently disappointed, and consequently deprived of their benefit, that even Methodists can be found who are absolutely averse to them.

If this be true, then surely the remedy will not be found in the laity, unless you reverse the order and place them above the ministry. But the fact being admitted, and having shown the cause, we proceed to suggest—

THE REMEDY.

The remedy heretofore used has failed, not because it was not good, but because it was improperly applied, and to the part only secondarily affected—the laity.

How, then, when and where, and to whom shall we apply it? To whom? The traveling preachers. Where? At the place of holding the Annual Conference. When? During its session. How? By establishing, as we should have done long since, a class meeting society. Let this society be celebrated by an appropriate sermon annually. Let the roll be called, and in a Conference class book; edited, of course, by Bro. Summers. Let such marks be made opposite each name as shall properly represent the answers given to the following question, viz: How many class meetings have you held the past year? And such other questions as may be deemed appropriate. Should these suggestions meet with favor we may offer something more. The division of the classes at Conference and the appointing of leaders, we may speak of in our next.

NASHVILLE CORRESPONDENCE.

METHODIST THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.

Mr. Editor: Your Nashville correspondent, "Crotchet," writing December 24th, 1855 says: "In my last letter I omitted giving you the details of the movement which was made during the late session of the Tennessee Conference, in behalf of the Methodist Theological Seminary. They can be told in a few words. Dr. Henkle offered a report which amounted to an elaborate argument in favor of its establishment. Messrs. Erwin and Johnson attempted to say something on the side of the report, but so strong was the opposition against such an institution, that nothing availed, and it was laid on the table by an almost unanimous vote. So mote it be."

Your correspondent's details are somewhat incorrect, in consequence, most probably, of a misapprehension of the facts in the case. I will, therefore, if you please, give you a brief sketch of the main points in the movement. Tuesday morning, of the late session of the Tennessee Conference, the following preamble and resolutions, signed by Revs. A. R. Erwin, A. F. Driskill, and myself, were read and referred, nem. con., to the Committee on Education:

"Whereas, We have always held that it is the prerogative of the great Head of the Church to call the men, whom he chooses, to the ministry, and that only those whom he calls should attempt that work; and whereas we have always held that the first and chief qualification for the work of the ministry is, the Baptism of the Holy Ghost, resulting in purity of heart and life, and in spiritual discernment of the truth of God; and whereas, we have always held that intellectual preparation, of some kind, and in some degree, is important for the work of the ministry, and we are inclined to believe that it is proper to increase the facilities for intellectual preparation, therefore—

Resolved, 1st. That we will continue to pray to the Lord of the harvest to increase the number of laborers in the field of the Gospel.

2d. That we will seek for ourselves, and for those who may be counted with us, greater purity of heart and life, and clearer spiritual discernment of the truth of God, through a more glorious Baptism of the Holy Ghost.

3d. That the Committee on Education are hereby instructed to inquire into the propriety of our affording to young men, who are judged by the Church to be called to preach the Gospel, but who have not sufficient mental acquirements and training to be employed in the traveling connection, suitable facilities for pursuing the necessary literary and scientific course of study, and, likewise, while thus engaged, similar facilities for improvement in the peculiar knowledge and discipline needful for the successful performance of the work of the ministry; and, if they should be satisfied concerning the propriety of affording these facilities, that they report a plan for carrying out the objects contemplated in this resolution."

Thursday afternoon, the last day of the session, the Committee on Education, through their chairman, Rev. Dr. Henkle, submitted their report, recommending certain steps to be taken in favor of an Educational Institution, based upon principles such as those indicated in the foregoing resolution.

Dr. Henkle, on his own account, though in connection with the Committee, read a long and able document, in which he pleaded for a great change in the mode of preparing young men for the work of the ministry. His views were certainly different, in many respects, from those presented in the resolution which elicited them. The differences, however, I cannot state exactly, having been favored with a single hearing only, of his argument. With the whole matter thus before the Conference, it was expected that the report of the Committee would give rise to a discussion of unusual length. Revs. Dr. Green and Mr. Erwin, besides the learned Chairman of the Committee, and others, too, if necessary, were ready to argue in favor of an educational institution as sketched above; and in that event, the opposite side, it was believed, would be taken by Rev. Messrs. Pitts, Hughes and Wainwright, all men of mark. But, just at this point it was, on motion, resolved that the report and all be laid upon the table until the next session of the Conference. This motion called up a number of members, and caused several bon mots. The vote on it, if I recollect, was about forty-five in favor of the motion, and thirty-three against it. This vote however, was by no means a test one. Advocates and opponents of the movement, and members whose opinions were not settled, voted on each side. Some (the session already having been a protracted one) wished to adjourn as soon as possible, and others desired time to consider before deciding a question of such great moment. So, it was explained just after the vote by the author of the motion. An attempt was then made to order the publication of the report with Dr. Henkle's argument; but the Conference, not having acted on the merits of the subject, refused to publish on one side only of the question; and, on motion, Dr. Henkle was allowed access to the papers of the Conference, with the view to publication on his own responsibility. Such are the main points in the movement. The whole subject has been postponed and set for the treating and action at the next session of the Conference. Meanwhile earnest, strong hopes are entertained by many of us, that Providence will direct affairs so that, then, measures may be adopted for effecting the ends sought by this movement.

Other Conferences, Virginia, Alabama, and perhaps the Carolinas, etc., have within them societies seeking, through educational institutions in existence and in prospect, such as Randolph Macon, Wofford and the great Southern University, the same ends proposed in the Tennessee Conference. The only material difference, as far as I know, is that the friends of the movement here prefer to operate, not by means of a society, but through the ordinary official channels of ecclesiastical business, and with the consent of a majority of their brethren in the Conference.

In the letter under view, "Crotchet" states that certain good things—and among them the zeal of one of the Conferences "for the education of ministers"—surpass all praise. But "Crotchet" (excuse the use here of the noun instead of a pronoun, I know not what one to use,) says, "So mote it be," to the seeming failure of the zeal of this Conference, in behalf of the same cause. I trust, however, that, with the explanations herein given, "Crotchet" will, after a while, find reasons to place the zeal of Tennessee "for the education of ministers," among the things that "surpass all praise."

I hope, Mr. Editor, you have permanently engaged the pen of "Crotchett," whose letters are always interesting, and seldom questionable.

With high regard,

W. C. JOHNSON.

NEW BOOKS.

The First Day of the Week. Price 25 cents.

The Last Day of the Week. Price 25 cents.

The Week Completed. Price 25 cents.

Few works of this class have gained so large and enduring a popularity as these volumes. They are from the pen of the excellent author of "The Commandment with Promise;" a new and handsome edition of which, price 40 cents, has been issued from our press. The three volumes on the "Week" are also bound in one volume, price 50 cents. These works find a place in the Sunday-School Libraries of nearly all Evangelical Churches—we have carefully revised them for those of our own communion.

Bible Expositor. Confirmations of the Truth of the Holy Scriptures, from the observations of recent Travellers; illustrating the Manners, Customs, and Places referred to in the Bible. 18mo., pp. 320. Price 50 cents.

This valuable book is re-printed from a volume published under the direction of the Society for the Promotion of Christian Knowledge. Its pertinent observations and numerous engravings constitute a fine commentary on many passages of Scripture, otherwise obscure. It may be of immense service in the Bible-class and Sunday-school. It has been carefully revised by the Editor, though the plates were not executed at our Publishing House.

The Pilgrim's Progress from this World to that which is to come. Delivered under the Similitude of a Dream. By John Bunyan. New edition, with a Biographical Introduction by Thos. O. Summers, D. D., and handsome illustrations. 18mo. In two Parts. Part I., pp. 272. Part II., pp. 242. Nashville: Stevenson & Owen—1856.

This Christian classic is presented in a very elegant dress. The two Parts are bound in separate volumes, for the convenience of Sunday-school libraries. Price 30 cents per volume. It is also bound in one volume, pp. 514. Price 50 cents.

Alarm to Unconverted Sinners. By Jos. Alleine. With a Biographical Introduction by Thos. O. Summers, D. D. 18mo, pp. 175. Price 25 cents.

Call to the Unconverted. By R. Baxter. With a Biographical Introduction by Thos. O. Summers, D. D. 18mo, pp. 103. Price 25 cents.

The Alarm and Call are also bound together in one volume. Price 40 cents.

Of these standard works, whose titles are familiar as household words, it is needless to say anything, save that the present editions have been gotten up with great care, and it is hoped they will have a wide circulation.

Ministerial Ability: A Sermon delivered before the South Carolina Conference, on Sunday evening, December 2, 1855, by Wm. M. Wightman, D. D., President of Wofford College. Published by request of the Conference. Nashville: Stevenson & Owen—1856. Price 5 cents.

This is a magnificent Sermon. It is in the finest style of the eloquent author. Its delivery, we understand, produced a powerful effect—its perusal can scarcely fail of effecting great good. Let it be circulated by thousands.

GOVERNOR'S MESSAGE.

Fellow-Citizens of the Senate and House of Representatives:

I esteem this occasion, which marks at once the advent of a new Legislature and the termination of my official relations to the State, a fitting one to tender you a cordial greeting to the Seat of Government, and to renew my acknowledgments to the people for the high trust which they confided to me, and which I am now about to surrender. It belongs to them to decide whether their confidence, tempered by the indulgence which is due to the imperfections of human nature, has been entirely misplaced or undeserved. This only I shall claim to say, that I have endeavored to discharge the duties which they imposed upon me with an eye single to the advancement of their best interests.

It is with deep mortification that I am compelled, by an imperative sense of duty, to call your attention to certain features of the political history of our State during the past year. It is almost needless for me to say that I refer to the scenes of intimidation, violence and bloodshed which marked the late general elections in the city of New Orleans. They are of too recent occurrence, and too notorious, to require that I should describe them anew, and display them before you in all their hideous deformity. In my humble opinion, the Legislature would disregard its plainest and most obvious duties to the honor of the State and of our republican institutions, if it did not exert its utmost powers to prevent the repetition of outrages which tarnish our national character and sink us to the level of the anarchical governments of Spanish America. The evil must be crushed at once and before it has taken root, by the most pointed and energetic means. Before the late general elections, no one would have admitted even the possibility that a blood-thirsty mob could have attempted to overawe any portion of the people of this State, in the exercise of their most valuable rights. But what would then have been denied, even as a possibility, is now an historical fact. These great public crimes were not only committed, some in midday light and in the presence of hundreds of persons; but they have thus far escaped punishment. The question is: Shall a repetition of them take place?—which involves the further question: If the corporation of New Orleans is unable or unwilling to protect the citizens of the State, living within its limits, in the exercise of their political franchises, is it not the imperative duty of the State to extend that protection? I shall not stop to inquire what class of our citizens has suffered from these acts of violence. Their effects reach beyond their immediate objects.—Crime is no distinguisher of persons. The assassin of a political opponent at the polls, will soon become the assassin of any other of his fellow-citizens. The bands of ruffians who drove one class of our citizens from the ballot-box two months ago, may this year or the next, deprive another class of their franchise, if their interests or the interests of their employers should require it. I commit the entire subject to your wisdom and patriotism, as perhaps the most important in its nature and general bearings which can engage your attention.

During the past summer, our fellow-citizens, in common with those of several of our sister States, were subject to the desolating ordeal of the yellow fever, originating in New Orleans and spreading from there to the most remote parts of our territory. The system of Quarantine established under the law passed by the last Legislature, could not, it is clear, affect in any manner, the course or spread of the disease. But the question of its utility to prevent the introduction from abroad of that or any other malignant and contagious epidemics, such as small-pox, Chagres and ship fever, is by no means determined by the experience of the last year. The expenses of establishing and organizing the system have already been defrayed—it will remain for you to decide whether it should not be continued upon an economical footing and with such modifications as experience may have indicated and the freedom of commerce may require. My own opinions of quarantine laws are well known; but my suggestions to the Legislature upon the subject were dictated by the desire to subject to actual experiment the views of a large and intelligent class of our fellow-citizens. Until this has been fairly applied, and during a sufficient time to produce a general conviction of the inefficiency and inexpediency of the system, it will, perhaps, be wiser to maintain it a few years longer, than to run the risk, by too hasty action, to have to renew it.

Turning from the consideration of these unpleasant topics, I am gratified to have it in my power to state, that at the commencement of the term of office of my distinguished successor and of your Legislative session, the condition of the State is one in which the elements of prosperity largely predominate. The great works of internal improvements undertaken during the first year of my administration, have been steadily advancing to completion, and have already realized some of the advantages which were expected of them. The New Orleans, Jackson and Great Northern Railroad has been pushed beyond the limits of the State. The New Orleans, Opelousas and Great Western Railroad now unites Algiers with Tigerville, over a distance of sixty-six miles. In two months, at most, it will meet tide-water navigation at Bayou Boeuf, by which its usefulness and the source of its profits will be considerably increased. I have no official information concerning the progress of the Shreveport and Vicksburg Railroad, but I am assured that several sections of that line have been placed under contract, and are being vigorously prosecuted. When these main trunks shall have been completed, it will be easy to perfect, at a comparatively small expense, the means of cheap and rapid intercommunication throughout the State, and to place every portion of our territory in convenient proximity to the capital and the metropolis.

The refusal of the last Legislature to pass the necessary appropriations for the Swamp Land Board left the Commissioners no other duties during the past year than to complete the works already contracted for or commenced. It is not for me to inquire into the motives which prompted the Legislature to adopt this course of action. If the commissioners had forfeited their confidence, the remedy was at hand, clearly marked out by the 97th article of the Constitution. If the system was obnoxious to them, it was competent for them to pursue the course pointed out by the Constitution, and to alter or amend it. But I cannot withhold the expression of my conviction, that the suspension of that branch of the public service has resulted in material injury to the prosperity and advancement of the general interests of the State. Besides the loss of time—of a most favorable season for the completion of works of drainage—the works already done, which were but parts of an entire system, to be strengthened and consolidated by every new step taken in the same system have, in many cases, suffered from their isolation.

There has been some difference of opinion as to the mode of appointing the commissioners. An effort was made at the last session of the Legislature to render these officers elective. The policy of expediency of such a change, is, to say the least, very doubtful. Those parishes or parts of parishes of the State which stand in most need of the attention of the commissioners, are precisely the very parishes in which the voters are the least numerous. Can it be doubted a moment, that if the commissioners of the Board of Swamp Lands depended upon the suffrages of the people for their election, they would apply the funds to those portions of their respective District which were the most populous and not those in which they were most necessary? The temptation would be too strong to be resisted. The inevitable result would be, that instead of increasing the capacity of the State to receive and maintain a larger population, the Swamp Land Funds would go to add to the value of lands already under cultivation.

The State Engineer's report contains recommendations which meet my entire approval. The experience of every officer who has been at the head of that Department, condemns the contract-system, as both inefficient and expensive. It is amenable to other objections, which I have set forth in former communications to the Legislature, which it is needless to repeat.

For a detailed account of the operations of the Swamp Land Board, I refer you to the report of the Commissioners, which will be transmitted to you.

The finances of the State are in a sound and healthy condition. The following abstract from the report of the Treasurer, exhibits the receipts and expenditures during the year which has just closed, and the present state of the Treasury:

Balance in the Treasury on the 1st of January, 1855, as per last report		$742,888 23
Amounts of receipts from 1st of January, to the 31st of December, 1855 as per annexed statement		1,577,096 54
		$2,320,494 77
Amount of expenditures during the same period, as per annexed statement		1,683,089 00
Balance in the Treasury, December 31st, 1855, subject to draft on each of the following funds		$632,895 88
General Funds	$183,886 26
Mill Tax Fund	103,242 45
Poll Tax Fund	39,809 51
Internal Improvement Tax Fund	5,176 63
Internal Improvement Fund	17,063 25
Levee and Drainage Fund	252,561 50
Road and Levee Fund	30,713 18	$632,895 88

The last Legislature having passed a bill to renew the lease of the State Penitentiary, I deemed it my duty to withhold my sanction of it, for reasons which I then assigned in a special message. This bill having failed to command the Constitutional majority of both Houses after its return, the Legislature passed a joint resolution extending the then existing lease to the first day of May of this year. This resolution, which was opened to all the objections urged against the first bill, and which would have brought about the restoration of the leasing system, I determined to retain until the present session of the Legislature, and to return with my objections. In the meantime, the lease of the former lessees having expired by limitation, it became my duty, as the Chief Executive of the State, to resume the possession and administration of the Penitentiary. I did so under circumstances of great embarrassment and difficulties. The Legislature had made no appropriations for the maintenance of the convicts and the supply of raw material for the manufactories. Their immediate necessities were to be provided for until the fruit of their own labors could be realized and could return to feed and clothe them. I was then forced to resort to the credit of the institution, and to borrow a sufficient amount of money to meet the exigencies of the occasion. This necessity imposed sacrifices upon the institution which curtailed its profits. But even this experiment, made under the most unfavorable circumstances, has established conclusively to my mind, the policy and expediency of retaining the Penitentiary under the management of the State.

If, instead of resorting to loans, the Legislature had pinched an appropriation of twenty thousand dollars at the disposal of the Directors, not only the raw materials could have been purchased at a lower rate, but freight, commissions and interest would have been saved during the year, leaving handsome profits to the Penitentiary. This opinion is confirmed by the opinion of practical men, who have managed this and other penitentiaries. It is demonstrable, that the money which, during the greater part of the year, lies idle in the Treasury, could not be better or more profitably employed, in such sums as might, from time to time be needed, than in the support of a State Institution which could be constantly returning it, with interest. All the securities for the proper use of these advances and their timely repayment, could be provided for by making the Auditor of Public Accounts and the Treasurer of the State ex-officio members of the Board, and placing the financial management of the Institution under their control, with such checks and restrictions as may appear necessary. The Treasury would thus always retain some control over the loans made by it, so as to secure itself from embarrassment. Under good management, and with a well matured system, I have no doubt that the Penitentiary would soon wipe off its debt, and not only sustain itself, but pay for such repairs and additions as may be needed from time to time.

Convinced as I am of the great importance of a well regulated militia, I will not be deterred by the neglect with which the subject has been treated, from calling your attention to the suggestions of the report of the Adjutant and Inspector-General, and more especially to those which relate to volunteer organizations. If experience has shown the difficulty, if not the absolute impossibility, of maintaining a regular system of militia, in the absence of pressing and actual danger, it is the part of wisdom to seize upon and develop those elements which may, in time of need, furnish the basis of more extensive military organizations. The volunteer companies which now exist in the different cities and towns of our State, should, in this view, receive the fostering care of the Legislature. Louisiana owes it to her own honor and to her sister States, to be prepared to furnish, whenever she shall be called to do so, her quota of gallant and well-trained citizen-soldiers. It cannot be that she will fail to provide for the prompt payment of that debt at any time it may fall due. The position of Adjutant and Inspector General, which at present is little else than an "empty honor," from the circumscribed nature of his powers and resources, should receive such aid and enlargements in those particulars as the dignity and interests of this important branch of the public service require.

The administration of "The State Asylum for the Deaf and Dumb and the Blind," continues to afford general satisfaction and to furnish evidence of the zeal and efficiency of the Professors and Directors of that Institution. During the past year, the buildings at present occupied by the Deaf and Dumb and the Blind, were crowded to their utmost capacity. The advanced condition of the new structures destined to receive them, enables us to indulge the hope that they will be surrounded by all the comforts which their unfortunate situation claims. I have no hesitation in recommending such further appropriations as will be necessary to secure the entire completion of the new buildings at the earliest period practicable during the present year.

The Report of the Treasurer of the Charity Hospital exhibits the general good management and flourishing condition of that Institution. At the commencement of my term of office, the Charity Hospital was indebted in the sum of eleven thousand and one 94-100 dollars, although it had received bounties from the State, during the nine preceding years, amounting, in the aggregate, to one hundred and twenty thousand dollars. It has not only canceled this debt, but owing to the prudence and ability of its managers, has sustained itself since the year 1852, upon its own resources, besides contributing largely to the repairs of the old buildings and the erection of new ones. During the past year, in spite of the increase of prices for every article of supply, and a diminution in the receipts of the tax upon foreign emigrants, the institution has met its expenses with its own funds, and has in its coffers a handsome surplus of twenty thousand dollars.

A subject which has elicited much interest from past Legislatures and their constituencies, and which will, doubtless, claim your serious attention, is that of the public printing. The importance of requiring that all matter, of whatever character, enumerated in the law relative to public printing, should be printed as well as published at the seat of government, is too evident to need argument or comment. Indeed some of the provisions of that Act (see sec. 7, p 294; Acts of 1855) cannot be otherwise complied with. The reasonableness, and even the necessity, of a strict and faithful adherence to the law so as to adapt its workings to the wants and conveniences of the Legislature and the State Government, becomes more apparent, in view of the decision lately made by the people, giving permanence to the establishment of the seat of Government at Baton Rouge.

The wild spirit of fanaticism which has, for many years, disturbed the repose of the country, has steadily increased in power and influence. It controls the councils of several States, nullifies the laws of Congress enacted for the protection of our property, and resists the execution of them even to the shedding of blood. It has grown so powerful that it now aspires to control the Federal Legislature. This fact can no longer be concealed, however much it may be regretted. The slaveholding States are warned in time; they should be prepared for the issue. If it must come, the sooner the better. The time for concession on our part and compromises has passed. If the Union cannot be maintained upon the just and wholesome principles of the Constitution, concessions and compromises will only retard the dissolution, not save it. They have had, thus far, no other result than to encourage attack and increase the numbers of the abolitionists. It would, however, be premature to suggest practical measures of resistance or retaliation. The present session of Congress will develope fully the plans of that party. Your own action must depend, in a great measure, upon the course which they shall pursue. The responsibility will lie upon those who have forced us, in defense of our most sacred rights, of our honor, and of our very existence, to resort to extreme remedies.

P. O. Hebert.

Thirty-Fourth Congress—First Session.

The account below of the debate and proceedings in the House of Representatives on the 12th is somewhat interesting and highly amusing:

Washington, Jan. 12, 1856.

House.—A debate ensued in which several members expressed their opposition to turning the House into a debating, society and opening a boundless sea of debate.

Mr. Richardson thought that he could get through with his part of the performance on the ten minutes rule, and Mr. Campbell, at his request, withdrew his motion to rescind.

Humphrey Marshall thought the batches of interrogatories to the candidates should be filed and that the candidates should reply in printed publications at their leisure.

Mr. Richardson replied to the series of written interrogatories proposed by Mr. Zollicoffer, and commanded the marked attention of the members and the audience thronging the galleries. He said that in acting for the Kansas and Nebraska bill he intended the people of the Territory to decide the question themselves, and he would admit them as States with or without slavery. He had said that slavery would not go there, but he never urged that as a reason why he voted for the bill. As to the constitutionality of the Wilmot Proviso, he voted for the principle as applicable to the Mexican acquisition in a spirit of compromise, but it would be unjust to incorporate it in a Territorial bill. In his judgment the Constitution does not carry slavery into the Territories, but protects both sections of the Union alike.

There was much squabbling as to the order of proceeding, and it was finally decided that the candidates should answer Mr. Zollicoffer's queries before others were propounded.

Mr. Banks was then called out, and the members drew up their chairs around him. He did not feel obliged, he said, to answer the questions. He had not solicited the support of any. He said of his friends, as Othello said of his wife, "they had eyes and they chose me." He distinctly remarked that he did regard the Kansas bill as promotive of the formation of free States. He believed in the constitutionality of the Wilmot Proviso, but did not believe that the Constitution carries slavery into the Territories. He recognized the right of the protection of property at the North and South alike, but not property in slaves. He believed the Constitution an instrument of freedom, and Congress wrong in repealing the Missouri Compromise.

Applause from the Republicans, and confusion, with cries for Fuller.

Mr. Fuller said he was ready at any time to retire from the field of protracted contest. He did not regard the Kansas bill as promoting either of free or slave States, and had never advocated the constitutionality of the Wilmot Proviso. Slavery exists independently of the Constitution. Congress, therefore, had no right to legislate slavery in or out of the Territories, and only the right to legislate so far as to protect the citizens in the enjoyment of their property.

Mr. Pennington was then called for loudly. He said he had no idea so obscure and nebulous as to require a candidate as himself would be required to define his position. He was outside the pale. (Laughter.) He most respectfully declined to make any reply, but would do so when the House seriously intended to make use of him in connection with the Speakership. It was no consequence what were the individual opinions of the presiding officer.

Impatient cries from all quarters of "Call the roll, vote," etc.

Mr. Barksdale asked Mr. Banks—Are you a member of the Know-Nothing party? Are you in favor of slavery in the District of Columbia? Do you wish to promote an equality between the white and black races by legislation? Are you in favor of the entire exclusion of naturalized citizens and Catholics from office? Are you in favor of the modification of the tariff as you were last session?

Mr. Konnett said he should like to know whether either of the candidates believe in future state, and provided each answer in the affirmative, he desired to know whether in a free or slave state. (Excessive laughter.)

Mr. Barksdale advanced toward Mr. Keane and excitedly inquired: "Do you intend to cast a reflection on me? I hurl it back with scorn and contempt."

Deafening calls of "order!" Nearly all the members on their feet, and various unsuccessful motions to adjourn.

Mr. Kennett—No diffidence in or out of the Hall, shall intimidate me. I say to the House that my suggestions were merely jocular.

Mr. Barksdale—I treat it with scorn and contempt, sir.

Order was finally restored.

Mr. Richardson replied negatively to Mr. Barksdale's queries, excepting the last.

Mr. Banks, in answering Mr. Barksdale's interrogatories, preferred doing so in his own way, leaving the gentlemen to draw their own inferences. He was nominated by Democrats and Americans—the latter being the larger portion of his District—and by them elected. He referred to the record of last year for his views on the tariff. He had adopted the maxim of Junius, "It is unfortunate for a man to speak any considerable time, commenting on his own work." [Laughter.]

As to the equality of the white and black races, he believed in the language of the Declaration of Independence—"That all men were created free and equal." He had adopted the idea that the weaker race will be absorbed by the stronger; that was the universal law of nature; but whether the white or black was superior and would absorb the other, he would wait for the full development of the future. [Laughter and cries of "Good."] As to the other questions propounded, they were subordinate to that of prohibiting slavery in Kansas. He would not ask any man what he thought of this or that measure, but would unite all to interdict slavery in the Territories.

Mr. Fuller answered that he was not in favor of the restoration of the Missouri restriction, and was opposed to the abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia. He did not believe in the equality of the white and black races. He thought with Washington that the best policy of the Government was to appoint native-born citizens to office in preference to those of foreign birth. He would proscribe no man for his religion, but would accede to all the largest liberality of opinion. He did not desire to exclude foreigners from hither, and would invite them to settle the public territory and build up themselves homes. But in all matters of legislation and in the administration of the laws Americans should govern America. [Applause from the Americans.]

Mr. Richardson answered various questions on the subject of slavery, propounded by Mr. Kingham.

Each party appeared entirely satisfied with the responses of its candidate.

The House then proceeded to take another vote for Speaker, which resulted as follows: Banks 94, Richardson 69, Fuller 34, Pennington 7, Williams, Henry, Barnett and Pere each one. Necessary to a choice, 104.

The House then adjourned.

Death by Chloroform.—On Saturday afternoon Miss Idi Morgan, of this city, visited the office of Dr. Emery, dentist, No. 17 Bronde street, for the purpose of having a tooth extracted. Chloroform was administered, the usual quantity being given, and upon proceeding to the operation, the Doctor found the lady in a dying condition. Dr. Stedman and another physician were called, and means employed to restore her to consciousness, but without success. She died in the dentist's office, without having manifested any signs of returning animation. The deceased was a young woman, and apparently in good health and spirits when she entered the Doctor's office, but she probably had some organic affection which caused so lamentable a result from the inhalation of the anæsthetic agent. Dr. Jackson will test the quality of the chloroform used on the occasion. [Boston Herald.

Yellow Fever at Aux Cayes.—The brig Loango, Capt. Little, from the above port on December 16th, arrived at New York on the 20th inst. She reports the fever as raging fearfully. Every vessel in the port had lost more or less of their crews. Some of the foreign ships in port were entirely deserted, their whole crews having died.

Deaths.

DIED, in Harrison county, near Mississippi City, on the 29th of December, 1855, Sister ATHELIA NEWELL, consort of James Newell. She was born in South Carolina November, 20, 1793, and was married to James Newell August 25, 1810. She was a very useful member of the M. E. Church for about fifty years. A few days previous to her death, she told me she was ready to die, and that she believed that she should meet her nine children which had gone before in Heaven. Her aged husband, and her children, and an only brother will mourn the loss of one whose place cannot be filled; but their loss is eternal gain.

E. R. STRICKLAND.

DIED.—In Gaston, Ala., on the 30th u lt. Mrs. LOTISA WALLACE, in her 63d year.

She was born in Shollcastle, Cartwright county, N. C., 1793, professed religion and joined the M. E. Church in early life, and to its close, which was sudden and unexpected to her friends, walked worthy of her high vocation in every department of life. Her entire Christian course was free from reproach, her devotions to the cause of God ardent, her counsels to the young, whom she delighted to have about her, salutary; thus evincing to all, by precept and example, the truth and efficacy of the religion she professed.

15,000 Acres of Land for Sale.

The lands are situated in Morehouse parish, Louisiana, and in what is known as the "Bastrop Grant." They are of the richest quality of alluvial soil, unsurpassed in fertility by any lands in the South, and fully capable of producing from one and a half to two bales, or fifty to sixty bushels of corn to the acre. They lie near the Ouachita and Bœuf rivers—good navigable streams—and likewise in convenient distance of the route of the Vicksburg, Shreveport and Texas Railroad, now in course of construction and hastening to a rapid completion. A portion of these lands are highly improved and in a flourishing state of cultivation; the country in which they lie is very healthy, the water is excellent and abundant, and altogether they will be found to possess greater advantages and present inducements to purchasers than any lands now offered for sale in the Southern country. They will be sold in quantities to suit purchasers, and on the most favorable terms. Titles perfect.

For further particulars inquire of the undersigned either personally at his residence in Prairie Jefferson Morehouse parish, or by letter addressed to Point Jefferson, Morehouse parish, Louisiana.

SUGAR PLANTERS' CONVENTION.

This convention assembled yesterday in Lyceum Hall pursuant to adjournment; Judge Moore presiding.

Mr. Williams, of Lafourche, from the committee appointed to draw up a report on the subject matter of the convention, read the following:

"The committee to whom was referred the subject matter for which this convention was called, beg leave, through their chairman, to report—

"That, whereas the evils complained of, and set forth in a circular address issued by the committee appointed for that purpose by the Convention of Sugar Planters held in New Orleans on the 26th of November last, are not imaginary, but REAL, and that the space afforded for the exhibition and sale of sugar and molasses in the city of New Orleans is insufficient, and not likely to be extended, except for a limited time only, if at all;

"The committee are therefore unanimous in opinion that another sugar market is necessary, and recommend the appointing of a committee of ——— members to be composed of planters and merchants, to select a proper location for the same, where ample space and time may be afforded for the better protection of the sugar interest of Louisiana.

"All of which is respectfully submitted.

"JOSEPH S. WILLIAMS, Chairman."

Mr. Ohlen, of West Baton Rouge, moved so to amend the report as not to select another market until it shall be ascertained from the city authorities that it will be impossible to extend the limits of the present market.

Mr. B. H. Payne explained that it would be impossible for the city to extend the limits of the present market.

Mr. Chinn thought that the city might, in view of the loss likely to ensue upon a removal of the market, be willing to make some sacrifice in order to prevent such a removal.

Judge Gage rose to a personal explanation. He had been reported by one of the papers as having on the previous day used the expression "heartless speculators" in reference to merchants of this city. If he had used such an expression, he would retract it; but he was strongly of opinion that he had never used the expression. The Judge then addressed the convention upon the subject matter before it, and expressed his desire that the merchants of the city, and all others interested in the sugar trade, should join with the Convention, in a friendly way, in the consideration of the measures before it.

Dr. Brashear addressed the Convention upon the advantages to be derived from the measure proposed, and deprecated the excitement and heart-burning that seemed to exist in the mercantile community in reference to the said measure.

Mr. Chinn withdrew his amendment, and then, on motion, the report was adopted.

On motion, the number of the committee authorised by the report was fixed at ten, to be composed of six planters and four city merchants. The President thereupon named the following gentlemen to serve upon the committee:

Planters.—J. S. Williams, E. Roman, Dr. G. W. Campbell, Wm. J. Minor, J. J. Hanna and L. G. Compton.

Merchants.—M. O. H. Norton, S. O. Nelson, P. A. Foley and J. A. Braud.

Mr. Chinn offered a resolution, for not taking final action until it shall be known whether the city has any favorable propositon to make or not.

Mr. Minor offered a substitute for calling upon the city authorities to erect suitable shelters for sugar and molasses coming to the city, to be used for such a length of time as the committee may deem proper.

Various members opposed both the resolution and the substitute, on the ground that expectations from as well as appeals to the city would be useless. Upon which the resolution and substitute were withdrawn.

Mr. Minor offered a resolution for instructing the committee to examine the various localities on both sides of the river, and select the one most eligible for a sugar market; and that, so soon as the committee shall be ready to report, the chairman call another convention of the sugar planters at thirty days notice. The resolution was so amended as to reduce the notice to twenty days, and adopted.

Mr. Hanna offered a resolution authorising the committee to apply to the Legislature for a charter for a Sugar Planters' Association, with power to buy land, erect warehouses, etc., provided Algiers should not be selected as the market. It was amended so as to provide for the exception of New Orleans, as well as Algiers, and adopted.

Mr. Hanna made a short address, urging upon the members of the convention the propriety of treating the city authorities, merchants and others, whose interests might be antagonistical to the planting interest, with all due courtesy and respect.

Col. Allen, of West Baton Rouge, urged more brotherhood and unanimity of action among the members of the Convention from different parts of the State; some desiring that the proposed sugar market should be on one side of the river and others contending for the other side.

The committee appointed to select a sugar market was empowered to fill whatever vacancies might occur in that committee; and then, on motion, the Convention adjourned.

UNION MARINE ASSOCIATION.—A meeting of this new organization of steamboatmen was held on Saturday evening, on board the steamer Eclipse. Captain Rogers, President elect of the Association, appeared in the chair, and John E. Hyde, Esq., acting as Secretary.

The following rates of freight were adopted for the present week:

	St. Louis.	Louisville and Cincinnati.
Groceries per 100 pounds	$0 30	$0 25
Molasses per barrel	1 50	1 25
Hardware per pound	35	30
Dry goods per 100 pounds	40	30
Salt per sack	45	50
Tar and pitch per barrel	75	75
Crates per 100 pounds	35	30

Freights for Pittsburg to be charged 20 per cent. additional.

The by-laws were so amended as to enable captains of boats to engage coast freight at current rates, for shipment on the following week, without regard to any new tariff of rates which may prevail when the shipment shall be made.

A RICH LUMP.—The New York Mirror has seen a solid hemisphere of pure gold, taken from the Columbia mine, Ga., the result of three days' work. The value of the lump is $1,300. These mines are owned by a few enterprising gentlemen, who are working them with great success. A company partly composed of the proprietors of the Columbia mine, are about to open the Parke mine in the same neighborhood, which promises to yield an average of $200 a ton of the precious metal. The proprietors of these mines count on an aggregate product of about $25,000 a month. This, considering the moderate cost of working, is a golden harvest—almost equal to the richest "returns" from the placers of El Dorado.

ONE HUNDRED AND SIX YEARS OLD.—A few days ago a mulatto woman, named Rachel Myers, died in Philadelphia, who, it is believed, from ascertained dates of other events in her life, had reached the age of one hundred and six years. She was the mother of fourteen children, the youngest of whom only is living, and he is an old man. She was the mother of these children at the period of the American revolution. This aged woman continued to support herself with washing clothes till within the last year or two of her existence.

By a dispatch of the 14th from New York, we learn that the steamship Granada was then ashore on West Bank. The passengers and mails were taken to the city by a steam tug, but the steamer could not be got off without discharging her cargo.

BATTLE IN KANSAS.

Several Persons Killed and Wounded.

[BY THE NATIONAL LINE.]

WESTERN, Mo., January 18.—A battle was fought last night between the pro and anti-slavery parties at the town of Easton, Kansas Territory, and several persons were killed and wounded on both sides. It is said that the Abolitionists made the first attack. It is supposed that the difficulty grew out of the election of the fifteenth of December, and it is feared that the war has again commenced.

Additional Kansas News.

The Kickapoo (Kansas) Pioneer gives particulars of the battle at Easton. One pro-slavery man was killed and several wounded. Several abolitionists were killed and others wounded. A company of abolitionists from Lawrence, headed by a man named Brown, commenced the fight. The Kickapoo Rangers and large numbers of persons have left for Easton.

CONGRESSIONAL.

WASHINGTON, January 18.—Mr. Giddings advocated the plurality resolution, declaring that the House cannot organise.

Mr. Cobb said that with the Republicans the issue was Banks and disorganisation. He (Cobb) preferred Campbell, of Ohio, who could have been elected the other day had all voted on Thorington's resolution.

Mr. Tappan replied to Mr. Cobb, and said that the vote on Thorington's resolution was not fair, but as the Republicans made a nomination other than Campbell, the vote for Speaker yesterday showed that there was not an anti-Nebraska majority in the House.

Mr. Clingman offered a resolution providing that until a Speaker was elected the first business each day be to vote, and no debate be indulged in until this was done; the House not to order a vote a third time on the same day, pending which the House adjourned.

WASHINGTON, January 19th.—Senate not in session. In the House Clingman offered a resolution, that during the calling of the roll, no debating or personal explanations should be in order. This resolution also limited members to ten minute speeches, and is not to be suspended, except by unanimous consent of the House. The resolution was adopted, and the House proceeded to ballot for a Speaker, with the following result. Banks 94; Richardson 69; Fuller 21; Pennington 3; Campbell (of Ohio) 3; scattering 2.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 22.—Mr. Singleton, a member of the last Congress from Mississippi, has been confirmed as Consul at Havana.

Mr. Brown, of Buffalo, is appointed Consul at Tangier.

The President to-day communicated to the Senate, which was in executive session, Lord John Russell's letter of January 19, 1853, to Mr. Crampton, the British Minister, which declares that the British government intends to strictly carry out the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, and to assume no sovereignty, directly or indirectly, in Central America. The Senate removed the injunction from the Secretary of State, and the letter will be published.

Several Senators to-day informally concurred as policy, the advising the President to send a military force to Kansas to preserve the peace of the territory against the Missouri invaders.

In the House, several resolutions providing a way for the election of a Speaker were offered, each of which was tabled.

The House then took three ballots for Speaker, each with the following result: Banks, 91; Richardson, 67; Fuller, 29; Campbell, of Ohio, 5; scattering, 3. After which, the House adjourned.

LOUISIANA LEGISLATURE—FIRST DAY.

BATON ROUGE, Monday, January 21—Senate.—The Senate met to-day, and organised by electing Hon. W. F. Griffin, of Avoyelles, President pro tem. Twenty-five members were present. Joseph A. Warner was elected Secretary; B. Ohlidross Sergeant-at-Arms, and W. O. Martin Doorkeeper.

A letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting documents relative to the contested elections, was read and referred to a special committee, consisting of Messrs. Haralson, Simms, Lavergne, McMurdo and Buffington.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow, at ten o'clock.

House.—Mr. Van Winkle, of Pointe Coupee, was called to the chair, and after the roll had been called the House proceeded to ballot for a Speaker, with the following result: W. W. Pugh, of Assumption, 43; A. Duperier, of St. Martin, 37. Mr. Pugh was declared elected. Mr. Higgins was selected Chief Clerk, and Mr. Peralta Door-keeper, when the House adjourned until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

All the officers of both Houses are democrats.

SECOND DAY.

BATON ROUGE, Jan. 22.—The Governor's Message was read in both Houses and ordered to be printed.

SENATE.—The principal business before the Senate to-day was the contested elections.

A motion was made to appoint a committee which should proceed to New Orleans to take evidence in the matter, pending which, an exciting debate occurred. The Senate committee now have the subject under consideration.

HOUSE.—Mr. McDonald, of Claiborne, offered a resolution to appoint a committee to investigate the accounts of the State Printer. The resolution was referred to a committee of five.

Some gentleman offered a resolution thanking President Pierce for the sentiments contained in his message relative to slavery. The resolution lays over.

Mr. Semmes, of New Orleans, offered petitions and accompanying documents relating to the various contested seats in the House, which were referred to a committee of five, consisting of Messrs. Gantt, Semmes, Polk, Duperier and Sandford.

LATER FROM TEXAS.—The steamship Louisiana, Capt. Place, arrived last night from Indianola via Galveston.

Our Texas exchanges by this arrival contain nothing of importance. We see it stated that the Supreme Court has decided the suit, for the "Alumo property" in San Antonio, in favor of the Catholic Church.

The Galveston Civilian of Friday last has the following paragraphs:

The bark Ocean Wave, with another cargo of iron for the Galvesion, Houston and Henderson railroad, arrived yesterday morning. She reports that the Canada, with a similar cargo, had also sailed from Cardiff for this port.

The House of Representatives on the 9th inst., passed to a third reading, a supplement to the Henderson and Burkville Railroad, permitting the company to commence at or near the headwaters of the Sabine, Neches, or Trinity rivers; and in such case to construct the road to Henderson, before extending it to Sabine Luke or Galveston Bay.

The Trinity is yet down—so low as to be unworthy of respect. The pretence of a rise was a mere humbug. The Liberty Gazette of the 14th inst. says: "The steamers Star State and Jack Hays are now lying at the landing, awaiting a rise in the river."

From the commercial article of the Civilian, we extract the following:

At Galveston the weather has continued cold, with low tides, detaining sail vessels from sea outside the bar, and even interrupting the Tuesday's trip of the mail packet from Houston, by low water on Clopper's bar. Handling produce and imported goods upon the wharves has been difficult and tedious.

Notwithstanding these unfavorable circumstances, the receipts of produce have continued on a respectable scale, and the shipments have been equally good. The latter embrace 6,285 bales cotton, 68 hhds. sugar, 112 bbls. molasses, 686 hides, besides lots of peltries, wool, etc.

The receipts of cotton sum up 1,547 bales. The shipments, 6,825 bales. The market has exhibited much more animation than the weather was calculated to inspire. The sales for the week ending yesterday were about 800 bales, and there remain upon the market, this morning, about 600 bales.

WHO WROTE SHAKSPEARE?—Miss Delia Bacon a New Haven blue stocking, who is rather famous as a delver into history, has recently broached the theory that Shakspeare's plays were not written by Shakespeare, but by certain brilliant wits and choice spirits of the Court of Elizabeth. She is of opinion that nothing is more likely than that such men as Sir Walter Raleigh and Lord Bacon were the authors of those plays, which they palmed off on the world as Shakespeare's, with the feeling that it was rather vulgar for them to be engaged in such business! Shakspeare, in Delia's opinion, was a low actor, of no wit nor worth, but for a consideration of some sort, consented to act as man midwife to the conceptions of the great lights of the Elizabethan era!

Foreign News by the Atlantic.

Files of English papers by the steamship Atlantic date to the 29th ult. Advices from Constantinople are to the 14th, and from the Crimea to the 11th ult.

The details are unimportant, the only item of interest from the camp being that the Russians attacked the French position at Baga and Ourkust on the 9th, but were repulsed with a loss of eighty killed and twenty prisoners.

A letter from Sebastopol says:

"The enemy fire upon the town most pertinaciously and futilely, for they do not in the smallest degree hinder the execution of the works in which we are engaged, nor do they obstruct the duties of the garrison. Their fire is especially directed upon the docks, and it is not to be wondered at if some few casualities have been caused by it. All attempt to reply to their fire appears to have been abandoned by the Allies."

A letter from Sebastopol, of the 7th, gives some account of the fortifications which the Russians are now executing on the northern side of the harbor:

"I cannot say what advantages the Russians expect to derive from all the works which they are constructing on the north side of Sebastopol; but they are certainly most actively engaged on them, and there is not a hillock, a creek, or any position, however insignificant it may be, that is not secured by a battery, a fort or a redoubt.

"All these are commanded by the citadel, which has been so much increased that all that formerly existed is now concealed behind the immense work recently executed. As I have already mentioned, the activity of the Russians is most surprising. Every day bodies of from 2,000 to 3,000 men leave the citadel and proceed to their work."

Miss Nightingale continues at Soutari, and proposes dividing her time this winter between that place and the Crimea.

A high mass was performed on board the French flagship in the Black Sea, for the repose of the soul of Admiral Bruat.

An Odessa letter mentions that the fortifications at Nicolaieff are completed. Gen. Todtleben was at Odessa. So large is the influx of strangers into the Crimea that 80,000 persons are said to be at this moment at Simpheropol.

Dr. Iluffoagie, American Consul-General for the East, was at Rentoi, Dec. 11.

Gen. Luders has again taken up his quarters in Odessa, and recently gave a ball to celebrate the nuptials of his daughter—the only surviving child out of a family of twelve—with Col. Weimarn.

Marshal Pelissier is reported to have notified his government that no military success is possible from the present base of operations in the Crimea. Hence, they say, the grand council of war to be called in Paris to decide on a new plan for the spring campaign.

The Fall of Kars.

Advices from Erzeroum to the 20th of November bring full accounts of the surrender of Kars. Gen. Williams had intended to hold out to the end of November, in hopes of relief, but on the 24th eighty men perished of hunger, and seeing that no succor was at hand, he thought it needless to prolong the sufferings of the garrison.

The Journal of St. Petersburg contains the official act of the surrender of Kars; Mussif Pacha, the commander-in-chief, having given General Williams full power to negotiate. The fortress to be surrendered with all material intact: the guns not to be spiked: the guns and stores to be given up in the state they are mutually in. Nothing to be detracted or taken from the archives. On evacuating Kure the troops are to leave a post of three men and a corporal at each fort, treasury or hospital. Immediately the troops have left the place the posts are to be relieved by Russians. The garrison of Kars surrendering prisoners of war with the commander-in-chief of the Turkish army and all the military authorities, will leave the place with all the honors of war, and deposit their arms, flags, etc., in a spot agreed upon previously, when they will proceed to the destination indicated to them by the Russian commander-in-chief. As a testimonial of the valorous resistance made by the garrison of Kars, the officers of all ranks to keep their swords. Various other stipulations are made, including one that those permitted to return home are not again to engage in the war.

The Peace Prospects.

A letter from Vienna, of the 20th, in the Post Gazette of Frankfort, following in the opinion of the Frankfort German Journal, says that the "third point" has received a new interpretation to the effect that "in place of the propositions previously drawn up, the neutralization of the Black Sea has been admitted." The Western Powers put forward this interpretation some months ago; and if Austria did not immediately adopt it, it was because Sebastopol was not taken, and because it was not to be expected that Russia would accept conditions which, so to speak, would oblige her to destroy her fleet and raze her fortresses. The capture of Sebastopol has removed the obstacle to an understanding on the third point. Count Buol has not disguised from Prince Gortschakoff that the best thing Russia can do is to accede to what is now proposed. The great powers consider the third point as the condition sine qua non of peace, and Russia can accept it without injury to her political and military position. It thus appears that it is once more on Russia the decision of peace and war depends. Le Nord expresses disbelief of the statements that Prussia supports the Austrian propositions; and at home the Times embodies the general sentiment in saying it is probable that the mediators of to-day will in a few months quit their middle proposition, for "the German Powers have felt that the war is about to assume a terrible earnestness, which will make indifference impossible, and affected moderation a folly."

A letter from Berlin, under date the 20th, published in the Emunolpution Belge, says that the Ministers of the Court, as well as the King himself, have renewed their efforts at the Court of Russia. "Their language," says the writer, "is this time characterized by much firmness, and I have every reason to believe that the Czar will be touched by it. Our statesmen declare loudly that the war has been provoked by Russia without legitimate motives; and, the chances of war having been against them, there is a double reason for him to withdraw from it honorably. They add that Prussia will not abandon the system of neutrality she has adopted irrevocably, even though she saw the enemies of Russia increase. No one here now doubts that Sweden will enter actively into the Western alliance. It is even admitted as certain that Austria has promised efficacious assistance to the Allies, in the event of the Czar rejecting the overtures of Count Esterhazy. Public opinion hourly increases against Russia."

The following is said to be an extract from a private letter from a Russian nobleman attached to the court of the Emperor Alexander, to a relative in Paris:

"We suffer greatly from the war and everybody desires peace—everybody. * * * But in spite of our sufferings we would not consent to a peace dishonorable to Russia, nor to one which should diminish her power in any respect. Even those who opposed the war in the beginning, and were loudest in their complaints of Menschikoff, now say the same thing. * * * We laugh at the grotesque idea of our cabinet allowing itself to be influenced by the 'moral weight' of the German powers being thrown into the scale of the Allies—an idea which was started by the French Emperor, and which is insisted on by his newspapers.

"The 'moral weight' of the German powers! They have none! If their moral power had counted for anything in our eyes we should never have gone to war, for Austria and Prussia and all the German powers employed their 'moral power' to prevent us. But our old Chancellor Nesselrode thinks it politic to be civil to the said powers, and so our Emperor will probably return autograph replies to the letters he has received from them—but these letters will say nothing. * * * We are all pleased to see how firm the Czar remains in the midst of the disasters that have befallen us. He even beheld the ruins of Sebastopol without any real discouragement. * * * Peace is not so seriously thought of here, and all that is said about it in England; France and Germany, is silly. I doubt even if there will be any negotiations, but if there be, depend upon it that they will be undertaken on our part merely to gain some secondary object—not at all for peace."

France Hints at a European Congress.

The idea of calling together a European Congress, "to settle not only the present Eastern difficulty, but all the complications in European relations, that have arisen since the Congress of Vienna"—in other words, to readjust the balance of power—is reported to be the pet idea of the Emperor Napoleon, and to be exceeding distasteful to England. Napoleon is said to have actually commissioned M. de Siebouh, the Minister of Saxony, who has gone to St. Petersburg as bearer of the views of the smaller German States, to bring the suggestion under the immediate consideration of the Emperor Alexander.

How utterly displeasing this proposal is to the English government may be inferred from the language of the London Times, which says: "Rather than submit our quarrel to a Congress in which Russia would be omnipotent by the vote of her vassals and mercenaries, let the sword decide between us! We did not draw it without counting the cost, and we ought not to sheath it without some better guarantee than can be afforded by the wisdom or firmness of a Congress of European sovereigns. It is needless to say that the influence of France, more than of Russia, is feared in a Congress."

In connection with this alleged idea of Napoleon's is the publication in Paris of a pamphlet entitled, "Necessité d'un Congress Pacifier l'Europe: par un homme d'Etat." This pamphlet has made a sensation. Pains are taken to promulgate that the writer is a M. Dugrier, but the general impression is that the Emperor himself is the author. The work is largely quoted from in the English journals. It advocates the immediate call of a Congress of Nations.

Denmark.

M Binhme, the Danish Plenipotentiary for conducting the Conference on the Sound Dues, is understood to be now occupied in preparing a revision of the tariff, to be submitted to the nations interested. Within a few days the Danish government has issued invitations for a new Conference, and has, on this occasion, invited Hamburg, Bremen and Lubeo to be represented.

The idea of having the revenue derivable from the Sound Dues capitalised and paid off by the various States has been given up, and the retention of the dues under conditions less burdensome to commerce is to be the object of the coming conferences, which are expected to open in January.

The War in Asia.

From Asia we learn that the garrison of Kutais has quitted that place, and returned to Gori, a defile leading into Georgia.

The Press d'Orient states that General Williams, as well as the other English officers who were at Kars, will remain prisoners of war, but that one of the conditions of the capitulation was that the Poles and Hungarians should preserve their liberty. The letter have arrived at Erzeroum with General Kmety. General Mourovieff has, it is said, sent a column on to Akhaltzik.

Selim Pacha, with 12,000 men, is still at Trebizonde, waiting for the arrival of the Egyptian division.

The Baltic.

In the early part of the present year the Russian government ordered that all persons who came to Fluland from Sweden must remain there till the end of summer. A new order is now promulgated, and foreigners who henceforth visit Finland must remain there till the end of the war.

Russia.

Treaty between Russia and United States.

The following is published in the English papers:

A telegraphic dispatch from Berlin relates an unconfirmed rumor to the effect that Russia and the United States have concluded a treaty, offensive and defensive, in case war should break out between Britain and America, but another version is, that the agreement merely relates to the purchase of ships of war.

The following is a paragraph in the Vienna Austrian Gazette: "There is a good deal of talk in the military circles of a treaty having recently been concluded between the Cabinets of St. Petersburg and Washington, in which they bind themselves to lend each other effective assistance in the event of war breaking out between the United States and the Western Powers. It is further said, and with greater probability, that Russia is negotiating with the United States for forty-five or fifty ships of war."

A letter from St. Petersburg of the 11th says: "I have already sent you an account of the betrothal of the Grand Duke Nicholas. He was born on the 8th of August, 1831, and the Princess Alexandria, daughter of Prince Peter of Oldenburg, to whom he is affianced, on the 12th of June, 1838. The Queen Dowager of the Netherlands, Anna Pawlona, aunt of the Emperor, has since her arrival been residing in the palace of Anitchkiew. I am told that she has succeeded in establishing a sort of harmony between Alexander II and the Grand Duke Constantine. The Emperor is generally beloved on account of his mild character, but the Grand Duke is heartily detested. He is likewise dreaded, his violence of character being such that he too often passes the bounds of common brutality.—This fault, which is generally so rare in a young man, is strikingly developed in the Grand Duke Constantine, who resembles in all respects his two uncles, Constantine and Michael, of deplorable memory. The Grand Duke, who is sincerely to be pitied, falls at times into paroxysms of terrible fury, and these attacks are followed by a sort of physical and moral prostration.—Do not, therefore, believe the newsmongers, who announce that the crown of Poland will be given to the Grand Duke Constantine."

Austria.

The Wiener Zeitung announces that the city of Vienna intends to take under its special direction the celebration of the festival in honor of the 100th anniversary of Mozart's birth-day. On the 27th of January there will be a monster concert, at which nothing but music of Mozart's composition will be performed. There will be between 1,000 and 2,000 performers, professional and non-professional, present.

In the month of March next the usual number of recruits will be raised in Austria. No unnecessary noise is made about the matter, but Cracow, Przemysl, and a third point at the Eastern extremity of the Bukowina, are being very strongly fortified. Cracow will be one of the strongest fortresses in Europe. Ten thousand soldiers are still assisting in the construction of the Galician railroads.

England.

The Queen has appointed William Miller, now her Majesty's Consul General in the Sandwich Islands, and other Islands in the Pacific Ocean, to be her Majesty's Commissioner and Consul General in the Sandwich Islands and their dependencies.

Mr. Laird, the ship-builder of Liverpool, has received an order from the British government to build fourteen gun-boats, ten of the class 230 tons and 100 feet long, and four 212 tons and 100 feet long.

The report of the Highland Society to the Board of Trade, on the crops in Scotland, just published, will strengthen the opinion that, while there is ground for prudence and economy, there is none to apprehend anything like scarcity or famine.

The total strength of the army in Ireland, including all arms, is 32,340 men, of which 9,376 are stationed in the Dublin district.

It has been decided by the Liverpool Dock Committee to increase the dock rates upon tonnage and goods 10 per cent. on the average, a measure which will, it is anticipated, add £37,000 sterling to their annual revenue. The rate upon cotton to the 5th of January, 1856, will be on American, 6d per bale; on South American, 3d; and on East Indian, 4d per bale.

Ireland.

The Dublin Mail, referring to the unquestionable fact of a marked increase this year in the number of returned Irish emigrants, observes:

"Some are even so provident as to have written over from the States to bespeak seaweed and guano, to be deposited against the time of their arrival in the locality where they propose to commence operations. The most probable solution, therefore, of this turn of the tide is that the soundness of last year's potato crop has revived a faith in the old soil, and that these poor people are coming back in a full belief in the restitution of things to the status quo. The fact of the multitudinous return of Irish emigrants is true, and not unimportant."

For some months past several of the provincial journals, especially those published in the West of Ireland, have been directing public attention to the fact of a slow but steady increase in the return of the present population to the old country.

France.

The late building of the Paris Exposition is proposed to be turned into a hippodrome.

The "Phare de la Manche" announces that 30,000 or 40,000 men will probably be encamped this winter in the neighborhood of Cherbourg for the purpose of being embarked next spring for the Russian Baltic provinces. The establishment of another camp of 20,000 men, near Brest, is also talked of.

The Moniteur de l'Armee states that within the last few months upwards of 20,000 soldiers, whose time of service was expired, had re-entered the army, in consequence of the advantages held out by the new military law of the 26th April, 1854. Since the beginning of the war substitutes were paid 3,500f., 4,500., and in 1855 as high as 5,000f. each. The rate of exoneration from military service, fixed by the Minister of War for 1856 at 2,800f., is consequently much lower than that required by private companies.

A grand council of war is to be held at Paris of all the Generals who have returned from the Crimea. Pelissier approves of it, and the Duke of Cambridge and Gen. Marmora will be present.

The accouchment of the Empress is expected to occur about March 25th.

The American captains frequenting the port of Havre have sent an application to the Emperor to grant more extended facilities for translation and maritime agencies at that port.

Spain.

The decimal system was to have come into operation in all the custom-houses of Spain on the 1st of January.

Danish Sound Dues.

BERLIN, December 18.—In this latter affair only two States have as yet pronounced in favor of Denmark's views, viz: Russia and Mecklenburg. On the part of the former it took place some time back, when Count Nesselrode stated to the representative of Denmark at St. Petersburgh that the Minister of Finance would not be able to part with so large a sum as would be required to capitalise Russia's contributions hitherto made annually to the Sound Dues, and that therefore Russia would be in favor of their continuance on the present footing.

Since then, Mecklenburg-Schwerin has declared that she has no objections to offer to the continuance of the Sound-Dues as at present constituted. This is easily accounted for by the interest Mecklenburg has in the retention of the Elbe Dues, which must be given up at once as soon as the Sound Dues have been done away with. It is understood that Lord Clarendon has declared to the Danish Minister with reference to the possibility of any vessels of the United States passing the Sound or Belts without paying dues, that whenever that should take place, no English minister would be able any longer to submit to England's paying any.

The London Times closes a leading article upon the subject of the Sound Dues, as follows:

"Whatever justice there may be in the arguments which the Americans so peremptorily urge, there can be no doubt but the payment of these dues, consecrated by prescription, and justified by common sense, may fairly be demanded. To such an extent, indeed, has this demand been admitted by Great Britain, that the interest on Danish loans raised in this country has been guaranteed on the receipt of these very Sound Dues. Again, the expense of keeping up the aids to navigation would fall on a small and poor state, which gains but little from the trade of its great neighbors.

"Denmark has, however, ground her claims on a wrong basis. She claims the right to stop any ship at pleasure, not because she has built light-houses, but because she is one of the powers which hold the Strait. She alleges that it is only of her free bounty that a ship proceeds, even when it has paid the dues. She holds to the theory that a power possessing the shores of a Strait may exclude all foreign vessels—a claim entirely indefensible, and one which would, as Mr. Marcy urges, close the Dardanelles and the Straits of Reggio, and even the Mediterranean, if the British once more possessed Tangier.

"If Denmark takes lower ground she will have the world on her side. Every nation is interested in preserving the safe navigation of the Sound and Belts, and is willing to pay a fair amount for such safety. The trade of the Baltic will probably be vastly increased when this war has been brought to a close, and we trust that by that time Denmark will have made fair terms with the nations of both the Old and New World.—[Cor. OUR PRESENT RELATIONS WITH GREAT BRITAIN.—Under date of 14th, the Washington correspondent of the Baltimore Sun writes:

The precise position of our relations with England is not yet understood by the public, though possibly it is as well comprehended now as it will be after the diplomatic veil which covers it shall be lifted.

I may confidently state at this time, that no demand for the recall of Mr. Crampton has been made upon England. A general demand for reparation was made last September, and it was left for the British government to make that reparation by rebuking and recalling her minister and consuls or in any other way.

But the British government assumed the responsibility of the acts of her minister and consuls, and has made

IN A PASSION; OR, THE DEVILS OF A HASTY TEMPER.

BY RAMS CUTHBERLAND.

"Hannah, sir," said Hannah, our chambermaid, speaking in a hesitating manner, as if she knew the communication about to be made would produce a disagreeable impression.

"Well, Hannah, what is it?" returned Uncle Abel, looking up for over the top of the morning paper, which had proved more attractive to him than the cup of coffee, which he had only tasted and put it back on the table beside him. The quick eye of the good man's countenance showed that he was prepared for something disagreeable.

"Edwards' girl is at the door, sir."

"What does Mr. Edwards' girl want with me?"

The Edwards family were inveterate borrowers, and my uncle was beginning to lose all patience with them.

"She says, will you please—" The chambermaid hesitated.

"Lend what? It's best, of course!"

The old gentleman's face was crimsoning.

"I'll pay you're using it," replied Hannah, in as soothing a tone as she could venture to assume.

"No, you needn't!" angrily replied my uncle. "I don't want you to put words into my mouth. Tell the girl to tell Mr. Edwards that if he wishes to read the morning paper, he can subscribe for it, as I do."

Hannah looked doubtingly at the excited old gentleman. She did not wish to be bearer of such a message.

"Do hear!" said uncle Abel, in an imperative voice.

Hannah turned and left the room.

"The bad! Outrageous! The family is a nuisance!" ejaculated uncle Abel, in an unusually excited manner. "I'll stop taking the paper. If I can to be annoyed in this way." And he pushed the crackling sheet as he threw his head from him.

I can with difficulty repress a smile, as I looked at the really kind-hearted old man, in his present excitement.

"It will be angry!" I said, the moment I saw it would speak to his reason.

"It is not well, Kate," he answered, in a calmer voice. "It is not well. And I am sorry to know better."

"This is very rough message you sent to a neighbor."

"What did I say?" The old gentleman looked a little frightened.

"Why, you told Hannah to tell the girl to tell Mr. Edwards that if he wanted to read the morning paper to subscribe for it, as you did."

Uncle Abel looked, and looked down upon the floor with a small, silent pain. His spirit was subdued.

"Mr. Edwards appears to be a very gentlemanly man," said I.

"I am gentlemanly to be forever annoying people here and cursing their property," retorted uncle Abel, a little sharply.

He was making a feeble effort at self-justification, but it would not answer. His own conscience was not satisfied.

"Perhaps it could I," "Mr. Edwards" paper failed to reach him."

"I got mine," he answered.

"It's no use to argue the matter Kate, and try to place me in the wrong," said the old gentleman, warming up. "There's nothing to justify this conduct."

Uncle Abel's breakfast was spoiled for that morning. He laid down the paper, tasted the cold coffee, and then pushed the cup away.

"Your coffee is cold," said I. "Let me pour out another cup."

"No, I don't want any more," he answered, getting up and leaving the table.

What a troublesome thing a quick temper is; and the more so, if it leads to hasty speech. Some of the best-hearted people, naturally, are quick tempered. They suffer, of course, greatly from their infirmity, but never seem to gain much power over it. Of this class is my excellent uncle, to whose affectionate care I am indebted for a pleasant home.

I noticed that he did not leave the house quite as early as usual, and that as he walked, constantly, the parlor floor, he now and then looked inquiringly on me towards the street. In short, he was waiting until he was certain Mr. Edwards had left home, so as to run no risk of meeting him.

My uncle was, in fact, heartily ashamed of his hasty outbreak of temper, and he felt that he stood rather very badly in the eyes of his neighbor. It was not an unusual thing for them to meet during the day, and to pass a friendly greeting. How could my uncle look Mr. Edwards in the face, after what had happened? And on the other hand, how would Mr. Edwards treat him, should their paths cross each other during the day?

Poor old gentleman! He was really troubled at the folly of his hasty speech.

The day, as he had feared, proved one of seeing annoyances. Once he saw Mr. Edwards, half a block in advance, and coming towards him. A friendly corner was at hand, and a short turn enabled him to escape the unwelcome meeting.

Again, glancing up at there, he saw Mr. Edwards talking with the proprietor. The former did not observe him, and he quickly withdrew, feeling something like guilt in his heart.

Once he met Mr. Edwards face to face. The latter bowed, with his usual politeness, as if nothing had happened; and this was to uncle Abel a bitter reproach. He would have felt better if Mr. Edwards had met him coldly, or quite disdain.

The fourth and last time that he came in contact with his neighbor, was late in the afternoon, when he was within a few paces of his own house. Mr. Edwards overtook him, and, offering his hand, remarked cheerfully on the state of the weather and the news of the day. As they were parting at our door, Mr. Edwards drew from his pocket a newspaper, and said, as he handed it to my uncle—

"I translated a late copy of the London Times, to-day. It contains an article on the United States, which I am sure will interest you."

"Thank you! thank you!" stammered uncle Abel, pushing back the paper. "But don't let me deprive you of the pleasure of reading it."

"There is enough for me," replied Mr. Edwards, as there was enough for us. I will enjoy it the more from knowing that the perusal has given pleasure. So take it, take it, and you can send it in any time. Good evening."

And Mr. Edwards passed on, leaving the Times with uncle Abel.

How this event was pointed, and my uncle felt it keenly. He came in looking hurt and depressed, and laid the paper quietly down.

I happened to be standing at the parlor window, and so heard what passed between the two gentlemen. My uncle's state of mind was, therefore, no mystery to me.

"Pretty severely punished," thought I. It was all in vain that I tried to win his thoughts from unpleasant reflections; he answered me only in monosyllables. Even his favorite airs on the piano failed to restore a cheerful shade to his countenance.

"Alas!" thought I, "how much of suffering we draw upon our own hearts. Those quick tempers and hasty words, how like the furies, do they spoil our tender grapes."

"Kate," said I, as we sat at the tea table, (uncle Abel had spread the butter on both sides of his bread, piled it with his spoon, done in fact, almost anything but eat his supper,) "what message did you send to Mr. Edwards this morning?"

Hannah grew crimson in the face, and stammered forth something that neither of us could make out.

"What was it, Hannah?" said I.

"I—I—I told the girl th-that I would send Mr. Edwards the paper in a few minutes."

"You did!" said uncle Abel, in a tone of surprise.

"Yes, sir."

"And why did you say that?"

"Because, sir, I thought that was what you would say on reflection."

"And did you send the paper in?"

"Yes, sir, when you was through with it. I hope I haven't done very wrong."

"No, Hannah," said the dear old man, getting up and assuming almost a supernatural air before the girl, "you did very right, and I thank you for your kind discretion."

Hannah, relieved at heart, turned away, and from the room.

Abel was restored to himself; and I have suffered through that day, has to a little self-control. [Arthur's Magazine.

[From the Boston Post.]

ARE THESE MYSTERIES MODERN IN ORIGIN.

Messrs. Editors: Since the learned Mahan, in his recent work, admits the actual occurrence of the remarkable phenomena among us, but attributes them to the virtue of an "adylic force" resident in man, which he thinks has sufficient power, in a prayerful mind, to move the omnipotent and immutable Jehovah; and since we have already narrated facts of similar character witnessed by twelve disinterested men of intelligence, allow a few additional remarks in your columns bearing upon the same subject. It matters not whether President M has detected the real cause of these things from personal observation, or from a perusal of Prof. Rogers's book, he has certainly succeeded in exposing, in a masterly manner, one modern mystery of some magnitude. He has disclosed the cause of numerous clergymen very busy in secret among the circles, while that professional order was publicly declaiming against these things as of the devil, denouncing them as magic, imposture, and soul-destroying, and warning their hearers not by any means to attend their circles, to keep as far from them as Moses kept the Israelites from Sinai while he was receiving the law near its summit; but, congratulating the President on his success, we proceed to draw from a book printed over a century since; and thus adduce testimony from the middle ages.

Its title page reads thus:

"The history of the wonderful Don Ignatius Loyola de Guipuscoa; founder of the Order of Jesuits, with an account of the establishment and government of that powerful Order.

Translated from the French.

In two volumes.

London:

Printed for J. Boonst, in Pater-Noster Row.

MDCCLIV."

It will be observed that this book was printed over one hundred years ago. How long before that time it was written we have no means now of judging. Loyola died on the morning of July 31, 1556, at Rome, aged 65 years.

To show that departed spirits are not now for the first time, alleged to appear to mortal vision, we quote the following from the said biography:

"A moment after he expired he appeared at Bologna to a lady of quality, greatly attached to the society, a great alms-giver, and continually employed in works of charity in the hospitals and prayers in the churches. This pious lady, named Margarita Gigli, sleeping tranquilly on the morning of the 31st July, was suddenly awaked by a terrible noise, which shook her whole chamber. She had no sooner opened her eyes than in the midst of bright moonlight she saw the saint shine with brighter rays, who said to her, Margarita, to-day thou I am going, as you see; I recommend my children to you. So the said he disappeared, and Margarita went immediately to relate what she had seen to Father Francis Palmis, her confessor. Though she had never seen our blessed founder, she gave so exact a description of his features, that those who had longest conversed with him could not have described him better. Meantime, as they were ignorant at Bologna of the danger he was in, and even knew not that he was sick, the fathers of the society, to whom the confessor related this admirable vision of his penitent, suspected it for a falsehood. But a few days after news of the saint's death arrived; and the precise moment in which he expired agreed so well with that of his apparition, that the fathers no longer doubted but Lady Gigli had seen St. Ignatius.

"In connection herewith, it should be remembered that railroads and telegraphs had not, at that time, been introduced into Italy; and, therefore, the means of traveling were not so facile as they are now among us. Bologna is one hundred and seventy-five miles from Rome.

As evidence that manifestations similar to those now transpiring among us, were in vogue at least three centuries ago, we adduce another passage from the same book, styled the conquest of Ignatius over the demon who had possessed Matthew, a young Biscayan, who was a valet in the order. "Satan entered into him while Ignatius was absent. * * * *

The devil having entered into the body of the young Biscayan, tormented him horribly day and night, sometimes raising him up into the air and at other times rendering him so heavy that ten men could with difficulty lift him. After having vainly made use of the sign of the cross and the holy water, so formidable to demons, they told the demon that Ignatius was coming, and would quickly drive him from the valet's body. At these words the evil spirit cast forth the most terrible cries, and said, by the mouth of the Biscayan, do not speak to me of Ignatius; he is the greatest enemy I have in the world. I abhor and detest him.

"Ignatius being then returned to the house, took Matthew aside and spoke to him in private. The devil then left him."

One more extract in this wise, relating to certain spirits alleged to have disturbed the repose of the Ignatians at the college of Loretto: "These hobgoblins came every night and made a horrible noise in the chambers of this college. They overturned the furniture, and drew the clothes off the beds, and shook the house with peals of laughter that were quite insupportable. They endeavored to banish them by exorcisms, but they continued firm in spite of the most powerful means. At last they sent word to Ignatius of all this disorder, who answered that he had no power over these devils, because they were not capable to do mischief without permission from God."

The resemblance of modern mysteries to those occurring in earlier ages is very striking. There is no need of going back so far as the time of the apostles, who were able to exorcise some, and unable to exorcise others, and to whom spirits spoke through the mouths of the possessed while they were trying to exorcise them, and sometimes cast their victims about upon the ground, where they wallowed and foamed. The mother church has a fruitful record of like occurrence for ages back. Protestants have denied their existence, till they are now beginning to yield to insurmountable evidence of the fact.

Mark, for instance, that our mediums are driven by this strange impulse to write upon paper, with lightning speed, sentiments not their own; that they are compelled to utter with their voice communications not their own; that they are lifted from the ground, floated about in the air, and thrown in different directions, and that none of them are ever injured. See above, "not capable to do mischief." Mark, also, that pondrous furniture is made to feel light as a feather, as well as to appear too heavy for the combined strength of many men to lift, tied in knots, and scattered about the room; pillows are forcibly hurled around; noises are heard, even to notes of music and song. Many other things, well authenticated, are daily taking place in all quarters; and considerable of it is done systematically, as if there were a unity of control and concert of action. All these things are wonderful to us, because of their apparent novelty; but they are part and parcel of the vast machinery of nature. They are permitted by its wise Author to transpire; and we are permitted to be partial spectators of them, as we are to behold some of the glories of the material Universe.

In the American Medical Gazette, Dr. Reese thus earnestly reiterates his advice to apply flour to scalds and burns: "We still see reported almost daily, an appalling number of deaths by burns and scalds; not one of which, we take upon ourselves to say, need prove fatal, or would do so, if a few pounds of wheat flour could be promptly applied to the wounds made by fire, and repeated until the inflammatory stage had passed. We have not known a fatal case of scalding or burning in which this practice has been pursued, during more than thirty years' experience, and have treated hundreds in both public and private practice. We have known the most extensive burns by falling into caldrons of boiling oil, and even molten copper, and yet the patient was rescued by this simple and cheap remedy, which, from its infallible success, should supplant all the fashionable nostrums; whether oil, cotton, lead water, ice, tar-poultice, or pain extractors, every one of which has been tried a thousand times with fatal results, and the victims have died in excruciating agony, when a few handfuls of flour would have calmed them to sleep, and rescued them from pain and death. Humanity should prompt the profession to publish and republish the facts on this subject, which are established by the authority of standard medical works on both sides of the Atlantic."

A Sketch from Life.

At five o'clock on Thanksgiving morning, Deacon Wilson arose as he was wont, no holiday making any change in his hours. Yet now he no longer sprang from his bed with the alacrity which changed duty into pleasure; he rose because imperious necessity commanded it. There were the cattle to be fed and watered, and the poultry to receive the same attention, and there was moreover a fire to be made in the huge old kitchen fire-place, for the Deacon had now no servant or helper, and in the grey winter of his life, the whole burthen of managing his place had fallen on his shoulders. Fortunately they were broad and strong—fortunately, his constitution was good, his spirits elastic, and his piety sincere, for his burthens and trials were indeed weighty. He had been comparatively rich—he was now in embarrassed circumstances. He had looked forward to the time when a son should relieve him of the most laborious of his toils, while a daughter performed the same kind office for his wife. Both had been disappointed—and now the old couple were the solitary tenants of that lone farm house.

The Deacon went mechanically about his morning labors; he drove the cattle to the water tank; he supplied them with fresh fodder, and after seeing that they were comfortable, returned to the old kitchen. By this time the good wife had prepared a breakfast, and a genial fire was diffusing its heat through the apartment.

The old couple sat down to breakfast, after a blessing by the old farmer, but the meal passed by in silence. It was followed by a fervent prayer and the reading of a portion of the Scriptures. After this they adjourned to the sitting room, where a good fire was burning, and where the old dame assumes her knitting, one of those incomprehensible pieces of female industry, which seems to have neither beginning nor end.

"Well," said she with a sigh, "This is Thanksgiving day. It does'nt seem like old times at all. We used to have a house full of company, frolicksome young folks, and cheerful old people; and now we are all alone, alone."

"Last Thanksgiving day," said the old man, "there was one with us who seemed to my old eyes like an angel of light, with her fairy golden hair floating like a glory on her shoulders, and her little foot making music as she moved about the old house. But even then there was a hectic flush upon her cheek, like the red upon the maple leaf in autumn. When the January snows lay deep on the hills and in the hollows, we carried her to her last home—but God's will be done."

"You forget that we have another child alive."

"No, I do not forget it," said the old man bitterly. "There is one living somewhere, who has brought disgrace upon our name, who has forgotten his parents and his God; who has drunk deep of the cup of iniquity, and who has brought ruin and woe upon his name and family.

"Do not speak harshly of poor William," pleaded the mother.

"Why should I not? Was he not insensible to kindness—steeled against affection? Did he not scatter my hard earning to the wind? Is it not to him that I owe the prospect of beggary and destitution? Remember the first of February. That is the last day of grace. If the money comes not then, and God knows whence it is to come, we are houseless beggars. Who will care for us then?"

"God will care for us," said the aged woman, raising her eyes reverently to heaven.

The old man made no reply, for his utterance was choked. At that moment the old clock that stood ticking in the corner, struck the hour of nine. The deacon rose.

"It is time to harness old Dobbin," said he, "for we have a long way to ride to meeting, and the roads are in a bad condition."

Their preparations were soon made, and the old couple, poorly but decently attired, sallied forth to their public devotions. The services ended, the deacon and his wife, as they issued from the porch, were kindly greeted by many old friends and neighbors, more than one of whom pressed them to come and partake of their thanksgiving cheer. But the deacon shook his head.

"Many thanks, my friends," said he, "but ever since I have been a householder, I have kept my thanksgiving at home, and I shall continue to do so, so long as I have a house remaining over my head."

So they rode home together. While the deacon drove up to the barn to put up his horse, the old lady opened the back door, which was always on the latch, and entered the kitchen. As she did so, she started back. A stranger was seated by the kitchen fire, who rose on her entrance. He was a tall, stalwart man, dressed in a rough suit, with a broad-leafed hat; his countenance embrowned by exposure to the sun and wind, and his upper lip almost concealed by a heavy and luxuriant moustache.

"Good morning, ma'am," he said with some embarrassment. "Finding no one answered my knocks, I took the liberty of walking in. I believe I owe you no apology, for I have officiated as turnspit, and saved your thanksgiving turkey from burning."

"I am very much obliged to you, I am sure, answered the old lady, pulling off her mittens. "But did you want to see me, or the deacon?"

"Both of you," answered the stranger. "You had a son, I believe?"

"Yes," replied Mrs. Wilson, with hesitation, and casting down her eyes.

"I have seen him lately."

"Where?" inquired the mother, with increased agitation.

"In California."

"Was he doing well?"

"Admirably. Mother! mother," he added impetuously, throwing back his hat, "don't you know me—don't you know your William?"

He rushed into his mother's arms, and was clasped to her beating heart, while the tears streamed from the eyes of both. After the first greeting was over, the young man asked:

"Where is sister Emmy?"

"Gone," answered the mother, as her tears flowed forth anew.

William sank into a seat, and hiding his face in his hands, wept bitterly. The mother did not attempt to check him. She knew those tears were precious.

"And my father?" asked the young man, when he regained his composure.

"He is well. But you had better retire for awhile. Go to your old room, my son, it is just as you left it, and wait till I summon you."

It was with a fluttering heart that the overjoyed mother went about the preparations for dinner, and when the table was neatly set, every dish in its place, and the turkey smoking hot, waiting to be carved, she summoned the old man. He made his appearance at once, and took his seat. Glancing round the table he said:

"What is this, wife, you have set plates for three?"

"I thought perhaps somebody might drop in unexpectedly."

"There is little danger—hope, I mean—of that," answered the deacon sadly.

At this juncture, Mrs. Wilson, with a mysterious expression, rang the bell, with which, in happier days, she was wont to summon her tardy children to their meals.

It was answered by the appearance of the long-lost William.

The deacon, who recognized him after a moment, gazed upon him with a stern eye, but with a quivering lip that betrayed the force of his till-suppressed emotions.

"So you have come back at last," he said.

"Yes, father, but not as I left you. Father, last Thanksgiving day I went into my lonely room, and there, kneeling down, addressed myself to Heaven, and solemnly abjured the fatal oath which had brought ruin upon me, and woe upon this once happy family. From that day to this I have not touched a drop. Is my probation enough? Can you now welcome back your son and bless him?"

"Bless him! Yes, yes, bless you, my dear, dear boy!" said the old deacon, placing his trembling hand on the dark locks of the pleader. "You are welcome William, though you come only to witness the downfall of our house."

"Not so, father," answered the young man joyously, "I have come back to save you—to atone for my prodigality, for all my errors. It was this hope that sustained me in the lone heart of Sierra Nevada, when I was panting with thirst and dying with hunger. Thoughts of home, of you and mother, and God's angels, enabled me to conquer fortune. I have come back with a store of gold—you shall not be a beggar in your old age; father, we shall keep the farm."

Traits and Personal Attributes of the "Father of his Country."

BY G. W. P. CUSTIS.

One afternoon several young gentlemen, visitors at Mount Vernon, were engaged in pitching the bar, one of the athletic sports common in those days, when suddenly the Colonel appeared among us. He requested to be shown the pegs that marked the bounds of our efforts; then, smiling and without pulling off his coat, held out his hand for the missile. "No sooner," observed the narrator, with emphasis, "did the heavy iron bar feel the grasp of his mighty hand, than it lost the power of gravitation and whizzed through the air, striking the ground far, very far, beyond our utmost limits. We were indeed amazed, as we stood around, all stripped to the buff, with shirt sleeves rolled up, and having thought ourselves very clever fellows, while the Colonel on retiring pleasantly observed, 'When you beat my pitch, young gentlemen, I'll try again.'"

In giving a graphic description of the stature and form of Washington, we give not only the result of personal observation and experience of many years, but information derived from the highest authority—a favorite nephew.

Major Lawrence Lewis asked his uncle what was his height in the prime of life? He replied, "In my best days, Lawrence, I stood six feet and two inches in ordinary shoes." We know that he measured by a standard precisely six feet when laid out in death. Of his weight we are an evidence, having heard him say to Crawford, Governor of Canada, in 1799: "My weight in my best days, sir, never exceeded from two hundred and ten to twenty." His form was unique, unlike most athletic frames that expand at the shoulders and then gather in at the hips.

The form of Washington deviated from the general rule, since it descended from the shoulders to the hips in perpendicular lines, the breadth of the trunk being nearly as great at the one as the other. His limbs were long, large and sinewy; in his lower limbs, he was what is usually called straight-limbed. His joints, feet and hands were large, and could a cast have been made of his right hand, so far did its dimensions exceed nature's model that it would have been preserved in museums for ages, as the anatomical wonder of the eighteenth century. La Fayette remembered this remarkable hand, when, during his triumph in America, he said to us in the portico at Mount Vernon, "It was here in 1784 I was first introduced to you by the good General; it is a long while ago; you were then a very little gentleman, rigged out in cap and feather, and held by one finger of the General's mighty hand. It was all you could do at that time, my dear sir."

The eyes of the chief were a light grayish blue, deep sunken in their sockets, giving the expression of gravity and thought. Stuart painted those eyes a deeper hine, saying, in a hundred years they will have faded to their right color. His hair was of a hazel brown, and very thin in his latter days. In his movements he preserved in a remarkable degree, and to advantage, the elastic step that he had acquired in service on the frontier.

Being ordered one morning very early into the library at Mount Vernon, a spot that none entered without orders, the weather being warm, we found the chief very much undressed, and while looking at his manly frame, we discovered the centre of his chest was indented. This is an exception to the general rule laid down by anatomists, that where the human frame possesses great muscular power, the chest should rather be rounded out and protuberant than indented. We were equally surprised to find how thin he was in person, being, with the absence of flesh, literally a man of "thews and sinews." He wore around his neck the miniature portrait of his wife. This he had worn through all the vicissitudes of his eventful career, from the period of his marriage to the "last days at Mount Vernon."

In the appearance of Washington there was nothing of hulkiness, but there was united all that was dignified and graceful, while his air and manner were at once noble and commanding. No one approached him that did not feel for him, as Lord Erskine observed, "a degree of awful reverence." He wore a sword with a peculiar grace. The Viscompte de Neuilles said it was because "the man was made for the sword, and not the sword for the man."

La Fayette, not long after the war of the Revolution, wrote a letter to Col. Trumbull, urging him to paint an equestrian portrait of the Chief as he appeared on the field of Monmouth. The illustrious Frenchman, America's great benefactor, said to me: "I was a very young Major-General on that memorable day, and had a great deal to do, but took time, amid the heat and fury of the fight, to gaze upon and admire Washington, as, mounted on a splendid charger covered with foam, he rallied our line with words never to be forgotten. 'Stand fast, my boys, and receive your enemy; the Southern troops are advancing to support you!' I thought then as I now do," continued the good La Fayette, "that never have I seen so superb a man."

When this noble Empire shall have achieved its high destiny, and embracing a Continent, attained a power and grandeur unexampled in the history of nations, the future American, from the topmost height of his greatness, will look back upon the early days of his country and call up the "time-honored" memories of the heroic era and the age of Washington; and, when contemplating the image of the Pater Patriæ, perpetuated by the mellowed tints of the canvas and freshness of time-enduring bronze, with honest pride of ancestery he will exclaim, my forefather was the associate of that great man in the perils and glories of the struggle for American independence. Let there be undying honor to the memory of Washington.

Ever green be the laurels that deck his trophied tomb; ever living be the homage in the hearts of his countrymen and mankind for the patriot, the hero and the sage who, under Providence, with humble means so much contributed to raise his native land from the depths of dependence and to place her in the rank of nations; who presided over her civic destinies in the dawn of the great experiment of self-government; and who, after an illustrious life spent in the service of liberty and mankind, and without a cloud to dim the luster of his fame, descended to the grave with the anguet title of the Father of his Country.

WHICH HAVE A COMMON ORIGIN IN

MALARIA OR MIASMA.

This subtle atmospheric poison, which at certain seasons is unavoidably inhaled at every breath, is the same in character wherever it exists—north, south, east or west—and will everywhere yield to the newly-discovered ANTIDOTE, which neutralizes the poison, completely purifies the system, and thus entirely removes all the causes of disease.

The proprietor distinctly claims these extraordinary results from its use:

It will protect any resident or traveler, even in the most sickly or swampy localities, from any ague or bilious disease whatever, or any injury from constantly inhaling Malaria or Miasma.

It will instantly check the ague in persons who have suffered for any length of time, from ONE DAY TO TWENTY years, so that they need never have ANOTHER CHILL, by continuing its use according to directions.

It will immediately relieve all the distressing results of bilious or ague diseases, such as general debility, night sweats, etc. The patient at once begins to recover appetite and strength, and continues until a permanent and radical cure is effected. And as a proof that it is

Payment to be made at the close of each term. Board, including lodging, washing, lights and fuel, can be procured in the village and immediate neighborhood at ten dollars per month. Students will be received at any time during the session, and will be charged only from the time of their entrance to the end of the term. They would however, respectfully urge all parents or guardians who design placing their daughters or wards in the institution, to do so at their earliest convenience, as it will tend much to the individual interest of the pupils, and the general prosperity of the school, facilitating, as it will, a proper arrangement of the various classes in their respective branches of study.

School books, stationery, &c., may be had at any of the various stores in the village at the usual rates.

Reports will be sent to parents and guardians quarterly, in which will be stated the health, improvement, social and moral deportment of their daughters or wards, with such other information as may be deemed important.

As the design of the Faculty is to render the instruction thorough, and lay the foundation of a substantial education, no young lady will be permitted to rank higher than her attainments will justly entitle her, nor to pass into another department in the course of instruction without having made sufficient proficiency in the preceding studies.

The government of the school is to be understood as that of authority—though parental and mild, yet decided and firm. The institution, in a religious point of view will be conducted without reference to sectarian influence.

Pupils will be required to attend church at least once on the Sabbath, and recite a Bible lesson on each Monday morning.

The scholastic year, embracing ten months, will be divided into two equal terms of five months, one immediately succeeding the other.

The first session commencing on the first Wednesday in October, and closing the last week in February; the second and each commencing on the first Wednesday in March, and closing the last week in July. At which time the annual examination will be held, and the usual rewards and honors conferred. The vacation will embrace the months of August and September.

All applications for admission of pupils, &c., to be made to the president of the College.

COLEMAN'S

PREMIUM UNDULATORY CORN AND FLOURING

MILLS,

French Burr Stone, and each Burr in one solid block.

Seven different sizes of these mills are manufactured, adapted to all the various motive powers used or known in milling. The burrs of the smallest size are fourteen inches in diameter, and the largest size are three feet; which last size will grind a greater quantity in any given time than any other mill known. These mills range in prices from one to five hundred dollars apiece, and will grind from four to seventy-five bushels to the hour, according to the diameter of burr, power applied and velocity given.

The mill that took the premium at the Crystal Palace, New York, was the smallest size (14 inches) and ground a bushel of corn into fine meal in four and a half minutes. Those desiring such mills can be supplied by addressing the patentee and proprietor,

CENTENARY COLLEGE OF LOUISIANA.

Centenary College of Louisiana is located in Jackson, La., 12 miles east of Bayou Sara. Its location is beautiful, retired and healthy. It has commodious buildings, a large library, a good chemical and philosophical apparatus, a well-selected mineralogical and geological cabinet, and a full Board of Instruction.

As this section of the Southwest is but poorly provided with academies and preparatory schools, there is connected with the College a Preparatory Department, in which all necessary instruction may be received fur entering College proper.

The College is now in a highly prosperous condition, and under the management of the present Board of Trustees and Faculty it promises permanency and extensive usefulness.

HYMNS—SINGING.

BY H. W. BEECHER.

A Hymn-Book is the popular doctrine book. I suspect that it would be found, that even educated and reflective men are more indebted to hymns for their knowledge of Scripture truth, than to all the prose writers and commentators upon the Bible. And in regard to the highest truths of Scripture there are no commentaries so safe, so full, so identical in spirit and temper, as are the best hymns of Christendom. It is worthy of remark, too, that almost every topic of Scripture has been seriously translated through the heart into the English tongue by a hymn-birth.

The sublime representations of the Old Testament, of Jehovah, have touched and kindled the souls of our day as really as of ancient Hebrew periods. The grandeur of God, his wisdom, power, goodness, universal presence; his providence, mercy, and love; his creative works and his redemptive works, are set forth in the voices of hundreds of hymns. The Bible stands uneclipsed, nor can we say human effusion supplant it, any more than art can ever dispossess or overlay or hide the natural world. But hymns may be used in setting the Bible, as pearls are made to hedge in diamonds upon a golden band.

If the Bible should perish out of our language, it could almost be gathered up again, in substance, from out of our hymns;—that has wing from the very period of creation, and fold their wings only when they touch the crystal battlements. When birds begin to look from the north southward, in autumn weather, a few, springing from the roede and shrubs of Labrador, begin the aërial caravan, and, as they wind southward, out of every tree and every copse, from orchard and garden, come forth new singers, increasing in numbers at every furlong, until at length, rising down from their high pathways in innumerable flocks, they cover provinces and forests, and are heard triumphing through unfrosted orchards, amid the vines, the olives, and the oranges, with such wondrous bursts of song, that, as one lies between asleep and waking, he might think the advent renewed, and God's angels to be in the air. And so it has pleased us often, in the night, to liken the rise, and spread, and flight, and multitude of hymns that have come down from the beginnings of time into this pleasant gardens and vineyards in our day, increasing as they flew. Only, there is no bird that can sing like a hymn. There are no meanings in all the mingled sounds of the singers of the grove or hedge or lawn like the voices of hymns that utter all the mysteries of Christ's love in the human soul. Is it wrong to believe that God gave forth subsidiary inspiration, and taught men to write hymns for the Church, as he had inspired men of old to speak and to write for her? They are not equal to Scripture, nor clothed with its authority, nor to be accepted as an unerring rule of faith and practice, as is the Bible; but I would fain believe that, in their own sphere, they were born of the same divine inspirations as the originals in Scripture; that though the hymn-book is not a sun, it is a satellite, and takes its light, to reflect it to our eyes, in rays which are more tolerable because diminished in power, being tempered to the weakness of our eyes, which must not always look the sun full in the face. And leaving out these poetical reasonings, science has shown that the Church has prayed large and various instructions from the hymn-book. But its uses have not yet been fully explored. Its service is scarcely begun.

As the sanctuary the Bible must speak, for the most part, through the voice of the pastor the teacher. The congregation may murmur responses of Scripture, but cannot read with those continuous and clear utterances which are required for understanding and edification. The true voice of the congregation must be heard through the hymn-book. In our Christian congregations, for the most part, the people are only recipients; they are not participators or actors in public worship. The minister prays for them, the choir sings to them, and the minister again preaches to or at them. Their duty seems almost to be respectful sympathy and participation of the vicarious worship.—This ought not to be. It cannot long continue in any congregation without drying up the springs of feeling, and leaving public life as arid as a desert, or with only an occasional spot of greenness. And that grievous evil has turned the longings of some wise and good men to liturgical forms. That the congregation may be enabled to speak, and to speak its own feeling, it has been proposed that every Church should make selections of hymns to be recited, and responses to be used, and articles of faith to be repeated each Sabbath, until around these great and pure truths should cluster such hallowed associations as should make them powerful for a whole life.

Such powerful associations will not form from literal sameness. Verbal repetitions upon the ear, and, at length, heap it up with mere words. A reciting of the very things, in the same places, over and over again, will not add, but take away, influence. God's word is to be a light unto our feet and a lamp to our path; but it is to be laid down as stepping stones in our way, to be worn with perpetual treadings. Familiarity that breeds contempt, is disease, and this is the marrow of that disease. And thus it came to pass, when God left the world—not forgetting what he had done in the outward world, that seeds and plants are true to their species, and never identical, varying with amazing facility, through leaf, flower, fruit, and seed, so that individuality is clothed with beauty, and external difference hides internal sameness and identity—by this same rule he created the sacred Scriptures, whose truths are one and the same in the long revelation of four thousand years, but never alike in expression. One substance endlessly varied in expression is God's delight in and out of the Bible. The language of the race, and all the symbols of nature, and the fertility and fulness of the human heart were employed that the divine truth, like a mighty sap in the Tree of Life, should burst forth in new leaves and flowers of expression, new clusters and fruits, all the way down to the Apocalyptic close.

And then, lest the book should by a literal using grow stale, and pall upon the accustomed ear, God appointed men in every age to dissolve the Bible into their own hearts again, and give it forth from Sabbath to Sabbath in the fresh and new forms of life belonging to each age, each country, and every congregation.

Identity of substance and truth, but profuse and endless variations of form, this is the genus of the natural and the spiritual revelations of God.

Instead, then, of venturing upon a course that is at variance with analogy, not consonant with human want, and not justified by any success of experiment hitherto, it it hotter to seek some method which shall give the most various utterance in the congregation to the sonic substantial truths, so that the word of God shall always be the life and power, and men's language the leaves and blossoms, that in autumn and spring play death and resurrection in glorious rounds, forever changing, but never altering the truth. The hymn-book is the liturgy of the congregation. It gives to us history, biography, doctrine, experience. It furnishes the essential truths of God, and the essential experience of man. But so large is its store, so various its expression, that the same truths may be daily repeated, and the same language never twice employed in the year.

It is a wrong and a sin in God's people not to accept this sacred language of worship!—It is a grievous blindness that we do not accept this wonderful liturgy of hymns framed from the heart of ages for us!

Sacred hymns, whose nests have been found in every age, from the very gray and twilight of creation, seem to have flown out and flocked to our days; and are filling the boughs of our Churches, like trees in the garden of the Lord, as with birds from Heaven, flitting from branch to branch. All the old days are heard speaking in our days. The voices of all ages are collected as an airy choir in our own.—The whole world has been learning to speak for six thousand years, that we might have a language of the people for the sanctuary!

Singing is the natural language of masses of men. Reading is not. Reading leaves its edges ragged and irregular. But singing is a flowing stream, that hides the roughness of its bottom, and lifts its fluent waters up around the bank till they meet the appropriate edge of grass and flower, hiding deformity and revealing grace and beauty. But there is no river that flows on earth that, for majesty and sublimity, can equal the stream of song in God's sanctuary of thousands of worshippers. It is like the voice of thunder, but more significant. It is like the sound of many waters. It may fitly be called a river the streams whereof shall make glad the city of our God!

It is no wonder that singing has died out from the congregation when a choir is put to recite words that nobody can understand, to music that nobody knows, and the people are left to listen to newly-converted opera airs which last week were brought over by a fresh troupe of foreign singers! And those sweet melodies that stilted propriety has long ago driven from the Churches, but which have gone forth among the people, and rung out gloriously in camp-meetings, shaking the forest leaves with the ascending shouts of a mighty people; or which, more gently, have filled rural school-houses, and humble lecture-rooms, and village churches, not yet corrupted by the false pretences of "classic music"—those sweet melodies that no one can hear with his ear and not feel his heart beating within his bosom all the faster for the sound—are becoming the ridicule and contempt of men who think that God must be praised to the sound of Meyerbeer or Rossini, and not to the sweet and humble melodies of our own land.—Independent.

MEMORY.

Say, in the introduction to his celebrated work on political economy, tells us that he studied all the books he could find on the subject upon which he intended to write—and then took time to forget what he had read, before beginning to write. Do we thoroughly comprehend what the memory retains in the grasp? Are facts properly generalized, digested, assimilated, and made part and parcel of our mind till they are in great measure forgotten? Is not a good memory a mental dyspepsia, that retains intellectual food undigested, and disgusts the listener or the reader by bringing it forth in the gross, just as it was swallowed? Who has not been bored a thousand times by a friend with a fine memory? Such a friend always remembers to forget, that he has retailed the same learning or the same story to his impatient listener a hundred times before.

Probably every body has enough of memory. No one forgets what interests him. The dull boys who cannot remember a line of a book, are the very boys who never forget a name, or a face, or a foot-path. It is want of interest and attention, not want of memory, that makes them dull. The twenty-four books of Homer were easily retained in men's memories, before writing was invented. Men have now learned to forget, and consider such a power of memory almost incredible.

How unfortunate we should be to recollect everything we saw or read! Some men are thus unfortunate, and are the poorest thinkers, and most intolerable bores in the world. We sometimes think that excess of memory is the only defect of memory. That excess occasions intellectual indigestion or dyspepsia.

Some men acquire and retain twenty languages. Such men have never been distinguished for great power or comprehension of intellect. All the other mental faculties are sacrificed to mere memory. Great minds rarely retain the ipsissima verba of the books which they read.

We have often heard that Mr. Clay never forgot a name or a face. To him, as a public man, such things were important, interested his attention and impressed his memory. He had little use for poetry, and could scarcely repeat correctly a line of it. Great lawyers recollect principles only, and can define those principles only in language of their own.—Accurate lawyers recollect cases, and can repeat definitions by the hour in the exact words of the books. Great lawyers make bad judges, for they decide too often on principle, regardless of authority. Accurate lawyers, men of good memories, revere authority, deem it almost profane to inquire into the reasons of such authority, have stare decisis for their guide and motto, and make indifferent advocates and admirable judges. We knew a distinguished jurist, whose advice to his students was, "take care to comprehend what you read, but never trouble yourself about remembering it." To all readers, this is admirable advice. There is very little that we read, worth remembering; yet scarce anything we read, see or hear, that may not suggest useful reflection, and add thus to the volume of our intellect.—Richmond Enquirer.

CLASS MEETINGS.

OPINION OF A PRESBYTERIAN.

A committee of the English Convocation having recommended to the Episcopal Church the formation of religious fraternities, within its bosom, for the benefit of converts, and a High Church writer, in advocating the measure, having ignored the existence of the Wesleyan Class Meeting, a scholarly critic in the North British Review calls attention to this feature of Wesleyanism. After quoting the disciplinary description of class and band meetings, this critic says: "Now we think that there are great doubts whether the effect upon the mind of this practice of confession, which prevails in this closest association, (the band) would, in most cases, be salutary or no; but it seems evident that it is the sort of confession recommended in St. James Epistle, being, like it, mutual—directed, not to a priest, but to a righteous man, real or supposed—and with a view to obtaining the benefit of his prayers; and it supplies a want of the soul, which, although perhaps morbid, is a real and frequent one."

This writer then goes on to state what he "regards as the fault of the Wesleyan system," namely, "that the connection with a class is made an indispensible term of communion." "The whole thing," he adds, "should be optional; and then the system would be free from all objections, and might continue, as it is at present, a great means of strengthening and holding the convert, and a great support and comfort to a large class of minds."

The reader will observe that the approval here given to class-meetings is reluctant and qualified. The writer evidently shares in those prejudices which even candid and noble minds may innocently possess, against institutions with which, from the nature of the case, they cannot be practically acquainted. But this only renders the measure of approval which is given more valuable, for it shows that the writer applauds no more than his gravest and most mature judgment compels him to do so. His praise is a concession made to his prejudices in obedience to his reason. —Zion's Herald.

MOUSTACHE WORN BY CLERGYMEN.—The author of "Notes and Queries" remarks:—"When the episcopal wig came into fashion, it would seem that the beard was no longer worn by clergymen. In a collection of prints, I find Wickliffe, William Tydale, Dean Donne, George Herbert, Robert Herrick, Robert Berton, Bishop Jeremy Taylor, Archbishop Spottiswood, Thomas Fuller, Usher, the Primate, and Robert South, all using the moustache; as did John Knox and Bunyan.—The Jesuits in India, I believe, still wear it. I have been unable to trace the latest instance of a clergyman wearing his gown and cassock in the street; the custom apparently died out in the reign of one of the early Georges."

A FRENCH BOY.—The following question was put in writing to a boy in the deaf and dumb school at Paris, "What is eternity?" He wrote as an answer, "It is the life-time of the Almighty!"

MISSIONARY REPORT OF THE LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

It becomes the number and state of the Foreign Missions of our church to export rather than report.

Among the incitements to our duty, the Apostle cites the example of others. Others—the surpassing liberality of certain brethren who gave, not out of their abundance, but out of a poverty which was of more than common depth. They gave, says the apostle, "to their power," and "beyond their power" they were "willing." He was a witness of the noble fact and "hare record" of it after a very solemn manner, that they were spontaneous in their beneficence, not waiting to be exhorted. They reversed the usual course of a duty-drudge, and prayed the apostle, with much entreaty, to receive their contribution for the saints. Yet how deep must that poverty have been which could stagger one who always seemed to have a collection on hand for the poor at Jerusalem!

The godly people of the first century were not all on this wise; some needed a yet higher incentive than this example of the Churches of Macedonia. The apostle pointed to it in the voluntary impoverishment of their Lord and Master. He that was rich became poor, that through his poverty we all might be rich.

Promises, intentions to do good, and subscription papers, generally, were in those days, as in these, a warning; an unsubstantial thing—some had been "forward a year ago," "now, therefore," says the mindful Paul, "perform the doing of it," that as there was a readiness to will, so let there be a "performance also out of that which ye have." He reminded them of the distribution of the manna. "He that had gathered much had nothing over, and he that had gathered little had no lack," was a plain fact with a good reason, and not a mere wonder, because the one gave to the other.

Besides the good which flowed to oneself in return for giving, the apostle points to other high results. That by these pious gifts many heart-altars were kindled where incense of thanks ascends to God, the giver of all good; that the heathen are convinced of the divine character of a religion that moves to such deeds of charity; that they pray for their benefactors and long after them for the grace that is in them. So that a man may kindle and maintain many altars in distant lands, and many glowing hearts besides his own may be fed with the daily offerings of his hand. He may call around him a thousand prayers for his welfare, of purest love, from those who never heard his name.

Motives so apostolic in their conception and divine in their origin, must move the selfish. To be loved, to be prayed for, to enkindle a flame that shall burn to Heaven, are noble ends it might well move an angel to gain at some cost.

How many of these tributary altars hast thou, O, Methodist? In China, in India, in Polynesia, in South America, in Africa, how many pure offerings are made at thy cost?—How many and how vast are the regions where there is no evidence of thy love to God or thy love to man! where myriads of human breasts are, upon which never yet glowed the coals of christian devotion! How long shall those gloomy regions continue to be a witness to the blackness of thy ingratitude to God, and to the coldness of thy love for man! What mean thy slow motions of relief for the imprisoned multitudes of pagan realms, O, Minister of God, when the spirit of the Lord is upon thee, because he hath anointed thee to preach glad tidings to the meek, to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord! The war cry of the Missionary is as the sound of the archangel's trump, which awakes the dead. Ye ministers of His, go forth; plant your feet upon every land; "wherever a Greek sets his foot, let him kindle a fire."

Bro. Cunningham writes encouragingly from China: "I do think our way of working, as Methodists, is the very thing for the Chinese. It will arouse them up, and then our standard of personal experience requires such a thorough change that no room is left for the old leaven—they must become new creatures—the very thing they need."

One Chinese boy, ordered a year ago, has not come to hand. Doctor Taylor has written especially to secure one for us.

We congratulate our General Missionary Secretary upon the steady increase of missionary receipts from $68,000 in 1844 to $164,000 of the present year, upon the 170 Missions among our people of color, the 30 Missions among the Indians and the six Missions among the Chinese. "But what are they among so many!"

The now open idolatry of the Roman Church calls for the strenuous efforts of all true ministers to carry the word of God to a people whom she teaches to worship Mary, "the creature," rather than Christ, the Lord. In Southern Louisiana, Romanism is building churches, nunneries and schools, and preaches to a vast population in the French tongue. A missionary movement in the direction of this population should have been made by the members of our conference long since.—Lawyers and merchants, many of them, have mastered the difficulties of the French language, while the higher incentives which are supposed to be ever present to the Methodist ministry, have failed as yet to produce a single preacher in the French tongue. Men should be selected and money appropriated for this work.

A good Providence has raised up to the Germans, ministers from among themselves. Three German itinerants have been laboring in the city, during the last year, besides two German local preachers. The German Missions were never in a more prosperous condition; though during the year the First Mission lost 20 per cent. of its membership with yellow fever. Lots have been recently bought for a Fifth Mission Chapel. The unexpected gathering of more than one hundred German children in the Bear Garden Sabath School in the western part of the Third District called loudly for us to enter that ripe field.

The First Mission is suffering for want of a larger church. A lot is bought and paid for, and several thousand dollars collected for this purpose; yet, at least $4,000 additional must be obtained before the Trustees of the Mission can venture to build such a brick church as has been contemplated these several years past, and such as becomes the most important and the oldest German Mission of the Methodist Church, South. Help! help!! help!!! What man is there among all the friends of German Methodism who will give this much to aid this great mission of love?

It is stated upon good authority that the number of colored members in the Church, South, exceeds that of the entire membership of all the Protestant Missions in the world. What an enterprise is this committed to our care! The position we, of the Methodist Church, South, have taken for the African, has, to a great extent, cut us off from the sympathy of the Christian Church throughout the world; and it behooves us to make good this position in the sight of God, of angels, of men, of churches, and to our own consciences, by presenting before the throne of His glory multitudes of the souls of these benighted ones abandoned to our care, as the souls of our ministry. Already Louisiana promises to be one vast plantation. Let us—we must gird ourselves for this Heavenborn enterprise of supplying the pure gospel to the slaves. The great question is, How can the greatest number be preached to?—The building roadside chapels is as yet the best solution of it. In some cases planters build so as to accommodate adjoining plantations, and by this means the preacher addresses three hundred or more slaves, instead of one hundred or less. Economy of this kind is absolutely essential where the labor of the missionary is so much needed and demanded.

On the Lafourche and Bayou Black Mission-work several chapels are in process of creation upon a plan which enables the slave, as his master, to make an offering towards building a house of God. Instead of money, the "hands" subscribe labor. Timber is plenty; many of the servants are carpenters. Upon many of the plantations are saw-mills. Here is much material; what hindereth that we should build a church on every tenth plantation! Let us maintain our policy steadily. Time and diligence are required to effect substantial good, especially in this department of labor. Let us continue to ask for buildings adapted to the worship of God, and set apart; to urge whenever practicable, the preaching to blacks in the presence of their masters, their overseers and the neighbors generally.

There are in the bounds of the Conference nine Missions to the slaves, including 2,820 members and seven hundred and thirty children under catechetical instruction.

LOUISIANA ITEMS.—Nearly every paper we open from interior Louisiana, and especially from the Northern parishes, speaks of the recent cold weather as almost without a precedent. The Baton Rouge Sugar Planter of Saturday last, says:

For some days past the river has been filled with floating ice. Mr. Markham of the ferry boat assures us that the ferry ran against some pieces which could not have been less than ten feet long, and so heavy as to shake the boat violently by the concussion. It is somewhat novel to find ice floating as low down as Baton Rouge.

The Pointe Coupee Echo, of Saturday last, has the following paragraphs:

Never do we remember of experiencing such an intensely cold and continued spell of weather as we have had during the past and present week. In fact, nearly the whole time the thermometer has been standing at and below the freezing point, and the ice, from the first freeze, has had no opportunity to thaw until on Thursday last, when a decided change in the weather took place, which has continued up to the present time, to grow warmer.

In the upper portion of our parish we perceive several of the planters still grinding—a very unusual occurrence with the sugar-growers of our parish, who generally get off their crop by the latter part of December.

The Shreveport Southwestern of the 19th says:

The river has fallen twelve inches since our last, and continues to recede slowly. The cold weather appears to have stopped the steamers, as the Alida, from the falls, and the Effort, from New Orleans, are the only arrivals.

During all Thursday night and Friday, heavy sleet fell in this vicinity. On Friday night it moderated and commenced raining, and then snowed briskly.—On Saturday morning the whole country was covered with snow to the depth of two inches. The sun came out bright and clear Sunday morning, since which time we have had delightful weather, although the snow, as if loth to leave us, lingered in the streets until yesterday.

Items of Foreign News.

Northern papers received yesterday contain further particulars of the news by the latest arrivals from Europe. We extract the most interesting:

The Cavalry Engagement near Kertch.

The Journal de Constantinople has the following letter from Kertch:

You know that of all the cavalry of the Anglo-Turkish Contingent only a detachment of 150 horses remained here as a guard and as an escort of Gen. Vivian.

This morning 65 men of this detachment, ordered to go out foraging and to buy provisions from the inhabitants of the neighboring villages, left the place under the command of Capt. Sherwood.

This little troop, not having found the provisions in the neighborhood of the most advanced out posts, went further into the country. All at once, when they least expected it, they were surrounded and attacked by a hundred fold their number.

Captain Sherwood ordered a retreat, but they were obliged to cut their way through the mass of the enemy. The Turkish soldiers, listening only to the voice of their chief and the inspiration of their own courage, threw themselves on their enemies and fought with heroism. Captain Sherwood, who was conspicuous by his English uniform, fell one of the first. His death did not check the ardor of the soldiers, who fought with renewed fury. Twenty-five succeeded in cutting their way through and so escaping. The remaining forty horsemen, officers and soldiers, either died on the battle-field or were taken prisoners.

The Invalide Russe publishes a proclamation by Gen. Mouravieff, calling the entire population of Imeretia, Guriel and Mingrelia to wage a war of extermination against the enemies of the cross. It is this measure which is supposed to have induced Omer Pacha's retreat.

Orders have been issued to the commanding officers of provisional battalions and depots, to hold in readiness for immediate embarkation the whole of the disciplined men belonging to regiments serving in the East. The drafts of infantry regiments will proceed to the entrepot at Malta, whence they will be conveyed as occasion may require to the seat of war, and the drafts for the cavalry reserve at Scutari. About 450 rank and file, belonging to the household infantry brigade, will proceed to Malta and join the reserve battalion. The number of troops under orders exceeds 4,500. [Chronicle.

Within the last few days the report of a secret understanding confirmed by a treaty between Russia and Prussia is again brought forward, and gains some degree of credit. It is affirmed that this secret treaty has been only very lately concluded by the present Emperor of Russia, and that it was brought to Berlin by Count Munster, who could never induce the Emperor Nicholas to sign it. This treaty is one of offensive and defensive alliance between the two States, under certain possible contingencies; but whether the King of Prussia will be able to rely on the co-operation of his army in such a case, is a question that has given rise to great doubt and discussion. [News.

It is said that the new Commander-in-Chief in the Baltic is to be Sir Edmund Lyons, who is now on his return from the Black Sea. It is, of course, nothing more than a rumor, and its foundation is not so clear. Occupied as Sir Edmund has been with the affairs in the East, it is impossible he can have given that attention to the conduct of the fleet in the Baltic which even an officer unemployed at home may have done. But it is obvious that the Admirals who have already been out in the Baltic, and who know the capacities of the captains and crews under their command, must be more fitted for that important post than any other. Any objection which may apply to Admiral Dundas, can have no weight against his second in command; and unless there be official reasons to the contrary, we should suppose Sir Charles Wood would prefer intrusting the command of the magnificent fleet now in preparation to Sir Michael Seymour.—[Chronicle.

Wretched Condition of the Inhabitants of Kars.

A correspondent of the London Times says of the militia and Bashi Bazouks who aided in the defence of Kars:

Numbers have been frozen to death, and the villages along the road from Kars are filled with their miserable comrades who have sunk exhausted upon the way. We see them staggering in all day, along the principal thoroughfare into the city, haggard and footsore, their countenances half livide from cold, hunger and fatigue.

Their condition, even before leaving Kars, was as wretched as could be; so much so (I quote word for word from an eye-witness) that it was positively painful to stir out of doors. They were lying about in all directions, groaning piteously—watching the Russian provision wagons, which, as if to add to their misery, passed almost all day within their ken. Townspeople and soldiers alike suffered all the horrors of famine. The former crowded around the General as he rode out of his quarters, and prayed him, with all the eloquence of despair, to seek some means of putting an end to their misery. Women forced their way into his very rooms, and, throwing their children at his feet, implored him rather to kill them at once than let them perish thus piecemeal for want of sustenance.

The hospitals were crowded with sick. On the Thursday before the surrender 80 men died in one day. Many went mad or became idiots from sheer hunger and hard work. Those who preserved a remnant of health, half-starved as they were, and scarcely clothed, were obliged to mount sentry almost every night, up to their oxters in snow. Since the battle of the 29th, there had been no animal food to issue to the troops. Horses had indeed been killed in the General's stables, secretly, by night, but the meat was sent to the hospitals for the sick. A pittance of bread, or flour made into weak broth, was all that the working soldiers had to subsist upon. Discipline was almost at an end.

Later from Texas.

The steamship Chas. Morgan, Capt. Lawless, arrived at an early hour yesterday morning from Galveston. She reports the steamer Louisiana off Galveston on Saturday, but she had not got in because of low water on the bar.

We have Galveston papers to 26th, and our regular files from the interior.

A severe norther prevailed at Galveston on Friday night, and the cold was intense.

The first trip of the locomotive on the Galveston, Houston and Red River Railroad, was made on the 23d, from the Houston depot. A letter from Houston says:

So the ice is now broken and the railroad in running order, and a superior car actually making excursions over a part of the road. What will croakers now say? Will they reiterate the stale objection, "It is too soon to commence to build railroads in Texas." We shall see. Our citizens are in high spirits in regard to the future prospects of Houston. It is said city property has, within a short time, greatly increased in value. Rents are high. Business, though in mid-winter, is active. Wagons throng our streets; visitors crowd our hotels. A considerable amount of substantial improvement, in the way of building, is going on in the city.

The Austin State Times of the 19th informs us that there has been more sickness in that place this winter than usual. The prevailing disease seemed to be typhoid in its nature.

A Dr. Parker, who has a plantation on the San Jacinto, states that bears are so numerous in the vicinity of his place, that he has killed one a day for a week. He recently killed some very large ones, averaging from 300 to 400 pounds, the leaf fat of one of which weighed 130 pounds.

From the Austin correspondence of the Galveston News we extract the following:

Among other matters, I have noticed one of Sharp's rifles, which is in the possession of Commodore Moore. It has been examined by a great many members of the legislature, and universally admired for its efficiency, as a frontier weapon. Its long range (600 yards) and the quickness with which it can be fired, demonstrates it to be a formidable weapon in a fight, and as a hunter's rifle, it is decided to be very superior.

A proposition is on foot, to the effect, that the State should purchase a quantity of those arms, (and by so doing they could be had at a much lower price) and furnish them to citizens of the State, at cost and charges. The proposition, I think, is a good one, and would enable every frontiersman to provide himself with a good weapon, at a low price.

A letter of the 10th to the same paper, from Bexar District, says:

I am gratified to be able to inform you, that the Indians have not been upon the Sabine river in this vicinity, since Capt. Callahan's expedition to Mexico, in pursuit of the Lipans. That expedition had the desired effect, of striking terror into them, and checking their frequent pillaging incursions upon this frontier. If the Legislature will only pass an act authorizing the Governor, to order out some 15 or 20 companies, of about 30 men each, to range on our frontier, the lives and property of our citizens would be adequately protected, and we should all feel comparatively secure.

Later from Havana and the Isthmus.

ARRIVAL OF THE STEAMSHIP GRANADA.

The U. S. steamship Granada, Capt. Griffin, from New York the 18th and Havana the 25th, arrived Monday evening. She brings the following passengers:

From New York—W. K. Weston, Mr. Wm. Underhill, Mrs. C. McLean, David M. Tobin, Mme. Leferre, S. W. Goodridge, jr., Miss Maurice, Capt. Ludwig, Mr. Chas. Ely, George Ely, R. J. Anderson, J. L. Loeffler, D. Clancy, S. Greenwood, C. J. Browne and wife, S. Catel, Ann Cullen, Henry Reese, C. W. Wirtch, Mark McKenna, J. McKenna, J. Maxwell, John Powers, N. Nell, Henry Dorrins, N. Wood, George Clarke.

From Havana—Mr. Berge, F. Power, L. Ribera, O. Lambeson, A. Hoffman, P. Haslem, L. M. Davenport, J. de S. Adeld, Miss K. S. Smith, D. G. Grace, A. Amengual.

From San Francisco—Mr. Brewer, Mr. Prescott, S. A. Boyd, Mr. Carter, F. W. Kruse, J. Loepert, J. W. Dawson, Alfred Low, Mr. Walmsley, wife and child, and sixty-nine in the steerage.

The purser kindly furnishes the following memoranda:

The Granada passed the U. S. Mail steamship North Star, on the morning of the 24th inst., twelve hours out from Havana.

The United States mail steamer Philadelphia, arrived from Aspinwall on the morning of the 26th inst., with mails and passengers, and left on the afternoon of the next day for Aspinwall.

The U. S. steamers Potomac and Fulton, from San Juan and Nicaragua, were lying in the harbor of Havana all well.

We have received by this arrival a file of the Aspinwall Courier, from the 8th to the 18th inclusive, but no other papers, with the exception of old dates from San Francisco.

We find no news of interest from the Isthmus. The Courier of the 15th, in an article upon Immigration into New Granada, says:

The natives of the country alone would never accomplish her destiny. Let her then have men from abroad. As says the illustrious orator of Virginia, "she wants men." She cannot get along without them. Those heavy forests of valuable timber, under which the lands are groaning, must be cleared away; those vast riches which cover the face of the soil, as well as those which lie hid in its bosom, are to be developed and gathered only by the skill and enterprise of men; the timber must be worked up into ships to transport the productions of the soil from which it has been cleared; then there must be commercial men and commercial capital to take off productions, and find the best markets for them abroad. The great want is the want of men.

The same paper says:

The British sloop-of-war Brisk, Capt. A. J. Curtis, arrived at the port of Panama on the 10th, with $1,800,000 in treasure for Europe. She leaves Panama for the South to-morrow.

OUR RELATIONS WITH ENGLAND.—A dispatch of the 22d, from Washington, says:

Amid the many conflicting statements with regard to our relations with England, authentic information warrants the following assertion: Mr. Crampton's recall has been demanded, and the exequators of the British Consuls at New York, Philadelphia, and Cincinnati will be revoked. Mr. Buchanan has not and will not be recalled, unless at his own request.

No special message to either House of Congress relative to foreign affairs has been contemplated, much less has it been the subject of Cabinet consultations.

Mr. Boyce's resolution to-day was not submitted with the consent or knowledge of the Executive, but was an independent proposition of his own.

Negotiations between the governments of Great Britain and the United States are still open, dispatches having been sent out by the last steamer. Nothing has transpired since the delivery of the President's Message to change the aspect of our relations abroad.

FIRE AND LOSS OF LIFE IN CANADA.—The following account of a fire and melancholy loss of life in Beach, is from an extra of the Ontario Reporter dated Monday:

"A fire broke out in the dwelling-house of Mr. Richmond, Prince Albert, on Saturday morning, which, we are sorry to record, was attended with a melancholy loss of life. The flames had enveloped the entire building before the inmates, who were all in bed, became aware of the fact, and terror-stricken, each on awakening rushed from the fury of the flames with the instinct of self-preservation. When it was discovered that one of the daughters yet remained in the house, a young man named Foley, who had stopped at Mr. Richmond's that night, dashed through the flames to rescue the sleeping girl, but, painful to relate, neither came out alive, both having met a frightful death in the destructive conflagration."

A WINDFALL.—A young man named Harry Grey, who is now engaged as watchman at the Kentucky Locomotive Works, has recently had left him, conditionally, by a deceased uncle in England, $200,000. Mr. Grey is only twenty-five years of age—already having inherited $45,000 from his father, which he spent for the benefit of himself and "mankind in general." His prudent old uncle, knowing his fast habits in his youth, and not knowing his industrious habits now, inserted as a condition of the inheritance, that if the said Harry was in debt at the age of thirty-five hundred dollars, he should forfeit the inheritance. Here is a stronger incentive to keep ahead of one's debts than we have ever seen before. [Louisville Democrat.

ICE BRIDGE AT NIAGARA.—For a week past the communication between this village and the Canada shore has been uninterrupted. The large body of ice which had formed across the ferry, for above a week ago, has become thicker and is consequently safe for pedestrians. The ice is probably from twenty to thirty feet thick, and perhaps more. The crossing is perfectly safe, and the view which can now be obtained of the cataract is unsurpassed. Such an opportunity as is now presented for obtaining a front view of the falls rarely occurs.

Previous to Saturday, ice had formed up to Goat Island, and the landing could be made from the Canada side. This is a circumstance of very rare occurrence. We are informed that such a thing has not happened for the last twenty or twenty-five years.—[Niagara Falls Gazette, 16th inst.

BREACH OF MANNERS CONSTITUTES NO A CRIME.—The San Francisco Sun tells the following:—"A young gentleman was standing on Montgomery street, when a lady attended by her husband, stepped from the door of the Washington Market, and hesitated on the pavement a few moments as if uncertain which direction to pursue. Fascinated by her rare beauty, the young man gazed upon her with a fixed stare. By chance she met his gaze, and discovering something unusual in it, made it a subject of remark to her lord. That indignant individual approached the offending admirer, and addressing him rather savagely, asked him, "what he meant by his rudeness?"

"Pardon me," said the gallant, recovering from his fit of abstraction; "I intended no offence. There is a loveliness about the lady's face that would fascinate an anchorite, and I was lost in admiration of it."

"All right," replied the satisfied Benedict; "if you'll remain here till I escort Susan home, I'll return and stand treat for your good opinion of my wife."

"Fellow-citizens," said a stump orator, "we have the best country in the world, and the best Government. What people on the face of the globe enjoy more privileges than we do? Where we have liberty to speak, and liberty of the press, without censorious despotism? What, fellow-citizens, is more desirable than this? Do you want anything more, my countrymen?"

"Yes sir-ree!" sang out a red faced loafer, "a drink o' dry work. I want a suck out of that flask sticking out of your coat pocket behind."

A clergyman being complained of by another for drawing away his parishioners on Sunday, made the reply—

Feed your flock better, and they won't stray."

Success in any business requires a thorough knowledge of the means and material under employ. Place the lovers of a locomotive in the hands of one who had never before used this powerful machine, and instead of being able to drive it with the speed of the wind and the precision of mathematics, he would be sadly puzzled to know what first to do with so important charge. What could a ploughman do if required to superintend a cotton factory? or a blacksmith the machinery of a wholesale merchant? What could a shop-keeper accomplish if placed in charge of a threshing machine, a horse-reaper, or a sub-soil plough? We should all doubt the sanity of those who would send for a lawyer to set a fractured limb, although he might point out to the victim of a hole the rights, privileges, and liabilities of John Doe and Richard Roe. The idea that men practiced by a sort of lucky guessing, instead of a thorough mastery of facts and principles, is quite too prevalent.

It is said that the candidate who carried three days has got tired of his burthen and laid it down in the lap of ages.

NEW ORLEANS:

SATURDAY, JANUARY 2, 1856.

The Session of the Southern University will take its Commencement, Ala., March 17th, for the purpose of organizing.

Dr. Doggett has taken pastoral charge of the Southern Methodist Church in Washington City, D. C. This will not interfere with the Quarterly Review.

The Louisiana Conference Minutes have been sent out by the mail book of the Advocate. Each of our subscribers, therefore, may look for a copy. The able report of the Missionary Secretary, Dr. Keener, we give this week.

A Sandwich Island Preacher.—At a recent missionary meeting at Hilo, a native islander was ordained and sent out to preach the gospel to the islanders of the Pacific.—That he understood the work he undertook is plain, from the extract from a speech he addressed to his countrymen. Said he: "I do declare to you, that the cause of my going out on this mission is my exceeding great debt to the Kingdom of God. I have land, and cattle, and horses, and parents, and brothers, and I have looked on all these, but they will not cancel my debt. Therefore I give my whole body and soul without reserve for this mission. Because this treasure was freely given to us, therefore we freely give without murmuring."

From the Shelby (Ala.) Whig we learn that in the House, 18th January, Mr. Fowler presented the bill for the charter of the Southern University, and through unanimous courtesy, the bill passed through both Houses, and ordered to be sent forthwith to the Governor. This bill has been passed and placed in the hands of the Governor.

Funeral Remains of Hugh Churchill.—We see from advertisements in the Washington papers that Dr. Levi Silliman Ives, the apostate Bishop of North Caroline, is about to give a lecture in that city for the benefit of the "Young Catholics' Friend Society." The subject will be "The authority of Christianity over Society." In connection with this notorious individual's perversion, we take the following from an exchange:

"In the Crypt of St. Peter's, at Rome, the curious traveler, as he pursues his journey by torch light, will find on the wall, near an altar, a Latin inscription in a frame, and covered with glass, which also covers a large gold cross, a seal ring, and a seal, which were deposited there by the late Bishop Ives of North Carolina. A free translation of inscription would be something like the following: "To Peter the most holy apostle, Pius IX, the great High Priest, has consecrated these insignia of a false priesthood, which he received in fulfillment of a vow from Levi Silliman Ives, a sham Bishop in North Carolina, America. Having obtained a knowledge of the truth on his way from England to the Vatican, he came to his senses, (resipuit,) and on the XIth of the Kalends of January, 1853, he was absolved, and on the XVIIth of the Kalends of the same month he was anointed with holy oil, and fed with heavenly bread, by Pius IX. himself.

Modern Pilgrims.—Showing the Improvements in Travel, and the newest methods of reaching the Celestial City. By George Wood, author of "Peter Schlemihl in America." In two volumes. pp. 390.—Boston: Phillips, Sampson & Co.

We did not think the author of "Peter Schlemihl" could put forth a stupidity—but pass it by.—These volumes have laid on our table a good while—we wished to read before pronouncing. Some of our religious cotemporaries have spoken highly of the work. We commend to them the same penance for their hasty praise. The plan is framed on the method partly of Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress, and, as the author avows, on that remarkable allegory of Hawthorn, "The Celestial Railroad." He takes his pilgrims straight down into and up out of the water—and continues their journey, without drying their clothes! His are Baptist pilgrims—others go over a bridge. Go over looking and loitering about taverns—Episcopalians to controversies proudly conducted and dont seem to get along at all. The Chaplaincy of our Legislature.

It is proper that our legislation should be conducted under the blessing and the reverent recognition of Christianity. Ours is a Christian country. The principles of the Bible are the safest guides in making laws, and furnish the most potent motives for keeping them. Examples in high places should be becoming. Religion is not ignored by our federal or State governments. Enlightened policy, propriety, piety and a wholesome public sentiment demand its acknowledgement.

The Legislature of Louisiana has not been singular in this respect. For the last few years the ministers of the various denominations of the Capitol were invited to officiate, in turn, as chaplains, without stipend—the Legislature making such appropriations for their services, before breaking up, as it deemed fit. We have heard no complaint of this arrangement. It was not expensive—it made no invidious distinctions. The Papist, the Methodist, the Presbyterian, the Baptist, the Episcopalian, had no just cause of complaint.

But the action of the Legislature convened last week at Baton Rouge, in the selection of a chaplain, is open to serious exception. The reports are somewhat confused and conflicting, but we digest the following on the proceedings of the House:

Jan. 23.—Mr. Beecher offered a resolution that the House be opened every morning with prayer, and that our ministers be invited to attend alternately for that purpose.

This was adopted.

Jan. 24.—The House met according to adjournment, on calling the roll eighty-one members answered to their names. The resolution to open the proceedings of each day with prayer was, on motion reconsidered and laid on the table.

The paper from which we copy the above two items does not give the name of the mover of this last. We should like to be furnished with his name and reasons.

Jan 28.—Mr. Jamison, of Union, offered a resolution reconsidering the vote of yesterday, and providing for the selection by the Speaker of chaplains to open the House with divine prayer.

Mr. Locoul, of St. St. James, offered an amendment providing for the election exclusively of a Catholic chaplain.

This amendment was adopted.

The yeas and nays were called on it, but we have not seen them.

It was then moved to lay the resolution, thus amended, on the table, which was lost by the following mixed vote:

Yeas—Allerton, Anderson, Barrow, Camegys, Coleman, Dunn, Fiveit, Fenton, Harris, Haynes, Humphrey, Jamison, Jones, Miner, Norwood, Perkins, Pike, Procter, Sanford, Semmes, Smart, Sterling, Walker, Woolridge—24.

Nays—Alexander, Anderson, Bernard, Beecher, Bernard, of Lafourche; Bertrand, Boots, Brice, Brown, Dawson, Duvall, Downes, Duperier, Fuller, Gantt, Gaude, Guilbeau, Hagaman, Hamilton, Harper, Hawkins, Jones, Jourdan, Laborre, Legros, Lanier, Laville, Lawrason, Locoul, Lumsden, Mosley, Matthews, McDonald, Morgan, Offner, Oswalt, Patton, Polk, Randall, Ramsey, Robinson, Solomon, Sompayrac, Thompson, of Caddo; Tircuit, Trepagnier, Van Winkle, Wade, Wright—49.

A sensation was created here on Friday evening by a dispatch in the Picayune that:

In the House, a resolution to employ the Catholic clergy alone was passed by a vote of 48 to 24.

A dispatch dated Jan. 29, in the Delta, Crescent, and other city papers, of Wednesday last, has it:

A motion was made to reconsider the vote providing for a Catholic Chaplain. The motion was lost, and Father Lavay was elected Chaplain.

The Picayune's dispatch, of same date:

In the House, this morning, it was decided that Father J. Lave, the resident Catholic priest of this place, should be the Chaplain of the House, and his salary was fixed at three hundred dollars for the session. A vote was taken and decided against reconsidering the former resolution declaring in favor of Catholic Clergy, by 81 to 30.

We have written for details and explanatory facts, but at this writing have not received an answer. Have our legislators resolved themselves into an ecclesiastical council, and pronounced for Popery? Their constituents will not accept this their decree, Anno Domini, 1856.

If, for reasons economical and sufficient, they chose to have one chaplain at a stipend, instead of several, without it, we should say nothing. If, with the names of Father Lave, Rev. Mr. Guion, Rev. Mr. Suratt, Rev. Mr. Castleton, and other resident clergymen of the Capitol, as candidates before the House, a majority of its members preferred the Romish priest, we should say nothing. It would have been a fair field, an open election; personal worth or other considerations might have determined it. But the case is not so. No Protestant minister could be a candidate. The selection was confined, by a previous action, to Romish priests, and to them only. The qualifications and claims of a Protestant minister, be they what they may, could not be presented. It is a question of faiths, and not persons; of creeds, and not qualifications. Protestant Churches were barred and proscribed.

We regret to say it, but are bound to say it, that, as this action of our Legislature comes to us, it must be construed into a grievance, an insult, an injury to the Protestants of Louisiana—Protestants, who represent the larger part of the intelligence, wealth and franchise of the State.

We do not question the moral worth and fitness of the priest elected, but the manner in which he was elected gives to the matter another and broader aspect.

The mixed vote will not shift the material responsibility. There is a party in the House with a controlling majority. It takes the responsibility in other things, and must take it in this. Honorable members may treat it lightly, but it is not a light matter to put the Protestant Churches of Louisiana in a false position, and send down such a record as this to history—and they will find it so.

If politicians are willing to throw themselves into the arms of the Pope and his priests, the people are not.

Rev. Whiteford Smith, of the South Carolina Conference, has accepted the Professorship of English Literature in Wofford College.

Take Warning.

LET IT NOT BE TRUE OF US.

The Southern Conferences may be stimulated by having the fear of deficit before their eyes. A deficit involves much—it is not merely written in figures—but in promising missionary fields abandoned—laborers called home—souls left to perish. Who will be responsible for such things? Dr. Durbin, the sagacious and forecasting Secretary of the M. E. Church, North, is out in an earnest call and warning:

"The Board of Managers of the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church find themselves in a condition which requires them to appeal to the whole community for prompt and liberal contributions to the missionary treasury. The Board regards itself as the trustee of the missionary funds of the whole Church, contributed to enable the several conferences and the bishops to carry on the missions at home and abroad. These missions have been gradually multiplied and enlarged, especially within the conferences; and of course the appropriations to sustain them have been enlarged. For several years past the contributions of the Church have been equal to the appropriations; and a good hope was growing throughout the communion that the missionary spirit and the pecuniary ability would be equal to the wants of the increasing missionary work. The Board is very unwilling to yield any portion of this good hope, and have sought to explain the falling off in the receipts into the treasury in 1855, as compared with the receipts of 1854, by the recent depression in trade and business generally, and the extensive failure of crops in a wide portion of the country.—They still believe that this is the true explanation, and that, with the abundant harvests and the revival of business in 1855, there will be increased contributions from the whole Church to the missionary treasury. And yet the Board owns some slight apprehension: and fore-seeing the mortification and disgrace, and even guilt, of themselves and the whole Church should our missionary treasury become so embarrassed, and, of consequence, our missionary appropriations be curtailed, and our missions reduced, we frankly advise the Church of the urgent necessity of prompt and liberal contributions for 1856.

The drafts that will be due before the next session of any of the conferences, together with the present indebtedness of the treasury, will amount to over $45,000; and unless the friends of missions interest themselves at once in raising and forwarding funds, there will be a larger debt against the society than ever before.

By a comparison of receipts of 1854 with those of 1855, as appears in the General Minutes, it will be seen that there is a falling off of over thirty-one thousand dollars in 1855. If this deficiency is not overcome during the General Missionary Committee year, which extends from Nov. 10 last to Nov. 10 next following, it will be absolutely necessary for the General Committee and Board at their meeting next November to curtail the appropriations. We should be wanting in our duty if we let such a state of the treasury come without warning the Church of it and of the consequences. Such was the case some years ago, and missions were discontinued, and missionaries recalled; and when these grave facts became known to the Church she was mortified and complained. As her faithful trustees, we give her notice of the danger in advance."

A Suggestive Suggestion.—We clip the following from the Baton Rouge Gazette, of the 26th. It hits—and hard at that—at sombody; and the biting vein of good natured sarcasm that pervades the whole paragraph contains more practical application than outsiders are aware of as a general thing. We hope it may have an excellent effect; and that, without wounding, it may remove the evil, or rather, the cause of the evil, so delicately hinted at:

A Great Misfortune.—We were thoroughly convinced, during the few minutes we spent in the State House yesterday, that a greater misfortune could not befall a man who has any political aspirations, than to have his name commence with a letter at the top of the alphabet. The A's and B's stand a poor showing in calling the yeas and nays, for how are they going to tell which way the wind will blow? If they make a mistake in voting, and find, when the roll is finished, that they are in a small minority, the only way they can get out of the dilemma is to say they misunderstood the purport of the resolution—were deaf as an adder, or something of that sort, and request permission to change their votes. But then, this method of making things right, so given is the world in be uncharitable and suspicious, is a very disagreeable one. We would suggest, the propriety of calling the roll down and up alternately. Such a rule would certainly be a just and equitable one.

Dye's Bank Note Plate Delineator.—This is the title of an useful publication, which the extensive practice of fraud and deception in our paper currency has rendered essential to the safety of the business community, many of whom are devoid of any effectual means of detecting spurious or altered bank bills. This desideratum the Delineator furnishes in such a simplified form that the most inexperienced person, at a single glance, can at once detect frauds of any description, as a full and accurate description of each genuine note is given in its pages.

The general agent, S. S. White, has laid a copy of this valuable publication on our table, and a glance at its contents has surprised us that the simple method used to give such desirable information had not before been adopted by the publishers of Bank Note Detectors. The intimacy of our relations with the currency of other States, renders it not only necessary, but a matter of safety for every business man to have a copy of Dye's Delineator in his counting-room, in order to detect the genuine from the false with unerring certainty, without loss of time. The Detector is published every two weeks. A Coin Chart is also published in connection with the work above named.

Louisiana—Official Vote for State Officers.—The votes for State officers at the late State election were counted in the Legislature on the 24th inst., as already announced by telegraph. The following is the result:

For Governor—Wickliffe, 22,952; Derbigny, 19,755. Wickliffe's majority, 3,197. [This majority includes the return ordered by Judge Cotton of the Seventh Precinct—210.]

Lieutenant Governor—Mouton, 22,816; Texada, 19,995. Mouton's majority, 2,821.

Secretary of State—Herron—22,949; Beale, 19,877. Herron's majority, 3,092.

Attorney General—Moise, 22,560; Hunt, 20,245. Moise's majority, 2,315.

Auditor—Marks, 22,566; Roseman, 19,903. Mark's majority, 2,663.

Treasurer—Greneaux, 22,515; Duralde, 19,816. Greneaux's majority, 2,699.

Superintendent of Public Education—Bard, 22,601; Stillman, 20,169. Bard's majority, 2,432.

Capt. Sears, of the ship Conquest, reports falling in with, on the 23d inst., in latitude 35 deg. 22 min., with the wreck of a sunken brig, hailing from New Orleans. She was laying on her beam ends, her starboard quarter about five feet out of water; mainmast standing; foremast gone but attached to the wreck. The dead body of a man was seen lashed to her quarter.

The above wreck was doubtless that of the brig Samuel J. Peters, hence for Havana, and sunk in collision with the James Hovey.

LETTER FROM BISHOP KAVANAUGH.

Havana, Cuba, Jan. 22, 1856.

Rev. H. N. McTyeire,

Dear Bro.—I was not aware, when I embarked on the "North Star" that it was a vessel that had won so much of distinction in the brief period of three years. I understand from an authentic source that it was built by a very distinguished man in the steam ship line, Mr. Vanderbelt of New York. This gentleman, I learn, has won the praiseworthy distinction of rising by his own industry and enterprise from the position of a rower of a boat to an extensive steam ship builder and navigator, and from a state of poverty to the immense wealth of eight or ten millions of dollars. Such instances of enterprise and success ought to be known to the American public as an example of what a solitary man can achieve by a well directed and persevering enterprise.

But to the account of the North Star. It is said that soon after it was built, the proprietor took a voyage to Europe in it and had the pleasure to find her a ship of more speed than any with which she came in contact, or tried her speed. She has too performed a voyage around the world. She has made an unusually quick time to this port. The usual time for steam ships between these points, a distance of about five hundred and sixty miles, is sixty hours. The North Star accomplished this trip in fifty two hours. Capt. R. A. Warmack is an attentive and accomplished officer. He appears to be a scientific navigator. Making his observations and calculations, at noon, he reported to us our latitude and longitude, the distance we had come from the month of the Mississippi, and the number of knots we were running per hour. These are matters so common to navigators, as I presume to have lost their interest to them; but to landlubardom, whence I came, I am persuaded they are matters of interest. Capt. Calhoon of the Navy informed me that the improvements made in the chronometers have arrived to such a state of perfection, that the ships position can be ascertained, by the altitudee of the sun, within a small fraction of a mile.

But now as to our experience on the Ocean. We entered the Gulf with much of interest. When the timber failed, the wide and apparently new made banks, covered with grass and other vegetation, which seemed to say to us, it was thus, for many hundred miles, the fertile banks of the Mississippi were formed and are forming. For some time the familiar muddy waters of the Mississippi River were present to the eye of the observer, and then came the clearer green, and then the dark indigo blue of the Ocean waters. Ere yet we had quite left the River, and without any change visible on the surface of the water, the ship discovered from its motions the under swell of the Ocean wave, a premonition of what we were about to realize to more than our satisfaction. I do not know what the sailors thought of it; but I thought the wind was blowing at least more than a gentle breeze. Our ship, which awhile ago, sent her widening wave so proudly and with such a dash against the distant shore of the great Mississippi River, now rolls as a thing of naught on the mightier waves of the deep blue Ocean raised by the wiude of Heaven.—Nevertheless she urged on her way amid the rude wrangle of wrestling waves, leaving the white foam thrown from the whirl of her wheels, beautifully disclosing the green and the blue in the wake of her rapid course.

Our cheerful and most agreeable companion, Bro. Genella, undertook so to entertain Mrs. K. by walking and talking in the fresh breeze on deck, as to prevent the sea-sickness, and with the like kind design, Capt. Calhoun had me in keeping. And for a long time the effort seemed to promise success; but at length I heard some gentleman say, that lady is sick. I looked towards my good wife and found her smitten with the enduing power of this distressing sickness. She took her seat and the sickness waged on its course, until its usual demands were copiously met. I suppose from sympathy and from original causes I soon followed suit, most lustily,—The first assault being over I felt much revived. My wife was taken to bed and I advised to remain on deck. I did so for a time, but concluded I must go and see how she was doing. I found her in bed and better; but entering the room the sickness increased upon me. I seated myself upon the trunk, rested my head upon my hand and so long as I could be quiet and still, felt only tolerably well; but the moment I would raise my head from my hand, was dreadfully sick. The question with me was how I should get to bed. I looked and longed to be there. The drunkard said he would get in the next time it came round; but not so with me. The bed was before me and I before the bed. I found that I was to accomplish the deed only by a desperate attempt. I sprang to my feet threw off my over coat, and then a second coat—threw up the last contents of my stomach and fell back upon the trunk again, and making but a little further attempt I tumbled into bed and was soon relieved. A quiet reposing position was very advantageous. I was slow to leave this position. I concluded it suited my taste and talents for the occasion. Thus we past on with but little variation until we had the happiness of reaching this beautiful harbor of Havana. Here we shall remain probably for two days, waiting for the steamer Philadelphia. Have not gone ashore yet. We expect to on to-morrow. The North Star is destined to New York. In my next I will give you the more pleasant impressions the Sea has made upon me.

Affectionately, yours,

H. H. Kavanaugh.

THE INAUGURATION.

[From the Baton Rouge Advocate.]

The ceremonies and display attending the inauguration of his Excellency, Gov. H. C. Wickliffe yesterday, were imposing and interesting in the extreme, notwithstanding the apparent neglect and carelessness of the committee of the Legislature to make arrangements for the perfection of the details contemplated by the body appointing it. The military turned out most creditably, and, but for the oversight in not extending invitations in time, the Continental Guards and other favorite military companies of New Orleans would have added their attractions to the day. Major Gen. Lewis and Gen. Cronan, the Adjutant General of the State, and a large portion of the Governor's staff were present, the German Yagers, the first company of the Louisiana Legion, and a portion of the Fusiliers, from New Orleans, and the U. S. troops stationed at this post, under Captain Barry, made a display equally creditable to the profession and the State. The venerable "Jordan," well known in the military annals of Louisiana, whose presence always seems indispensable on such occasions, assisted by his stand of drummers, also formed quite a distinguished feature in the martial ranks.

The procession formed on Church street, opposite the Harney House, according to the programme previously published in the Advocate, marched down Lafayette street to the State House, and formed in front to the western wing of that building until the two houses of the Legislature, then engaged in the election of a stenographer—should be prepared for the inaugural ceremonies. A grand sautee in the meantime, was fired from a brass piece planted on the south, en side of the Capitol.

The proper time arriving, the lengthy procession entered the Capitol and proceeded to the Representative Hall, which was already crowded by the beauty and fashion of our female population. Gov. Wickliffe was conducted to the Speaker's stand by Gov. Hebert and the Secretaries and chief dignitaries of the State, and the booming of cannon and the inspiring strains of music from an excellent brass band provided for the day.

After quiet was restored, Gov. Hebert rose and pronounced the following brief valedictory address, in a feeling and characteristic style, and we venture nothing in stating that the immense concourse of people assembled, unanimously agreed that on losing him from the Executive chair, one of the noblest of Louisiana's sons was quietly resigning the robes of office to those who gave it, without a stain or reproach upon his honor as a man or integrity as a politician. Gov. Hebert said:

Fellow-Citizens—I have already, in my valedictory message to your Legislature, given my sincere and heartfelt thanks for the high trust conferred upon me, and received at your hands some three years since. I have endeavored to do my duty. I was not only as it were, Commander-in-Chief, but also had to perform the duties of a sentinel over the interests of our beloved State. You, to-day, have a privilege and an advantage which I have not—that if it is temptingly human to perpetrate errors, you can assure a divine right—to forgive, and I hope to forget the bad and remember the good of my administration. Whilst about translating myself from my high position to the shades of private life, and where I know there are no shadows, and where, I must confess, I have found from my short experience, the largest quantity of that blessing—so much sought after and coveted in this world—happiness—I am proud that the Executive mantle falls upon the shoulders so worthy to wear it. A son of the South—one allied to the South by the holiest of ties—a native of the State which, if not the mother, is certainly prolific of great statesmen. He needs no laudatory comments from my lips or from others. Depend on it, he will prove himself a Chevalier Bayard of a Governor, and do his duty, "sans peur et sans reproche."

Gov. Hebert having concluded, administered the oath of office to Hons. R. C. Wickliffe and C. H. Manton, the Governor and Lieutenant Governor elect, the respondents repeating clearly and audibly as they were respectively qualified. Gov. Wickliffe, in an impressive voice and manner, then read the following inaugural address:

Inaugural Address of Gov. R. C. Wickliffe.

Fellow Citizens—The oath just administered to me by Gov. P. O. Hebert, binds me faithfully and impartially to discharge and perform all the duties incumbent on me as Governor of the State of Louisiana, according to the best of my abilities and understanding, and agreeably to the Constitution and laws of the United States, and of this State.

This obligation I intend to perform in good faith—in full accordance with its letter and spirit—with a perfect and solemn appreciation of its magnitude and importance. If I distrust my own ability wisely to discharge the duties of the Chief Magistracy, I am yet sure I shall bring to the performance of them a singleness of purpose, directed exclusively to the promotion of the honor and prosperity of the State.

The power of the Executive in legislation is limited to an approval or disapproval of the acts of the General Assembly; but it is his Constitutional duty from time to time to recommend to the General Assembly the adoption of measures that he may consider essential or conducive to the public good. Such recommendations will be freely made on the proper occasions; in the meantime, usage has rendered it proper that he should take advantage of the opportunity afforded by his inauguration, to announce the policy that he will pursue, and the policy that in his judgment is demanded by the necessities and interests of the State.

It is deeply to be regretted that the overshadowing power of the Federal Government, in its actual administration, should so much divert the attention of the people from a proper consideration of the local wants of their respective States.

In the struggle on the one hand to enlarge, and on the other to limit the power of Congress to those positively delegated, parties are organized with reference to Federal issues alone, our domestic interest touched in every direction, (by our home legislation,) are forgotten, neglected or absorbed in the contest for Federal power.

This practical working of our double systems was not anticipated by the framers of the Constitution of the United States. Had Congress confined itself to the execution of the few grants of power delegated to it by the several sovereignties that compose the Union, the result would have been different and would not have deviated from that anticipated by our fathers. But Congress has proceeded step by step to extend by implication its power, and to control, develop or modify interests which were left by the constitution to the operation of natural causes—the sharp rivalry of individual enterprise and the wisdom of State legislation.

It is not my purpose to review the history of what has been justly regarded as the usurpations of Congress; nor to trace out the manner in which its limited powers have been extended to subjects not properly within its control, and made to bear on the highest interests, which ought to have been, and were, reserved as exclusively appertaining to the State Government.

But I am compelled to say that the steady encroachments made by Congress on the reserved rights of the States, has not only sanctioned but encouraged outrage that if not checked will undoubtedly result in a dissolution of the Union.

I do not wish to speak lightly of the Union; next to the liberty of the citizen and the sovereignty of the States, I regard it as the "primary object of patriotic desire." It should be dear to us as a sentiment, and dearer to us for its real value. But it can not have escaped observation that the hold which this Union once had upon the affections of the South, has been materially weakened, and that its dissolution is now frequently spoken of, if not with absolute levity, yet with positive indifference, and occasionally as desirable.

Some thirty years ago, when a distinguished citizen of the United States said it was time to calculate the value of the Union, a general burst of indignation throughout the country was the patriotic response. Now, good men and wise men do calculate the value of the Union, and the public heart does not seem to be aggrieved by the comparatively low estimate that is sometimes placed upon it. Misgovernment has produced this lamentable change.

It should always be remembered that every interpretation of the constitution not sanctioned by its letter and spirit, forms the basis for future unwarrantable construction; and so we shall go on until in the end the States become mere dependencies, and life, liberty and property shall lie at the mercy of naked majorities of Congress. Such has been, and such is the tendency of federal legislation; nor is this all.

Disregarding the rights of the States, Congress seems to have looked mainly to the interests of a section of the country, until that favored section has begun to consider the constitution not only as made for its advantage alone, but actually as a means of aggression upon the rights, the interests, and the honor of the slave States; so that at this time a party has been formed, and is in a relative ascendancy in the lower branch of Congress, with no other bond of union than a settled purpose to make war on the institutions of the South. Not that these institutions are hurtful to the North, but because they are in conflict with one of the forms of fanaticism, which the misguided people of the North have adopted through the designs of artful men, covetous only of their own political advancement.

Unless the progress of this insanity is checked, the Union will soon be a matter of history. Unity of action on the part of the South, a determination, calmly made and fearlessly executed, to permit no further encroachments, can alone perpetuate the Union of these States; and that Union is not worth preservation if we of the South are to be incessantly engaged in and out of Congress in defending ourselves from the attacks of those who use the Union as a means of assault upon us.

It has, therefore, become the painful duty of every slave State, distinctly to declare that no further aggression will be permitted, and to invite the co-operation of every State in vindicating to the last extreme the rights secured by the constitution, and which are immeasurably of more value than the constitution itself.

The South is satisfied with the principles of the Kansas and Nebraska bill, and it is to be hoped they will be adopted by the returning good sense of our Northern brethren. To use the language of Mr. Calhoun, that great statesman, whose sagacity so seldom deceived, and whose wisdom so rarely erred, they are the principles of "justice, the constitution and self-government," the principles "only on which the question of Southern rights can be settled. It can be settled on that ground simply by non-action, by leaving the territories free and open to the emigration of all the world, and when they become States to adopt whatever constitution they please with the single restriction to be republican."

The party cry that no more slave States are to be admitted into the Union, is not only an insult to the slave States—not only a direct violation of the constitution, but if acted upon by Congress, will be fatal to the South.

I hold it to be certain, that if the time shall ever come when the South shall be in a clear minority in the Senate as it is in the House and Electoral College, that the aggressive spirit of the North will direct the legislation of Congress so that the South will be obliged to abandon the Union. We must always be in a minority in the House of Representatives and the Electoral College, and to guard against the wrongs that majorities are prone to inflict, the South must not be in a minority in the Senate.

It is worse than useless to disguise from ourselves the tendency of events. Heretofore, the safety of the South has been in party; now its only hope of safety is in party, let us aim at a higher security, and that without a change in the constitution, can be found only, in at least an equilibrium in the Senate. The North struggles to destroy the equilibrium that she may have a like ascendancy in every branch of the Government; we must have power some where to protect ourselves. The North demands superiority, not for its protection, but for our Union. Whenever, therefore, it shall be made to appear that we are not to be permitted to guard ourselves from wrong—whenever it shall be made to appear that no more slave States are to be admitted into the Union, the time for separation will have arrived. Postpone it, and it may be impossible; ourselves and our children may become the meanest of vassals under the forms of constitutional law, and we shall have forfeited deservedly our heritage of freedom, and the memory of our ancestors be but the brand of our own shame.

In democratic governments, such as that of the State of Louisiana, where all power is lodged in the people, and their will is made known through the ballot-box, it is obviously of the first importance that that will should be fairly and freely expressed. Suffrage is both a right and a duty, and the laws to secure the freedom of its exercise should be stringent, stern and free from all ambiguity.

Popular election is the root of popular government, and popular elections would justly be regarded with scorn, if by party combination, individual violence, or the forms of law, the voice of the majority should be suppressed, controlled, or disregarded.

The purity of the ballot-box, so large a theme for declamation, and so essential to rightful government, is an idle dream if the protection of the ballot-box be regarded as a secondary consequence. As no party excitement can justify or excuse fraud in a voter, so no party excitement can justify or excuse the destruction of the ballot-box; and he is a bad citizen of the republic who would palliate directly or indirectly the acts, the corruption, the intimidation, or the violence by which the wishes of the majority are silenced or defeated.

I recur to the scenes recently enacted in New Orleans with pain and humiliation—the polls disgraced by turbulence—the ballot-boxes broken, men threatened, wounded, and murdered; nor has bloodshed ceased since the election.

The recent political contest has inaugurated an era of crime in New Orleans, heretofore distinguished for her love of peace and order. There must be fault in the law or its administration; there must be something radically defective in the government of the city, and if so it should be thoroughly remodelled.

I am not aware of any subject of higher importance to the people of this State than the prosperity of New Orleans; her true interests are the interests of the whole South; her credit is the credit of all; her improvement promotes the well-being of every citizen; she is the metropolis of the State—the metropolis of the Valley of the Mississippi. No jealousy of her growing greatness should disturb the harmony of our councils; nor impatience check a thorough investigation into her wants and condition. A charter that will not trammel the freedom of her action is that which she most needs; taking care that she shall be without power to inflict injury on the rest of the State, and taking care that her power is not used to taint the purity of the ballot-box. There should be a thorough reform in her corporate organization; a thorough reform in her right of taxation; all undue restrictions in her commerce should be removed; all impediments that narrow laws put in the way of her onward march to the great destiny which most assuredly awaits her should be promptly and effectually destroyed.

It is impossible for New Orleans properly to govern herself if with each successive year her charter is materially changed; her charter should be made without regard to party exigencies, and adhered to without regard to party results.

New Orleans exercises a large control in the legislation of the State, and a very large influence in general elections; hence, every restriction should be placed upon her to prevent her corporate power from being abused to promote party purposes.

It is much to be feared that those who have had, from time to time, the control of the city government, used it to perpetuate their own power; and a vacillating policy in the legislation is the natural and necessary result.

Political ascendancy, attained through the unjust or unfair use of municipal power, irritates antagonistic political parties; and the defeated combination in a temporary majority in the Assembly, modify the charter to promote its own future success.

Let us strive for better things hereafter, profiting by the past, and trusting that the late disgraceful scenes in New Orleans will be a warning that will be heeded by all good citizens; give to the city a just charter, and leave the future in her own hands.

It is but recently that Louisiana has been thoroughly awakened to the necessity of internal improvements; years ago, under habits of prodigality, arising from an inflated currency, the State squandered her thousands, and the public mind, so grievously shocked by the entire worthlessness of the result, arrived at the conclusion that the profits of a great enterprise were not worth its cost; but the magnificent fruits that in our sister States rewarded the energy and the skill of art, gradually awakened us from the apathy into which we had fallen, and contradicted the theories of our own bitter experience.

The constitution of 1852 opened for us by judicious provisions large fields of enterprise; the three great works commenced immediately after the adoption of that constitution properly received all the encouragement which could be afforded by State aid.

Bearing ever in mind the salutary warnings of the past, we should continue to foster these and other works that the times may demand.

Liberal in the assistance which we render, we should be rigid in our scrutiny into their management and exacting in the restrictions we require for their honest administration.

Bountiful as nature has been to Louisiana, the skill of the engineer is still essential to her full developments. With 25,000,000 of acres of fertile lands, hardly a tenth is in cultivation; with a sea coast a third in length of the State, we have a tonnage almost in its infancy. With a capacity to produce all the cotton needed for the British Empire, and all the sugar required for this great confederacy, we are as yet laggards in their growth. With thousands of miles of internal navigation, our productions frequently can find no market, and North and South Louisiana are strangers to each other.

Toward the cultivation of these millions of acres, towards the improvement of these miles of navigation, towards cementing together these sections, discreet and timely legislation can do much. As yet nothing, absolutely nothing, has been accomplished.

A fund for internal improvements has existed for years. Large amounts of it have been expended. Yet it would be difficult for even a curious inquirer to discover any benefit that has resulted from it.

It is passing strange that in a popular Government, without privileged classes, without stipendaries on the bounty of the State, mismanagement and recklessness should be tolerated. May the future redeem the errors of the past, and striking boldly and freely at all maladministration, vindicate the purity and the wisdom of republican institutions, while we promote and enlarge our material interests.

Comparing the constitution of the State framed in 1812 with that of 1845 and that of 1852, we recognise important and material changes. We have not been indifferent to the progress of opinion, but have modified our Government in accordance with views which a large observation seemed to warrant if not require. Our experiment has not been of sufficient duration to justify the conclusion that all the radical innovations made by our successive constitutions have promoted the common weal.

But it is very remarkable that while we have so thoroughly modified the structure of our government, we have scarcely touched our laws; this is not because complaints are not heard, nor reforms demanded, but because of the intrinsic difficulties by which the subject is encompassed and the deep rooted prejudices necessary to be appeased. While the laws of Louisiana which control contracts are on the main unobjectionable and not essentially different from those that prevail elsewhere; yet the laws which affect the domestic relations, so far as property is concerned, are singularly at variance with the systems of our sister States, and probably not in accordance with the general sentiment of the people.—Louisiana is to a certain extent isolated by them, and if her population does not increase with the same rapidity as that of her immediate neighbors, it may be attributable to the numerous objections which exist against our laws concerning husband and wife, parent and child. Community and forced heirship are unknown to our sister States; and it seems to me that the time has arrived for an inquiry into their operation.

Other States have profited by the example set by us of securing the wife in the property which she brings into the marriage, and if we abolish the community, we should imitate them in making provision for the wife out of the estate of the husband.

It may well be doubted whether there is any wisdom in enacting laws to compel parents to love and take care of their children; nature has made these already. It is difficult to answer the argument against forced heirship, which insists that it reverses the true relations between parent and child, making the child independent of the parent, and to that extent at least impairing the parental authority. These and the kindred subject of tacit mortgages should provoke attention and stimulate earnest scrutiny.

There are some reforms, I have no hesitation in saying, are at once demanded—such as the administration of successions, which under existing laws is complex in its details, difficult to be understood, and expensive to the last degree. I allude to these subjects now but in a very general way, in order that they may engage public attention. Hereafter I shall in all probability recommend specifically such reforms as I think the interests of the State demands at the hands of the Assembly.

The constitution and laws confer on the Executive a qualified power of appointing certain officers; like all other delegated powers, this is a trust to be used for the benefit of the public. In exercising the authority thus vested I shall look to the interests of the people. I cannot recognize in any person a claim to public office not founded in capacity, integrity, and good citizenship; party service when fairly and honorably performed, is a duty which every man owes to his country and himself, and so far entitles him to respect and consideration; but something more is needed from him to justify his nomination to public office; he must have the requisite qualifications to do all the law requires, and acting on these principles I shall appoint no person to any office requiring peculiar skill, who is without the proper education or experience to discharge its duties. I can never consent to appoint to office an incompetent person in order to enable him to reap its profits, while its labors are performed by a half paid deputy; I shall feel myself responsible for the efficiency and good conduct of every public officer appointed by me, and I should indeed have a heavy burthen to bear if I permitted myself to be guided by any other rule than that which I have thus laid down and to which I intend steadfastly to adhere.

I have thus endeavored to pass in review, very briefly and very generally, the leading topics that demand the attention of those interested with the duties of legislation. But I should be doing injustice to my own feelings if I did not congratulate you upon the triumph achieved in the recent political struggle in this State by the friends of constitutional freedom and religious liberty over a secret society organized for the purpose of depriving citizens of their legal right, by the unjust, if not unconstitutional perversion of the legitimate purposes of the ballot-box.

In despotic governments, where freedom of speech and freedom of the press are forbidden, and where those who make the laws do not represent those upon whom the law is to be executed, the rebel patriot may well plan in secret the mode in which tyranny is to be overthrown and liberty established; but in a government like ours, secrecy can only be the badge of wrong.

Truth courts discussion, and there can be no motive for concealment unless the end be evil, or the measures corrupt or unlawful. The object of this secret organization was to discriminate between citizens, when the law made no discrimination, and the means adopted were solemn obligations, by which all freedom of action in political life was relinquished and all individuality merged in obedience to the decrees of others. The purpose and plan deserved and have received the unqualified condemnation of the people.

A difference of opinion may reasonably exist as to the propriety of a modification of the naturalization laws; all concur in the opinion that they should be protected from evasion; but the reasoning is necessarily fallacious which can reconcile the exercise of a legal right, with the accomplishment of an illegal object.

It has never been denied, so far as I am aware, that one of the objects of that organization was to prevent a naturalized citizen from holding public office, which the law opened to him as well as the native citizen. To defeat legal rights by indirection, is more reprehensible than to do so directly, for while neither can be justified, the one, at all events, has the merit, poor though it be, of boldness, while the other clearly involves the violation of a moral precept.

The same objections equally apply to the attempt to make religion a test for office, when such a test is at war with the plain letter of the constitution. It is in vain to deny that such a test was made by the party just defeated, if not throughout the State, yet certainly in some parts of it, and it is not a little remarkable that those even who repudiated the anti-Catholic test did co-operate and are now affiliating with the very persons who most earnestly insisted upon it. The rebuke which this party has received in this State may teach use

SPECIAL NOTICE.

TO THE MEMBERS OF THE ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—At the recent session of your Conference you resolved to raise in each pastoral charge at least twenty dollars for the Ministerial Education Society, and to forward the amount to your Treasurer at your "earliest convenience."

This is to inform you that claims are now coming in, and payment is urged, and that you have not the funds in your treasury to meet them! At least five hundred dollars will be needed to meet the claims now due and falling due in a few weeks. Please attend to this matter forthwith, and forward the amount to your Treasurer, at Montgomery, Alabama.

☞ Will not some of our laymen, who appreciate an educated ministry, and have the means to help us, come to our assistance in this crisis? Brethren, do help us! Any material aid, at this time, will be of much comfort. Any amount you may forward to this object will be thankfully received and duly acknowledged. Who will be the first to respond? T. W. DORMAN,

Treasurer M. E. S. Alabama Conference.

MARRIAGES.

On the 29th November, by Rev. W. A. Manly, Dr. J. D. HAM to Miss ELIZABETH I. IRBY, all of Jackson Co., La.

DEATHS.

DIED, on the 6th September, 1855, near Jackson, Miss., after a brief illness of about sixteen hours, Mrs. ELIZABETH G. WHITINO, consort of Mr. F. A. Whiting, in the 40th year of her age.

Sister Whiting was a daughter of the late Samuel P. and Susannah B. Beasley, and was born in Rockbridge county, Va., on the 25th August, 1826, and with he parents and the family came to reside in this place in

At the time, as afterwards, she was of a merry heart, but then gay and thoughtless—not at all inclined to religion. Her elder sister who joined the church and professed religion in 1841, and afterwards that sister's husband, frequently spoke with and urged upon Sister Whiting the necessity of becoming religious, and, as a means thereto, to join the Church. At the close of 1842 she was induced to make a promise to unite with the Church on the occurrence of a certain contingency. The event transpired as conditioned for, and she kept her promise—alluding to which, but a short time before her death, at the last love feast she attended on earth, she said she blessed God as to the step first taken in becoming religious, for "as a bird she had been taken in the snare of the fowler." She was united in marriage to her bereaved husband on 8th June, 1843, but did not join as a profession of religion for a year or two afterwards. The writer of this memoir does not recollect at what precise time she experienced regeneration, but knows that her pathway was as that of the just, which shineth more and more unto the perfect day.

She professed the blessing of a clean heart some eight or nine years ago, and I have no doubt lived in the enjoyment of it to the day of her death. She often related aloud in the great congregation, from a feeling sense of the Master's presence. But she was the same quiet, family-minded, humble and happy believer at her home, in the prayer meeting, and everywhere she went. She was constant and unvarying in her devotions, both public and privately. She was not up and down in her religious experience, sometimes very religious and sometimes very far from it; but was an every-day, consistent and devotedly pious member of Christ's Church. She was a life of believing prayer. She lived in the sweet enjoyment of this means of grace, exhibiting to all that it was her meat and drink to do the will of her heavenly Father. She claimed the writer of this as her spiritual father, and in consequence a tie of affection and friendship enbodied which, like a threefold cord, could not be broken by the relentless hand of death. To me she was a beloved sister, a faithful friend and safe counselor, and to my child, her niece, a more than kind and affectionate mother. She was ardently devoted to her family, and of her husband and children with unchanging affection, and lived, labored, and died praying for their temporal, spiritual and eternal welfare.

Mysterious are the ways of Providence in many of His dealings with the children of men, and though we know that they are always right, yet in spite of us they often cause the less mysterious and afflictive. On the 5th September last, Brother Whiting being absent at the call of his business, the yellow fever was declared as having broken out for the season, and unacclimated as he was immediately left for the country. Sister Whiting moved that evening to Col. Napier's, about three and a half miles from the city. She partook of supper with the family in her usual health and good spirits, but very early after retiring was seized with a violent chill, followed by fever. From the non-intercourse that had immediately taken place between the city and country, it was not till 9 o'clock in the morning before any medical aid could be procured. A state of coma soon ensued from which she never rallied, and about 3 o'clock in the afternoon her happy spirit left her frail body, and exchanged time for heaven, before her most intimate friends even knew of her serious illness. Leaving a husband and six children to feel her irreparable loss.

Since she was taken ill, and before unconsciousness ensued, she declared that her sickness was unto death, but that she was not afraid to die, because the rod and staff of her Lord and Master comforted her; prayed for her children, for her husband and his safe return, and rejoiced in God, her saviour. In her death a husband and children have been sorely bereaved, the Church at last has lost an ornament and pillar, and a wide circle of friends has been left to realize the sorrow of separation. But our loss is her eternal gain.

JAS. MACLENNAN.

Columbus, Miss., Dec. 25, 1855.

In this city, on the morning of January 9, 1856, in the town of Lowndesboro', Ala., CAROLINE S., wife of Edmund Sager, and daughter of John D. and K. C. Sager. She was born in Green county, Ga., on the 20th of October, 1831. She has left seven children, the youngest being 5 days old at the time of her death.

Sister Alexander was converted in 1845, at a camp meeting near Lowndesboro', and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which she continued an exemplary member.

She was a child of affliction. For ten years she was an invalid, and in consequence deprived, in a good degree, of the advantages of those who "walked to the house of the Company."

But the writer's privilege to witness, with many others, the departure of our dear sister. For some time previous to her death it was more than ever devoted to the work of her salvation. When her end drew nigh she was favored with extraordinary manifestations of the Divine presence. With perfect submission to the will of God, she bade adieu to her husband and children, friends and servants, encouraging them all to meet her in heaven. So complete was her triumph over death that she forgot the while that her husband and children were about to be deprived of her companionship and love, and in a spirit of exultation looked on, watching the birth of a happy soul to glory. Heavenly light illumined her countenance, while with supernatural power she shouted, glory! glory! glory to God! And her speech seemed entirely to have failed, and we heard only a song of triumph, with uplifted finger she pointed toward heaven, till, just before the scene closed, in a clear, distinct shout, she uttered, glory! and died in Jesus.

J. W. JENNINGS.

In this city, of consumption, in New Orleans, January 22, MARY FRANCES DAMERON, aged 22 years.

At a called meeting of the officers and teachers of the Sunday School of the McGehee Church, Carondelet street, held Sunday morning, January 27, 1856, the following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Whereas, It has pleased an all-wise Providence, in his inscrutable decrees, to remove from our midst by death Miss Mary Dameron, who has long been associated with us as a scholar, and more lately as a teacher in this School; and whereas, by her kind and obliging position, her gentle manners and her Christian example she has endeared herself to all, therefore—

Resolved, That while we deeply deplore the loss of one who has been cut down in the very morning of her life, who gave such cheering promise of future usefulness, yet bow with submission to the chastening hand of Him who is too wise to err, and who doeth all things well.

Resolved, That though we have lost one of our most active and devoted teachers, one who was ever ready to perform the calls of duty, we have her Christian walk and conversation to encourage us, to elevate our affections above objects of the enduring and transcendant glories of Heaven.

Resolved, That in the Christian fortitude and pious resignation with which she endured her protracted sufferings, and in her triumphant death, we have a bright and living example of the power of the religion of Christ to support the spirit of frail mortality and to lead us to look, by the eye of faith, that peaceful rest which remaineth for the people of God.

Resolved, That while we truly sympathize with her afflicted parents in their melancholy bereavement, but we should remember that the loss is her eternal gain.

Resolved, That these resolutions be spread upon the record books of our Sabbath School, that they be published in the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and that a copy be transmitted to the friends of the deceased.

JOS. SUTTON, Chairman.

R. J. NUGENT, Secretary.

Thirty-Fourth Congress—First Session.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 21, 1856.—Senate.—Petitions from naval officers in regard to the action of the Naval Board, were presented and referred. Several reminders for the mistakes of the Board were discussed. The Senate then adjourned till Thursday.

House.—Mr. Boyce made an ineffectual attempt to rescind the resolution prohibiting debate. Mr. Faulkner offered a resolution, that if no Speaker is elected by next Monday, the members will resign, and the House adjourn till the second Monday in May. The resolution was laid on the table by 26 majority. Mr. Sneed proposed that each party select two members from each of the opposing parties, who should be considered the only candidates; these to be balloted for, dropping the lowest at each ballot, till an election is effected. The resolution was laid on the table.

The House then voted for Speaker, with the following result:

Banks 92, Richardson 66, Fuller 31, Pennington 2, Campbell 3, scattering 2; necessary to a choice 93.

Mr. Rust proposed that the present candidates all withdraw, as they were obstacles to the organization of the House. Mr. Fuller and Mr. Pennington consented, but their friends refused. The proposition was withdrawn.

Mr. Carlile submitted a resolution declaring Mr. Smith, of Virginia, Speaker. The resolution was rejected, and the House adjourned.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 22.—The Senate was in executive session to-day.

House.—Mr. Boyce offered the following preamble and resolutions:

"Whereas, our relations with Great Britain are of the most threatening character, indicating that we may be upon the eve of most startling events; and whereas, it is the imperative duty of the House, at this juncture of imminent peril, not to abdicate its great mission, but to fulfil it, by organizing, if possible, on such a basis as will give peace to our distracted country, and enable it to present an undivided front to the common enemy, therefore

Resolved, That the conservative elements of the House should unite in a sincere effort to elect a Speaker, who will represent the great ideas of peace for ourselves and the sword for the stranger.

Mr. Stephens asked for an explanation of the facts on which the gentleman made this announcement.

Objection being made, consideration of Mr. Morgan, the resolution was laid on the table.

After an ineffectual attempt to adopt the plurality rule, the House proceeded to vote for Speaker, with the following rault: Banks 91, Richardson 67, Fuller 29, Campbell (of Ohio) 5, scattering 3. No choice.

Two more ballots were taken, with a similar result, soon after which the House adjourned.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 23, 1856.—The Senate was not in session to-day.

House.—Mr. Richardson said he was sincerely desirous that the House should be organized. It had been intimated here and elsewhere that there might be an election should Banks and other candidates retire from the contest. The gentlemen with whom he acted would bear testimony that the position he occupies is not of his own seeking and that it was one from which he is anxious to recede. To relieve the House from embarrassment he would, if possible, retire after to-day.

Mr. Dowdell offered a peaceable declaratory of dependence on and gratitude to Divine Providence for innumerable blessings bestowed upon the country, and concluding with a resolution that the daily sessions of the House be opened with prayer, and that the ministers of Washington be requested to perform this solemn duty. The resolution was adopted.

The House then proceeded once more to vote, as follows: Banks 80; Richardson 65; Fuller 30; Campbell, of Ohio, 5; Porter, Cobb of Alabama, Williams, and Penaington, 1 each. Necessary to a choice 98.

Mr. Rust offered a resolution expressing as the sense of the House that if Messrs. Banks, Richardson and Fuller would prevent the use of their names after to-day, insurmountable obstacles to an organization would be removed, and the public interests be thereby greatly promoted.

A motion was made to lay it on the table, but the House refused by a tie vote.

The House refused to order the main question to be put on the resolution, and accordingly it goes over till to-morrow.

The House then adjourned.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 24.—House.—Mr. Fuller withdrew his name from the list of candidates for the Speakership. The resolution offered yesterday by Mr. Rust, relative to Messrs. Bank, Richardson and Fuller withdrawing their names, and thus remove an insurmountable obstacle to organization, was laid on the table by a majority of 1.

The House proceeded to vote for Speaker without result.

A message from the President, on Kansas affairs, was received and read amid great confusion, and laid on the table. The House then adjourned.

Senate.—Mr. Clayton presented a communication from the President, transmitting a copy of a letter from Lord John Russel to Mr. Crampton, under date of January 19, 1855, in which he declared that the British government intended to adhere strictly to the treaty concluded at Washington in April, 1850, and not assume any sovereignty, direct or indirect, in Central America.

Mr. Clayton moved the printing of the documents, and spoke at some length on the usurpations of Great Britain and the tortuous diplomacy of her ministry, stigmatizing it as monstrous and disgraceful.

Mr. Cass desired to speak upon the subject, but not being well, yielded the floor to Mr. Mason, who thought the debate was not now exactly proper, either from the condition of the question or of the country, and before the action of the executive, when the question would be presented to Congress in a tangible form. There would be no difference of opinion as to the incumbent duty of this government. England will be held to the strict performance of her treaty obligations.

Mr. Seward agreed that the debate should not be indulged in until the House organized, but still thought there should be no unnecessary delay in the settlement of the controversy.

Mr. Cass saw no reason why the subject should not be fully discussed, and moved to postpone its further consideration until Monday.

The motion was agreed to.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE ON KANSAS AFFAIRS.—A message was received in the Senate, from the President of the United States, on the state of affairs in Kansas. He urgently recommends the adoption of such measures as the exigency seems to require. The organization of the territorial government of Kansas had been attended by serious difficulties and embarrassments, arising partly from the local administration and partly from unjustifiable interference from the inhabitants of some States with views foreign to the interests and the rights of the territory. The Governor, instead of maintaining constant vigilance in the exercise of his duties, allowed his attention to be deviated from his official obligations by other objects—himself setting an example of violation of law and duty, which impelled the President to order that officer's removal.

The message alludes to the misdirected zeal of propagandist emigration, and the clashing of slavery and anti-slavery interests, as the cause of mischief, and emphatically condemns the efforts to anticipate or force a determination of that question in this incipient State. The first Legislative Assembly was for all practical purposes a lawful body. It condemns the formation of a free State constitution. The movement was revolutionary in its character; but if it reaches the point of organized resistence to the constitutional authorities, it will become a treasonable insurrection, and it then becomes the duty of the General Government to suppress it.

The message concludes by saying that if the inhabitants of Kansas shall desire a State Constitution, and there shall be sufficient numbers for that purpose, the proper course will be to form a Convention; and recommends the enactment of a law to that effect. The President advises especial appropriation to defray any expenses which may become requisite to execution of the laws and the maintenance of public order in the territory.

The message was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

On motion, the Senate adjourned to Monday.

Letter from Col. Kinney.

The following is the copy of a letter received by a gentleman of Mobile, from Col. Kinney. We have reason to believe that what the Colonel says in regard to the country in which he is located at present, is well founded. Indeed, the inducements held out to industrious and enterprising emigrants, either in the Kinney Colony in Nicaragua, cannot be surpassed, and must lead to an extensive emigration ere long. A mighty field is opened on both sides of Central America, which invites to influence and position, and to attain which the only requisites are, energy, industry and perseverance. All of these qualities are indigenous to the go-ahead, hard-working Anglo-Saxon.

Without additional remark we submit Col. Kinney's letter, which we copy from the Mobile Tribune of the 29th:

SAN JUAN DEL NORTE, Jan. 16, 1856.

Dear Sir: I received and duly noted contents of your favors dated 8th and 9th November, and 19th December, and would be pleased to have you accept my thanks for the kind interest you have evinced for the welfare of the enterprise to which I am at present engaged, and I assure you I am indeed highly gratified to know that my object is so much appreciated by you.

The young men you commend to my notice, I am much pleased with, and I am confident that with proper energy and perseverance they can shortly obtain an independence, with chances of promotion and position, which are always in the path of those deserving of honor in the formation of governments in a new and beautiful country like this.

This country is peculiarly adapted in point of location, climate and soil, for men who seek position and pecuniary independence. It is a well known fact, that as soon as this country becomes to a manner settled, and its immense resources become known to the world, such a flow of emigration will result as will realize certain success to all of the above class who will be interested in this enterprise.

Hoping soon to hear from you again, and begging you to accept the assurance of my earnest regard, I remain, dear sir, your obedient servant,

H. L. KINNEY.

WASHINGTON ITEMS.

BY THE SOUTHERN AND NATIONAL LINES.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28.—The most intimate friends of Dallas are certain that the mission to England will be tendered to him.

Senator Bigler was qualified and took his seat today.

Cass, in a speech on Central American affairs in the Senate to-day, said he thought there was no danger of a difficulty with England.

The plurality vote was tabled in the House to-day. Vote 106 to 100.

Commodore Morris, senior officer in the navy, died here yesterday afternoon.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 29.—Dallas has accepted the mission to England.

Rust, of Arkansas, assaulted Horace Greeley this afternoon, in consequence of some remarks of the latter in a letter to the New York Tribune, reporting a resolution submitted by Rust. Greeley was not seriously injured.

Louisiana Legislature.

BATON ROUGE, Jan. 30.—Senate.—Mr. Ryan introduced a bill granting appeals to the Supreme Court in all contested election cases where the salary exceeds three hundred dollars. Read the second time and laid over.

Mr. McMurdo gave notice of a bill for re-organizing the Board of Currency, and also of an act to amend the 7th article of the act incorporating the New Orleans, Jackson and Great Northern Railroad Company.

A joint resolution passed both Houses to have the journals printed in the Baton Rouge Advocate.

House.—A resolution to re-commit the reports of the Committee on Elections, led to an animated debate. The resolution was finally laid on the table, and the following resolutions were then adopted:

Resolved, That A. Devall and F. A. Lumsden are not entitled to seats in this House.

Resolved, That W. A. Gordon and Charles Dellume, Jr., are entitled to seats in this House, as duly elected Representatives from the Fourth Representative District of the Parish of Orleans.

Mr. Semmes introduced a resolution vacating the seat of Mr. Morgan of New Orleans, and giving it to Mr. Senzeneau. Adopted.

The House is still engaged on the contested elections, and there is much excitement among the members.

BATON ROUGE, Jan. 28.—The inauguration ceremonies to-day were very imposing. The oath of office was administered by Gov. Hebert. Gov. Wickliffe's inaugural address was ultra Southern in tone and very severe on the outrages committed in New Orleans on the day of the election.

Mr. Claiborne, of the Louisiana Courier, was elected State Printer by the two Houses to-day. He was the Democratic caucus nominee.

BATON ROUGE, January 29.—Senate.—Mr. Manton took his seat to-day as President of the Senate.

No business of importance transacted.

House.—Sundry bills were introduced and referred. The Committee on Contested Elections made reports, several in number—one declares Mr. Senzeneau entitled to the seat of Mr. Morgan, of the parish of Orleans. A minority report sustains Mr. Morgan. The majority report unseats Mr. Lumsden and Duval, and a minority report sustains them. In the case of Messrs. Brice and Shields' seats, the committee recommend that the ballot-box be sent for and the vote recounted.

A motion was made to reconsider the vote providing for a Catholic Chaplain. The motion was lost and Father Lavny was elected Chaplain.

The Committee on Elections, in the case of Lombard vs. Mackey, from the parish of Plaquemine, report that the parties shall take testimony and report to the House. The report was adopted.

The Speaker appointed several standing committees, and the House adjourned.

Snow Storm at Louisville.

LOUISVILLE, Jan. 28.—We had quite an old-fashioned snow storm on Saturday, and the ground was covered to the depth of from five to six inches.

Slave Stampede.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 28.—A regular stampede of slaves having taken place in the border counties of Kentucky last night, and the whereabouts of several who were secreted in this city having been discovered, the officers proceeded at noon to arrest them. When the officers approached the house where the slaves were, the latter fired, slightly wounding two or three of the spectators. One slave woman, on finding escape impossible, cut the throat of one of her children, killing it instantly, and afterwards severely wounded two others.

Six of the fugitives were apprehended, and it is said that six others escaped.

River Intelligence.

LOUISVILLE, Jan. 28.—Navigation is still suspended above the falls, and probably will be for several days, though the weather has abated somewhat its severe coldness. We are daily looking for a "break up."

EX-PRESIDENT FILLMORE IN ITALY.—A correspondent of the Philadelphia Ledger, writing from Leghorn, says:

The only person who was permitted to land in advance of all the rest, was a young Austrian officer (some 19 or 20 years old); the other passengers, among whom was our most excellent ex-President Fillmore and the Duke of Montpensier (son of the late King of the French; and a capital, handsome fellow withal) had to stay on board of an exceedingly filthy steamer, until the police were satisfied that none of the passengers brought into port were likely to give the State danger or trouble. The passports by-the-by, must be handed to the captain of each steamer at the time of your taking your berth, and returned by him during the voyage, so as to hand them to the police officer as soon as you enter the port. The police officer then comes on board and counts off the passengers like sheep, to see whether their number corresponds to the number of passports handed to him. For the first time in my life a real fillibuster feeling came over me, and I felt as if I could throw the officer overboard, when I saw the ex-President of our Republic (may God preserve her from the fate of the Italian Republics) walk past the petty officer of the absolute power of a petty State, in obedience to his brutal mandate. The Duke of Montpensier followed with a smile, and I could not help whispering to him in English, that he probably realized himself that America and England were the only two free countries in the world!

Nothing, indeed, can exceed the unostentatious carriage and simplicity of the American ex-President on his whole journey through Europe. He goes and sees everything, yet nobody finds out who he is, and what elevated station he occupied till he is gone. In Paris, while at the Hotel du Louvre, the landlord never knew his guest until some American had inquired for ex-President Fillmore; and the same thing occurred in Marseilles, Nizza, Genoa and Leghorn. When the people learned who he was, there was considerable empressment to serve him, but he afforded them no opportunity. Living in the simplest manner, and exacting nothing that is not usual with the most unpretending and unassuming gentlemen, he only leaves people with regret that they cannot show him some proof of their respect, or some attention corresponding with his station. Mr. Fillmore has now been in England, France, Prussia, Austria and Italy, and will have seen all Europe before he returns to the United States. He has everywhere been the unobserved observer of the people and their institutions, and will return to the United States a better judge of European governments than the wholy body of unfledged diplomates we are in the habit of sending abroad that they may become acquainted with court gossip and court manners, much to the detriment of their knowledge and usefulness in foreign parts. The manner in which Mr. Fillmore travels is the only one by which an American can really become acquainted with Europe, and learn to love and cherish his own country.

RECALL OF MR. CRAMPTON.—The Washington correspondents are unusually unanimous in giving credence and circulation to a rumor that the President has decided to recall Mr. Buchanan, and suspend diplomatic intercourse with England until that country shall signify its intention to act with more justice and fairness towards us. The recall of Mr. Buchanan will necessarily involve the dismissal of Mr. Crampton. It seems hardly possible that so important a step would be allowed to escape from the privacy of the Cabinet, but the earnest assurances with which it is made, must obtain for it a general belief. The necessity for this decisive measure, is alleged to exist in the fact that Great Britain has refused all further explanation in compliance with our demands for redress and satisfaction. It is to be regretted that the unorganized condition of the House prevents the President from fully communicating the subject to Congress, and placing upon it a just share of responsibility in a matter of so much importance. THE SONG OF THE SPEAKER'S CHAIR.

(Of the House of Representatives, Washington.)

BY DENMARK.

Not a cheer was heard—nor a triumphal note—
As through the ballots they hurried;
Not a candidate reached the final vote,
Though the President grumbled and worried.

They dozed and voted till dead of night,
By the gas expensively burning;
And smiled in their dreams—as well they might—
At their daily eight dollars, thus earning!

Calmly the Opposition tried
To weary them out by sitting;
Calmly they sate in their arm-chairs wide
Till the shades of night were flitting;—

Sternly they cast the unflinching votes
To which party oaths had bound them;
Grimly they smiled, as they button'd their coats,
And wrapped their "shawls" around them.

Few and brief were the words they said,
And scarcely spoken in sorrow,
As the last ballot still ineffectual sped,
And the House adjourned till the morrow;—

For rich were the wines over which they hobnob'd,
And dainty the dinners they swallow'd;
And bright was the people's gold they robb'd
And stanch the leaders they follow'd.

So, still they thrive in their cushion'd ranks,
And dine, and drink, and ballot;
While still Messrs. Richardson, Fuller and Banks,
Wait, in vain, for the Speaker's mallet.

Oh! is there no sturdy Roundhead land,
With an Oliver Cromwell to lead 'em,
Who would take these Congressmen in hand,
And a "Parliament homily" read 'em?

Who would order a final choice at once,
And if any should snivel or stammer,
Would settle the brains of the obstinate dunce
With a rap of the Speaker's hammer!

From Mexico.

By the steamship Texas, which arrived on Saturday, we have papers from Vera Cruz to the 22d, but the mail from the city of Mexico had not arrived in consequence of troubles in the interior.

This unfortunate country is again plunged into all the horrors of revolution and civil war. Haro y Tamariz, Guitan, Wraga and Castillon have united their factions and made war upon the present Government. They propose, it is said, to form a new government; of which Haro y Tamariz is to be the head. At last accounts their forces had invested Puebla, and troops had been sent by the Government from the City of Mexico to aid in the defence. The country was in a very unsettled condition, so much so, that bands of robbers and thieves pursued their occupations unmolested.

El Veracruziano, of the 21st, states, that the last diligence which left Orizaba, was attacked by ten highwaymen near San Augustin. A passenger indiscreetly fired upon, and wounded one of the robbers. The others immediately returned the fire, killing two and wounding all the others. The passengers were then despoiled of their money, etc., and permitted to go.

Occurrences of this sort are now frequent in all parts of Mexico.

The operations of the insurgents (if they may be called so), have been checked at Tepic. The movement was completely put down, and many of them were arrested.

Gigantic Naval Preparations of England for the Next Campaign.

As the prospects of peace grow fainter, and the spectre of war looms out dark and gigantic more vividly from the future, it becomes the business of England to examine what hopes she has of being able to strike hard and home at Russia—of being able to make her blows tell with quick and vital effect on the vast body of her foe. There is no use in hesitating—there is nothing to be gained by the system of cautious delay—it is time that we should not only show, but—should actively employ, our enormous strength by sea—that we should not only blockade the Russian ships in the Baltic, but that we should show them that no strength of defence, that no armament of forts, is sufficient to secure them from the force of the British attack. We must appear close to St. Petersburg with arguments which Russia cannot answer. We must see what conditions of peace she will venture to offer when the last sail of the navy, on which she has spent her time and her treasure, is demolished—when even Cronstadt is insufficient to defy the armament that we are now gathering for this exploit.

We published yesterday a list, the accuracy of which we have no reason to doubt, of the ships that will be available for the Baltic campaign of 1856. It is a catalogue the extent and power of which will show that the country has not been idle—that she has not neglected the greatest source of strength that she possesses—that she has a fleet superior to anything that the world can show at the present day, or that history can tell of in old time. Twenty ships-of-the-line and eighteen frigates, of the magnificent proportions and heavy armament with which those formidable vessels are now fitted, are followed by a line of floating batteries, heavy mortar-ships, and gun-boats of smaller dimensions, amounting in all to two hundred and forty-three sail—enough, as one would think, to do anything that can be demanded of a naval force. It is plain that Russia expects, and is preparing to meet, a strong attack this year in the Baltic. All our news thence tells us of the troops that she is concentrating—of the defences that she is erecting there.—She knows our preparations, and feels that sharp and decisive work must be encountered. Hitherto our appearance in the Baltic has been showy, rather than damaging and formidable. Our ships have been busy with the ruin of Russian commerce. They have not been exposed to danger; they have not meddled with glory. They have struck the Russian flag from the seas without suffering a blow themselves. This has, no doubt, severely damaged the country. It has created trouble in the Russian towns, and has brought dismay and starvation to the stores of the merchants; but is not enough for the national obstinacy—it does not, unhappily, convince the people.—Another course must be taken—a stronger attack must be made—it must be determined whether or no British skill and courage are a match for the fortifications which make the pride and strength of Russia. We should think, and we believe all England will agree with us, that the armament which we shall bring against these tremendous forts the present year—that the floating batteries which we and our Allies shall bring into action—that the fleet of gun-boats which we shall direct, will at least be sufficient, if not to destroy the forts themselves, to annihilate every ship that now lies beneath their guns. The destruction of the Russian Navy will be something to add to the history of our maritime glory. It will be a blow which it will take Russia long to recover—a serious damage to her, practically and financially—a fatal loss to the position which her ambition had led her to assume in Europe. FOUR DOLLARS AND FIFTY CENTS FOR AN APPLE. A California letter speaking of the extravagant spirit that prevails every where in that State says:

Apples (of large size, to be sure,) were offered at fruit stands for sale at four dollars and fifty cents a piece; the price is not more remarkable than that there are many persons indiscreet enough to purchase and eat them even at this rate. If this taste continues, who will say that the orchards of Oregon shall not come to be as valuable as the gold mines of California? The love of apples, the abundance of gold, and the little estimation in which the "lucre" is held in San Francisco, may be inferred. Apple dumplings and apple pies are very seldom seen upon public tables, where publicans receive only three dollars a day for board.

MACAULAY.—The London Times is startled at finding the two new volumes of Macaulay, of sixteen hundred pages, only gives the history of England for eight or nine years. After citing the author's announcement that he intends to write his history "down to the time within the memory of men still living," the Times asks whether he can fulfill his promise, or whether he will leave us "a fascinating fragment, a splendid but convicting proof of his hopeless volubility?"

VETERANS DEPARTED.—Isaac Smoot, who was in the battle of Chippewa and other frontier struggles under General Scott, and Henry March, who was a drum-major in the Norfolk campaign, died in Winchester, Va., a week or two since. Both were interred with military honors.

At the breaking up of a dinner party, two of the company fell down stairs; the one tumbled on the first landing-place, the other rolled to the bottom. It was observed that the first was dead drunk.

"Yes," said one, "but he is not as far gone as his friend, who is not dead yet."

THE OLDEN TIME.

MRS. WRIGHT—FRANKLIN'S HEAD—ANECDOTES.

I came oddly in contact with the eccentric Mrs. Wright, on my arrival in Paris from Nantes. Giving orders from the balcony of the Hotel d'York, to my English servant, I was assailed by a powerful female voice, crying out from an upper story, "Who are you? An American, I hope!" "Yes, madam," I replied: "and who are you?" In two minutes she came blustering down stairs, with the familiarity of an old acquaintance. We were soon on the most excellent terms. I discovered that she was in the habit of daily intercourse with Franklin, and was visited and caressed by all the respectable Americans in Paris. She was a native of New Jersey, and by profession, a modeler of wax figures. The wild flights of her powerful mind stamped originality on all her acts and language. She was a tall and athletic figure; walked with a firm bold step, and erect as an Indian. Her complexion was somewhat sallow, her cheek-bones high, her face furrowed, and her olive eyes keen, piercing and expressive. Her sharp glance was appalling; it had caught the wildness of the savage.

The vigor and originality of her conversation corresponded with her manners and appearance. She would utter language, in her incessant rambles, as if unconscious to whom directed, that would put her hearers to the blush. She apparently possessed the utmost simplicity of heart and character.

With the head of wax upon her lap, she would mould the most accurate likenesses, by the mere force of a retentive recollection of the traits and lines of the countenance; she would form her likenesses by the manipulation of the wax with her thumb and finger. Whilst thus engaged, her strong mind poured forth an uninterrupted torrent of wild thoughts, and anecdotes, and reminiscences of men and events. She went to London about the year 1767, near the period of Franklin's appearance there as the agent of Pennsylvania. The peculiarity of her character, and the excellence of her wax figures, made her rooms in Pall Mall, a fashionable lounging place for the nobility and distinguished men of England. Here her deep penetration and sagacity, cloaked by her apparent simplicity of purpose, enabled her to gather many facts and secrets important to "dear America"—her uniform expression in referring to her native land, which she dearly loved.

She was a genuine republican and ardent whig.—The king and queen often visited her rooms: they would induce her to work upon her heads, regardless of their presence. She would often, as if forgetting herself, address them as George and Charlotte. This fact she often mentioned to me herself. Whilst in England, she communicated much important information to Franklin, and remained in London until '75 or '76, engaged in that kind of intercourse with him, and the American government, by which she was placed in a position of extreme hazard.

I saw her frequently in Paris, in '81, and in various parts of England, from '82 to '84. Her letters followed me in my travels through Europe. I had assisted her at Paris, had extended aid to her son at Nantes, and given him a free passage in one of our ships to America. Her gratitude was unbounded.—This son was a painter and artist of some eminence, and in 1784 took a model of Washington's head in plaster. I heard, from Washington himself, an amusing anecdote connected with this bust.

In January, 1785, I enjoyed the inestimable privilege of a visit under his roof, in the absence of all visitors. Among the many interesting subjects which engaged our conversation in a long winter evening, (the most valuable of my life,) in which his dignified lady and Miss Custis united, he amused us by relating the incident of the taking of this model. "Wright came to Mount Vernon," the General remarked, "with the singular request that I should permit him to take a model of my face in plaster of Paris, to which I consented with some reluctance. He oiled my features over, and placing me flat upon my back, upon a cot, proceeded to daub my face with plaster. Whilst in this ludicrous attitude, Mrs. Washington entered the room, and seeing my face thus overspread with the plaster, involuntarily exclaimed. Her cry excited in me a disposition to smile, which gave my mouth a slight twist or compression of the lips, that is now observable in the bust. Wright afterwards made."—These are nearly the words of Washington.

Some time after my acquaintance with Mrs. Wright commenced, she informed me that an eminent female chemist of Paris had written her a note that she would make her a visit at twelve o'clock the next day, and announced also that she could not speak English.—Mrs. Wright desired me to act as interpreter. At the appointed hour the thundering of a carriage in the court-yard announced the arrival of the French lady. She entered with much grace, in which Mrs. W. was no match for her. She was old, with a sharp nose, with broad patches of vermillion spread over the deep furrows of her cheeks. I was placed in a chair between the two originals. Their tongues flew with velocity—the one in English and the other in French, and neither understanding a word the other uttered. I saw no possibility of interpreting two such volleys of words, and at length abruptly commanded silence for a moment!

I asked each, "Do you understand?" "Not a word," said Mrs. Wright. "N'importe," replied the chemist, and bounding from her chair to the middle of the floor, and dropping a low courtesy, was off—"What an old painted fool," said Mrs. W. in anger. It was evident that this visit was not intended for an interchange of sentiment, but a mere act of civility—a call.

I employed Mrs. W. to make the head of Franklin, which was often the source of much amusement to me. After it was completed, both being invited to dine with Franklin, I conveyed her to Passy in my carriage, she bearing the head upon her lap. No sooner were we in the presence of the doctor than she placed one head by the other. "There," she exclaimed, "are two brothers!" The likeness was truly admirable, and, at the suggestion of Mrs. Wright, to give it more effect, Franklin sent me a suit of clothes he wore in 1778. Many years afterwards the head was broken in Albany, and the clothes I presented to the "Historical Society of Massachusetts."

An adventure occurred to Mrs. Wright in connection with this head, indicrous in the highest degree, and although almost incredible, is literally true. After the head had been modelled, she walked out to Passy, carrying it in a napkin, in order to compare it with the original. In returning in the evening she was stopped at the barrier, in course to be searched for contraband goods; but as her mind was as free as her native American air, she knew no restraint, nor the reason why she was detained. She resisted the attempt to examine her bundle, and broke out in the rage of a fury. The officers were amazed, as no explanation in the absence of an interpreter could take place. She was compelled however, to yield to power. The bundle was opened, and to the astonishment of the officials, exhibited the head of a dead man, as appeared to them in the obscurity of the night. They closed the bundle without further examination, believing, as they afterwards assured me, that she was an escaped maniac, who had committed murder, and was about concealing the head of her victim.

They were determined to convey her to the police station, when she made them comprehend her entreaties to be taken to the Hotel d'Yorks. I was in my room, and hearing in the passage a great uproar, and Mrs. W.'s voice pitched upon a higher key than usual, I rushed out, and found her in a terrible rage, her fine eye flashing. I thrust myself between her and the officers, exclaiming, "Ah, mon Dieu, qu'est-ce qu'il y'a?" An explanation ensued. All except Mrs. W. were highly amused at the singularity and absurdity of the affair.

The head and clothes I transmitted to Nantes; they were the instruments of my frolics, not inappropriate to my youth, but perhaps it is hardly safe to advert to them in my age. A few I will venture to relate. On my arrival at Nantes, I caused the head to be properly adjusted to the dress, which was arranged in a natural shape and dimensions. I had the figure placed in the corner of a large room, near a closet, and behind a table. Before him I laid an open atlas, his arm resting upon a table, and mathematical instruments strewn upon it. A handkerchief was thrown over the arm stumps; wires were extended to the closet, by which means the body could be elevated or depressed, and placed in various positions.—Thus arranged, some ladies and gentlemen were invited to pay their respects to Dr. Franklin, by candlelight. For a moment they were completely deceived, and all profoundly bowed and courtesied, which was reciprocated by the figure. Not a word being uttered, the trick was soon revealed.

A report soon circulated that Doctor Franklin was at Mousieur Watson's "sur l'Isle de Frydeon." At eleven o'clock the next morning, the Mayor of Nantes came in full dress, to call on the renowned philosopher. Cossoul, my worthy partner, being acquainted with the mayor, favored the joke for a moment, after their mutual salutations. Others came in, and all were disposed to gull their friends in the same manner.

The most amusing of all the incidents connected with this head, occurred in London, where I had it sent after the peace of '83, when I had established a bachelor's hall in that city. I placed the figure in full dress, with the head leaning out of the window, apparently gazing up and down the square. He had formerly been well known in that part of the city, and was at once recognised. Observing a collection of people gathering at another window looking at him, I ordered him down.

The morning papers announced the arrival of Dr. Franklin at an American merchant's in Bedford Square, and I found it necessary to contradict the report. In married. When, therefore, both lady and gentleman are resident in the capital, there is generally a choice between two Mayors; but as it happened that my domicile was in the same arrondissement as that of my intended wife, we had no choice but to be married by Monsieur le Maire of the third arrondissement; and that officer being both very stupid and very tedious of his opinion, we were actually compelled to have recourse to the law before he could be made to perform his office.

The individual who filled the post of Mayor of the third arrondissement of Paris at that period, was a retired lawyer, an ex-notaire, or avoue, or avocat, or something of that kind—just such a man as with us retires from his business or profession when he has secured a competency, and gets himself put on the county bench, in order to add a little dignity to the otium he promises himself for the remainder of his days. In person, Monsieur le Maire was tall, thin, and what the French call dry in manner, precise, somewhat pompous, and cold. Add to this, that he had an overwhelming idea of his own merit, and was much prejudiced against everything English; and it was easy to see that he would prove a very troublesome fellow to deal with, particularly if required to do anything out of the common routine of his office. I was not long in verifying the correctness of this my first impression, and that, too, although I had taken the precaution to get an introduction to the great man from a mutual acquaintance. He was a troublesome fellow to deal with, as the sequel will abundantly show.

"Monsieur le Maire," said I, on my first interview with him, with my very best bow, and in my very best French, with the Anglo Parisian accent, "Monsieur le Maire, I am about to espouse a French lady, who is domiciled in the arrondissement which enjoys the advantage of being presided over by you; an advantage in which I have the happiness to participate; and I have availed myself of the advantage of our mutual obliging friend to enable me to enquire of you personally what formalities it will be requisite for me to observe in the matter. I am quite aware that the French law of marriage is very strict in the case of one of the contracting parties being a foreigner, but I feel sure (and hence I made another of my very best bows) that I could not do better than apply to Monsieur for advice and direction."

"Monsieur," replied the Mayor in his stately way, but with great politeness, tickled, as I had hoped, by the flattery administered in my opening speech, "as you are a foreigner, a British subject, and Mademoiselle, votre future, is a French woman, we shall require several pieces (certificates) which can only be obtained in your own country. I fear, therefore, that we shall be the cause of some expense, and what Monsieur will probably disrelish far more—delay;" and here Monsieur facetiously turned out his hands, shrugged up his shoulders, dropped the corner of his mouth and raised his brows, in true Gallic fashion.

"The expense is of little moment, but delay will be inconvenient," I stammered out, with a faint attempt at a smile—for the delay of a month to a man about making a love match appears like an adjournment sine die.

"Monsieur is not married—there are no legal impediments to the step he is about to take?"

"Married!" I cried, laughing in spite of my vexation at the threatened delay, at the gravity with which the question was put. "I do not contemplate bigamy, Monsieur le Maire, and I am not aware of the existence of any legal impediment whatever. Pray proceed."

"Ne vous fachez pas, Monsieur. We must proceed with due caution, and, indeed, with more than our usual care, since Monsieur is a foreigner."

"Well, well, Monsieur, I can easily prove that I am a single man: and moreover, if you desire it, that I was never married in my life. What next?"

"Is monsieur majeur (of age)?"

"I am four-and-twenty in December." It was now June.

"Then you are not of age. You are mineur quant au mariage (a minor as regards marriage.) You cannot marry until you are twenty-five without the consent of your parents. Are your parents living?"

"My mother, yes. My father died more than twenty years since."

"That, monsieur, must be proved by a certificate of his death; and I must also have that of his birth."

"Why," I asked, "of his birth?" For, owing to peculiar circumstances, I knew that such a certificate could not easily be procured. "A certificate of his death would seem to me to be all that can be required. If he be dead, and I prove that he is so, I should think that even the law, if curious on the point, might take for granted that he had been born!"

The sneer was irrepressible, but the indulgence in it was attended with disastrous consequences. I had made the formal old lawyer my enemy and he proceeded more solemnly than ever:

"Monsieur is evidently not aware of the gravity of the circumstances. It is important that every precaution should be taken, and that we should keep strictly on regle. I am bound to protect the interests of my countrywoman, and I shall certainly insist on the production of the pieces I have mentioned. It by no means follows that I am to yield a point because monsieur cannot see the necessity of it." Having delivered himself of this reproof, he resumed his interrogatory:

"Does Madame votre mere intend to be present at your marriage?"

"She does not."

"Eh bien! monsieur," said the Mayor briskly, as if delighted at being able to give me this extra trouble, "since you are a minor as regards marriage, I must have the written consent of madame votre mere, properly attested by British authorities."

"By what authorities?" I asked.

"Where does the madame reside?"—where is her domicil?"

"She resides chiefly in London."

"Eh bien! the consent of madame must be attested by the Lor' Mayor de Londres."

"The what?" said I, laughing heartily—"the what?"

"By the Lor' Mayor—the Lor' Mayor de London."

"Surely, Monsieur le Maire, you are joking. The Lord Mayor of London has nothing whatever to do with marriages. His Lordship would laugh at me if I were to apply to him on such a subject. Besides, even as a magistrate before whom my mother could make a declaration of her consent, the Lord Mayor is not the proper officer to apply to, inasmuch as he has no jurisdiction in that quarter of the capital in which she resides. You are asking me, therefore, to do what is impossible. I cannot comply with your request."

"Then, Monsieur," said the Mayor, with the most provoking coolness, "on ne vous mariera pas" (we will not marry you.)

"Not marry me! Am I, then, to understand that no Englishman who is under five-and-twenty years of age can be married in France without the consent of his parents, certified by the Lord Mayor of London?"

"Just so Monsieur, if the parents reside in London. The Lor' Mayor"——

"The Lord Mayor," I interrupted warmly, "has nothing to do with it. Mayors in England are not like Mayors in France. They"——

"Monsieur, I know my duty. A Mayor is a Mayor. I perfectly understand the nature of the functions appertaining to that important office. Had I not done so the government of his majesty would not have confided to my care one of the arrondissemouts of the capital. Besides, some years since, I passed a week or more in London, during which time I made your national institutions my serious study. Of course, I did not forget the Lor' Mayor de Londres; and, therefore, unless I have the consent of madame, certified by him, on ne vous mariera pas."

"Very well, monsieur," said I, with a sigh, feeling quite unable to combat the logic I had just heard—"very well; I must endeavor to satisfy you. Pray go on."

"In what diocese were you domiciled when last in England?" asked the Mayor with the tone and manner of a judge or advocate examining a witness.

"In the diocese of London."

"Which, I believe, is in the province of Canterbury."

"It is," I replied, wondering what would come next.

"Must not the bans of marriage in England be published on three successive Sundays at the parish church of one of the parties?"

"Not if the marriage be by license."

"Eh bien!" cried the Mayor, with a look of triumph; "since monsieur cannot have a license here at Paris, and since his bans cannot be published in the Londres, he must procure a certificate to the effect that bans may, under certain circumstances, be dispensed with, from Milor, Archeveque de Canterbury."

"Nonsense!" exclaimed I, fairly losing my temper at the mention of this other milor, to whom I was to be sent for permission to be married; "Nonsense! the Archbishop of Canterbury has no more to do with this matter than the Lord Mayor of London. It is impossible"——

"Eh bien! monsieur," said the Mayor, in a towering passion, "on ne vous mariera pas, on ne vous mariera pas! I will have both the pieces I have mentioned—that from the Lor' Mayor de Londres, and that from the Lor' Archeveque de Canterbury. Without them, I repeat, on ne vous mariera pas."

Expostulation was vain. The Mayor was not to be persuaded either that the conditions he insisted on were impossible of fulfilment, or that they were unnecessary. In vain our mutual acquaintance, who all this time had been plunged over head and ears in the Debats, endeavored to bring him to reason. In vain I requested him to take counsel with his brother official in the second arrondissement—that being the quarter where such marriages were most common. The unfortunate word "Nonsense!" had sunk deep into his soul. He was deaf to all remonstrance, and ringing his bell, bowed us hastily out, the last words I heard being, "Lor' Mayor de Londres," and "on ne vous mariera pas."

What was to be done? There was only one Mayor in Paris who could marry me, and he would not, except on certain absurd conditions, which I believed it would be quite impossible to comply with. My best plan, of course, would have been to apply at once to a person competent to give me a legal opinion on the question; but lovers are apt to be impulsive, and forget to weigh pros and cons. A lover who reflects is but half in love. I was really in love, over head and ears, and therefore, without any reflection at all, at once set out for England, without having any very clear idea of what I was going to do when I got there. We were then in the pre-railway period of the age; and depositing myself in one corner of a coupe of a diligence, I was soon rumbling along on my way to Boulogne. As hour after hour the huge "conveniency" creaked and bumped, and rolled along on the dreary road, I grew and over again cursed the obstinacy and conceit of the Jack-in-office who had sent me far away from my bride, and compelled me to adjourn, perhaps for months, the realization of my hopes. Love-like, I conjured up every possible misfortune which could grow out of this unhappy delay. I half persuaded myself that something must happen to break off the affair altogether; and as, to my excited imagination, the prospect before me grew blacker and blacker, the more and more heartily did I anathematize, in a choice compound of British and Gallic, the pigheadedness Monsieur le Maire du troisieme arrondissement. His eternal "on ne vous mariera pas," incessantly haunted my ears. If I endeavored to snatch a moment of repose, my sleep was troubled by frightful dreams, of which the Mayor was the most prominent figure—the nightmare ever standing between me and the girl I left behind me; and when roused from my spasmodic slumbers by the most whine of a professional beggar, (who was following the departing vehicle up the hill, his "charite, s'il vous plait," conveyed no meaning to my mind, but that of "on ne vous mariera pas."

I need not say that I got no certificate from either Lor' Mayor or Lor' Archeveque de Canterbury; but being advised by a friend, who, not being in love, had all his senses about him, I armed myself with the consent of my surviving parent, attested by the police magistrate of the district in which she resided. To this I added certificates of birth and deaths without number, always excepting that of the birth of my father, which, as I had anticipated, I could not easily procure; and, so provided, set off on my return to Paris, in the full persuasion that I had done all, and more than all, that was really necessary. Not so, however, thought Monsieur le Maire. Fixing his double eyeglass across the sharp ridge of his long nose, he read every word of the various documents which I had been at so much pains to procure—the English originals, as well as the French translations of them, although of the former language he knew not a word—and then laying them down with great deliberation, he dexterously dropped his spectacles from off his proboscis by a sudden twitch of the nostril and wink of the eye, and said again very emphatically: "Monsieur, on ne vous mariera pas."

"But, monsieur, consider the awkward position in which I am placed. I have proved to you by the signature of a London magistrate, duly attested by that of the British consul in Paris, that I have the full consent of my only living parent; and I have proved, in an equally satisfactory manner, that my father died more than twenty years since. In short, I have done all that is really necessary to render my marriage valid, as you may easily ascertain by consulting with your colleague in the arrondissement in which these mixed marriages are of the most frequent occurrence. Your presidence in your resolution places me in a position of great difficulty. If I have done all that the law requires—and permit me to say that I have—what more would you have me do?"

"What more! monsieur, what more! Why, I would have you procure the consent of Madame, votre mere, attested by the Lor' Mayor de Londres; and, also, I would have you procure a certificate from the Lor' Archeveque de Canterbury, to the effect that your bans of marriage need not and cannot be published where you were last domiciled in England; if you should be married in France. Without these two most important pieces, I repeat, on ne vous mariera pas."

So saying, and buttoning his coat over his shirtfrill in a very decided cut-it-short kind of manner, Monsieur le Maire du troisieme arondissement rose from his seat, and once more formally bowed me out of his apartment.

I now determined on doing what I ought to have done at the outset, as soon as the difficulty arose; I determined on seeking legal advice; and I accordingly laid the case before a gentleman with whom I had a slight acquaintance, a deputy procureur du roi. Having fully explained the position in which I stood, namely, the impossibility of getting married because the Mayor refused to perform his office unless I complied with certain impossible conditions to which he obstinately clung, I stated, with great energy, my determination of proceeding at once to England, to get married in that free country, unless in some way, could be found of speedily bringing the Mayor to reason.

The good natured lawyer laughed heartily at the recital of my troubles, but promised that he would soon get me put out of my misery. He was as good as his word. He forthwith proceeded to argue the point in the Palais de Justice—the Parisian Westminster Hall—before the parquet (court) of Monsieur le Procureur du Roi; and having beaten the enemy at all points—having shown both that such conditions were not required, and that they were impossible to be fulfilled—the poor old Mayor, in a few days, received a very curt and formal epistle from Monsieur le Procureur, requiring and commanding him to proceed forthwith in the matter of the marriage between Monsieur Dash, a British subject, and Mademoiselle Chose, born and now domiciled in Paris. After this, everything marcha, as the French say, comme sur des roulettes. Nothing remained but to "name the day;" and this, after a little becoming hesitation, was soon done. I enjoyed my revenge when I called on the Mayor's clerk, who, Jack-like, had been quite as determined as his master not to marry us, and ordered him to affix the necessary notices or bans of marriage on the front of his office that very day.

As soon as the happy day arrived, or rather the first of them, for people have two happy days in France—that is, if they can afford to devote two days from their ordinary avocations to the business of getting married. The first is devoted to the legal marriage before the civil authorities of the commune. This, although counting as the day of the wedding, the day on which you are legally one in the unromantic, matter-of-fact eye of the law, is not the day on which you really become man and wife: it is not the day of the dressing, and feasting, and dancing, and weeping, and leave-taking; and all the other doings, grave and gay, incident to a wedding. Custom, more powerful than law and revolutions, still ordains that you shall have the priest's blessing as well as the Mayor's; and the second day, therefore, is the wedding day par excellence—the day of elegant toilettes and elaborate repasts. The first day is a sort of business affair, which is passed over in comparative quiet, the galeties being reserved for the morrow, when the blushing bride, shrouded in her graceful veil, and crowned with white flowers, is led to the altar surrounded by troops of the friends and relatives of the two families. It is certainly curious that, in spite of the little hold which the mere ordinances of their religion have retained on the vast majority of the French people, marriages by the civil authority alone should be so extremely rare. It may be that the legal ceremony is un peche—too prosaic for a people who are so given to display, and so fond of theatrical effect; but whether that be the cause or not, the fact is certain. Very few persons dispense with the benediction of Monsieur le Cure.

The day at last arrived, then, which was to make the woman of my choice legally mine, and in which, to use the Turkish phrase, my tormentor, the poor stupid old Mayor, was to eat an immensity of dirt—to marry me in spite of his oft-reiterated phrase, "on ne vous mariera pas." Punctually, at the hour appointed, we came all to the Maire, and in as short a time as it takes to tell it, we were married. Placing ourselves opposite Monsieur le Maire, at a table covered with green cloth, and accompanied by four witnesses and many relatives, we listened patiently to the captious clerk, while, with the usual legal drawl, he read over to us all the documents relating to the marriage. Then, Monsieur le Maire, girding himself with the insignia of office, the tricolored scarf, reminded us in solemn tones, of the respective rights and duties of married persons, and put to each of us the all-important question. Lastly, the "yes" being pronounced by the gentleman very distinctly, and by the lady, if not very distinctly, at least sufficiently so to show that there was no mistake, Monsieur le Maire declared, in "the name of the law," that we were married.

AN ORTHOGRAPHICAL CONVENTION.—We have church conventions, State conventions—men conventions, women conventions—white conventions, black conventions—conventions for almost every purpose under the moon, practicable and impracticable, except one for the reform of a matter forever in every feminine mouth and before every masculine eye—we mean a convention for reforming English orthography—Dictionary-makers have arisen, and by "much learning made mad," have only caused confusion to become worse confounded. Phonetic prophets have opened their mission, and the universal English-reading world has stared at their mysterious symbols, and funnily winked its eye. Learned men with Eastern affinities have "gone in" for Webster—others for Worcester; while others, despising innovations half carried out, have steadily stuck to Johnson and Walker. In all the consequent diversities and jangilings, printers—who seem born to bear the brunt of intellectual wrangles—have been the sufferinging party; and so, moved by compassion and indignation, we have taken up the pen in their behalf, and have determined to do our endeavor to bring about a cessation of hostilities. After long and patient thought, we have come to the conclusion that there must be another convention; and for the sole and laudable purpose of a reform in English orthography. Not a convention of legal, medical, and theological doctors—of professors and authors; but a convention of well-read, clear-headed, common-sense printers—men of large lexicographical experience—to whom the whole matter shall be referred, and whose decision shall be as final and conclusive with respect to the English as are the dicta of the French and Spanish Academies in regard to French and Spanish orthography. And we therefore propose that the various chapels of printers should each send a delegate to an orthographical congress; and let every vexed and vexing word become a subject of thoughtful consideration, and the proper mode of dividing and compounding words be absolutely fixed. Let the convention utterly ignore etymology; and the prefix of every word such as inquire or encumber uniformly be made to begin with an i or an e, regardless whether it has been taken from the Latin, French, or any other language. In fine, let the language be thoroughly Americanized; and let all men, learned or simple, yield willing acquiescence to the judgement of the Typo-Orthographical Convention.—[Typographic Advertiser.

Two unoccupied frame dwellings, owned by a New York millionaire, were stolen and carried away a few days ago. The owner excuses his folly in leaving such property exposed by saying that a captain of police lived opposite the stolen houses, and he thought they were safe. The captain thinks he will catch the thieves when they come back for the lots!

The Effort Made to Discover a Northwest Passage.

The attempt to discover a northwest passage was made by a Portuguese, named Cortereal, about A. D. 1500. It was attempted by the English in 1553, and the project was greatly encouraged by Queen Elizabeth in 1585, in which year a company was associated in London, and was called the "Fellowship for the Discovery of the Northwest Passage." The following voyages with this design were undertaken, under British and American navigators, in the years respectively stated:

Sir Hugh Willoughby's expedition to find a northwest passage to China, sailed from the Thames, May 20	1553
Sir Martin Frobisher's attempt to find a northwest passage to China	1576
Captain Davis's expedition to find a northwest passage	1585
Davis's expedition	1586
Weymouth and Knight's	1602
Hudson's voyages, the last undertaken	1610
Sir Thomas Button's	1612
Baffin's	1616
Foxe's expedition	1631
[A number of enterprises undertaken by various countries, followed.]

Moore and Smith's	1746
Hearne's land expedition	1769
Captain Phipps, afterwards Lord Mulgrave, his expedition	1773
Captain Cook, in the Resolution and Discovery, July	1776
Mackenzie's expedition	1789
Captain Duncan's voyage	1790
The Discovery, Captain Vancouver, returned from a voyage of survey and discovery on the north-west coast of America, Sept. 24	1795
Lieut. Kotzebue's expedition, October	1815
Capt. Buchan and Lieut. Franklin's expedition in the Dorothea and Trent	1818
Captain Ross and Lieut. Perry, in the Isabella and Alexander	1818
Lieuts. Parry and Liddon, in the Hecla and Griper, May 4	1819
They return to Leith, Nov. 3	1820
Captain Parry and Lyon, in the Fury and Hecla, May 8	1821
Captain Parry's third expedition with the Hecla, May 8	1824
Captains Franklin and Lyon, after having attempted a land expedition, again sailed from Liverpool, February 16	1825
Captain Parry again in the Hecla, sailed from Deptford, March 25	1827
And returns, October 6	1827
Captain Ross arrived at Hull, on his return from his Arctic expedition, after an absence of four years, and when all hope of his return had been nearly abandoned, October 18	1832
Captain Back and his companions arrived at Liverpool from their perilous Arctic land expedition, after having visited the Great Fish river, and examined its course to the Polar seas, September 6	1835
Captain Back sailed from Chatham in command of his Majesty's ship Terror, on an exploring adventure to Wager river. Captain Back, in the month of December, 1835, was awarded by the Geographical Society, the King's annual premium for his Polar discoveries and enterprise, June 21,	1836
Dease and Simpson traverse the intervening space between the discoveries of Ross and Parry, and establish that there is a northwest passage, October	1839
Sir John Franklin and Captain Crozier, in the Erebus and Terror, leave England, May 24	1845
Captain Ross returned from an unsuccessful expedition in search of Franklin	1849
Another expedition (one sent out by Lady Franklin) in search of Sir John Franklin, consisting of two vessels, sailed from England, April—May	1850
Another under Captain McClure, who succeeded in effecting a "transit over ice from ocean to ocean; and another under Sir Edward Belcher	1851
Another consisting of two vessels, the Advance and Resolute, liberally purchased for the purpose by Henry Grinnell, a New York merchant, and manned at government cost from the United States Navy, under command of Lieut. de Haven, sailed from New York, May	1850
The expedition of Dr. Kane, in the Advance, May 31	1853
The last expedition, consisting of the Release and Active under Lieut. Hartstein, June	1855
And returns, October 11	1855

There may be some omissions in the above, but it will be found generally correct. [N. Y. Herald.

LARGE HAUL OF PIGEONS.—The Trumbull County (Ohio) Democrat says that on the 17th December last, four men caught in a net, in Tamarack Swamp, Bloomfield township, eighteen hundred pigeons at one haul. Besides this, they shot, during the same night, eight hundred and sixteen more, making a total of 2,616.

15,000 Acres of Land for Sale.

The lands are situated in Morehouse parish, Louisiana, and in what is known as the "Bastrop Grant." They are of the richest quality of alluvial soil, unsurpassed in fertility by any lands in the South, and fully capable of producing from one and a half to two bales, or fifty to sixty bushels of corn to the acre. They lie near the Ouachita and Bœuf rivers—good navigable streams—and likewise in convenient distance of the route of the Vicksburg, Shreveport and Texas Railroad, now in course of construction and hastening to a rapid completion. A portion of these lands are highly improved and in a flourishing state of cultivation; the country in which they lie is very healthy, the water is excellent and abundant, and altogether they will be found to possess greater advantages and present inducements to purchasers than any lands now offered for sale in the Southern country. They will be sold in quantities to suit purchasers, and on the most favorable terms. Titles perfect.

For further particulars inquire of the undersigned either personally at his residence in Prairie Jefferson Morehouse parish, or by letter addressed to Point Jefferson, Morehouse parish, Louisiana.

New Principle! No Poison!

Rhodes' Fever and Ague Cure,

OR ANTIDOTE TO MALARIA,

FOR THE PREVENTION AND CURE OF

Fever and Ague, or Chill and Fever; Dumb Ague, and other Intermittent and Remittent Fevers; also of Bilious Fevers, accompanied by Typhoid Symptoms; Typhoid Fever, Yellow Fever, Ship and Jail Fever, General Debility, Night Sweats, and all other forms of disease

WHICH HAVE A COMMON ORIGIN IN

MALARIA OR MIASMA.

This subtle atmospheric poison, which at certain seasons is unavoidably inhaled at every breath, is the same in character wherever it exists—north, south, east or west—and will everywhere yield to this newly-discovered ANTIDOTE, which neutralizes the poison, completely purifies the system, and thus entirely removes all the causes of disease.

The proprietor distinctly claims these extraordinary results from its use:

It will protect any resident or traveler, even in the most sickly or swampy localities, from any ague or bilious disease whatever, or any injury from constantly inhaling Malaria or Miasma.

It will instantly check the ague in persons who have suffered for any length of time, from ONE DAY TO TWENTY YEARS, no matter how long they had never have ANOTHER CHILL, by continuing its use according to directions.

It will immediately relieve all the distressing results of bilious or ague diseases, such as general debility, night sweats, etc. The patient at once begins to recover appetite and strength, and continues until a permanent and radical cure is effected. And as a proof that it is

WORTHY OF PUBLIC CONFIDENCE,

Because of its

SINGULAR AND ENTIRE HARMLESSNESS.

The following certificate from one of the most celebrated chemists in the United States is attached to every bottle:

NEW YORK, June 1855.

"I have made a chemical examination of Rhodes' Fever and Ague Cure, or Antidote to Malaria. I have tested it for Arsenic, Mercury, Quinine and Strychnine, but have not found a particle of either in it. I have, however, found any substance in its composition that would prove injurious to the constitution.

JAMES R. CHILTON, M. D., Chemist."

This allows of its

FREE USE AS A PREVENTIVE

by which all persons may thus be sure of entire freedom from the above named diseases, no matter how sickly the season or swampy the locality.

PROOFS OF EFFICACY are frequently published, and the confidence of the public is asked only in proportion to it; actual merits wherever introduced and used. These only are relied upon to prove its worth.

One or two bottles will answer for ordinary cases; some may require more. Directions printed in German, French and Spanish, accompany each bottle. Price One Dollar. Prepared and sold by the proprietor,

Payment to be made at the close of each term. Board, including lodging, washing, lights and fuel, can be procured in the village and immediate neighborhood at ten dollars per month. Students will not be received at any time during the session, and will be charged only from the time of their entrance to the end of the term. We would however, respectfully urge all parents or guardians who design placing their daughters or wards in the institution, to do so at their earliest convenience, as it will tend much to the individual interest of the pupils, and the general prosperity of the school, facilitating, as it will, a proper arrangement of the various classes in their respective branches of study.

School books, stationery, &c., may be had at any of the various stores in the village at the usual rates.

Reports will be sent to parents and guardians quarterly, in which will be stated the health, improvement, social and moral deportment of their daughters or wards, with such other information as may be deemed important.

As the design of the Faculty is to render the instruction thorough, and lay the foundation of a substantial education, no young lady will be permitted to rank higher than her attainments will justly entitle her, nor to pass into another department in the course of instruction without having made sufficient proficiency in the preceding studies.

The government of the school is to be understood as that of authority—though personal and mild, yet decided and firm. The institution, in a religious point of view will be conducted without reference to sectarian influence.

Pupils will be required to attend church at least once on the Sabbath, and recite a Bible lesson on each Monday morning.

The scholastic year, embracing ten months, will be divided into two equal terms of five months, one immediately succeeding the other.

The first session commencing on the first Wednesday in October, and closing the last week in February; the second session commencing on the first Wednesday in March, and closing the last week in July. At which time the annual examination will be held, and the usual rewards and honors conferred. The vacation will embrace the months of August and September.

All applications for admission of pupils, &c., to be made to the president of the College.

COLEMAN'S

PREMIUM UNDULATORY CORN AND FLOURING

MILLS,

French Burr Stone, and each Burr in one solid block.

Seven different sizes of these mills are manufactured adapted to all the various motive powers used or known in milling. The burrs of the smallest size are fourteen inches in diameter, and the largest size are three feet; which last size will grind a greater quantity in any given time than any other mill known. These mills range in prices from one to five hundred dollars apiece, and will grind from four to seventy-five bushels to the hour, according to the diameter of burr, power applied and velocity given.

The mill that took the premium at the Crystal Palace, New York, was the smallest size (14 inches) and grounds a bushel of corn into fine meal in four and a half minutes. Those desiring such mills can be supplied by addressing the patentee and proprietor,

CENTENARY COLLEGE OF LOUISIANA.

Centenary College of Louisiana is located in Jackson, La., 12 miles east of Bayou Sara. Its location is beautiful, retired and healthy. It has commodious buildings, a large library, a good chemical and philosophical apparatus, a well selected mineralogical and geological cabinet, and a full Board of Instruction.

As this section of the Southwest is but poorly provided with academies and preparatory schools, there is connected with the College a Preparatory Department, in which all necessary instruction may be received for entering College proper.

The College is now in a highly prosperous condition, and under the management of the present Board of Trustees and Faculty it promises permanency and extensive usefulness.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

To the Members of the Alabama Conference.—At the recent session of your Conference you resolved to raise in each pastoral charge at least twenty dollars for the Ministerial Education Society, and to forward the amount to your Treasurer at your "earliest convenience."

This is to inform you that claims are now coming in, and payment is urged, and that you have not the funds in your treasury to meet them! At least five hundred dollars will be needed to meet the claims now due and falling due in a few weeks. Please attend to this matter forthwith, and forward the amount to your Treasurer, at Montgomery, Alabama.

☞ Will not some of our laymen, who appreciate an educated ministry, and have the means to help us, come to our assistance in this crisis? Brethren, do help us! Material aid, at this time, will be of much comfort. Any amount you may forward to this object will be thankfully received and duly acknowledged. Who will be the first to respond?

T. W. DURMAN,
Treasurer M. E. S. Alabama Conference.
Montgomery, Ala., Jan. 22, 1856.
Southern Christian Advocate please copy.

To the Members of the Mississippi Conference.—Dear Brethren: The box containing "Dr. Winan's Conference Sermon" did not reach Vicksburg in time to be distributed among the preachers before the adjournment of our Conference. The best we can do, therefore, is to forward them by mail to the several members of the Conference. Brother Cook, of Vicksburg, has kindly consented to forward them in packages of ten copies, to every preacher who will send him his address, and postage stamps enough to prepay the postage on the package. The sermon is about the size of the catalogue of Centenary College, exhibited and distributed among the preachers of our late Conference. So that you can estimate pretty nearly the postage. Address E. G. Cook, Vicksburg, Miss. The postage will be twenty cents per package of ten copies. Yours, truly,

31 H. J. HARRIS.

To the Preachers and Sunday School Superintendents in the bounds of the Mississippi Conference.—The Board of Managers of our Book and Tract Society have instructed me to keep on hand in Vicksburg a sufficient quantity of books to supply the current demand. In obedience to this instruction I have ordered a large supply of the General catalogue; also, of Sunday school books—catechisms, question books, hymns, notes, dictionaries, libraries, &c., and I trust you will send your orders to Vicksburg for these books, accompanied with the cash when convenient: Price same as at Nashville. Time saved to you in the operation. Respectfully,

H. H. MONTGOMERY, Agent.

The Erie Railroad Dispute.—A dispatch of the 28th from Philadelphia says:

In the Pennsylvania Supreme Court to-day, Judge Black delivered the unanimous opinion of the Court, in the case of the Cleveland, Painesville and Ashtabula Railroad, vs. the City of Erie, that the said railroad company have a right to extend their road through the town of Erie to its eastern boundary to connect with the northeast road. That the resistance to and obstruction of the road by the Mayor and Councils of Erie, is unlawful and must be restrained. In the case of the Erie and Northeast Road vs. Joseph Casey, the Court was divided. Judges Black, Lowrie and Knox, held the repeal of the company's charter constitutional and valid, while Chief Justice Lewis and Woodward held the same to be unconstitutional and void. The case will be taken to the United States Supreme Court.

Later from Florida—Another Attack by the Indians.

By the arrival on Saturday last of the steamship C. Vanderbilt, we have later advices from South Florida, the seat of the Indian difficulties. The intelligence leaves no doubt whatever that only the most energetic measures will suffice to subdue the savages. The Tampa Peninsular of the 26th ult., says:

By the arrival of the U. S. schooner Experiment, the following information was received by Col. Monroe, to whose politeness we are indebted for a perusal of Col. Brown's report. The facts here given are a compilation from said report, and, so far as they go, are authentic.

A wood party, consisting of a corporal and five privates, with two wagons and twelve mules, were fired upon by some fifteen or twenty Indians, about four miles from Fort Deynaud, on the road leading from that post to Fort Thompson, on the morning of the 18th inst. As far as known, only one man, Private Peterman, of Company C., made his escape. He made his way to Fort Deynaud and reported the attack. Peterman received a slight wound in the calf of his leg. Lieuts. Larned and Garner, with about thirty-five enlisted men, were immediately ordered by Col. Brown, to march to the place where the party was attacked, rescue the wounded or dead soldiers, and if any signs of the Indians should be seen, to pursue and chastise them. Lieut. Larned returned and reported that he found the two wagons loaded with cypress poles and the twelve mules dead.

All the mules were shot behind the ears, indicating that they were deliberately killed, and not by a general random shot. The wagons and harness were uninjured. No signs of the missing men, neither blood nor dead bodies, or even any track of them were discovered. The lieutenants scoured about the scene of action for about three miles, when seeing no signs of either Indians or soldiers, owing probably to the quantity of water covering the country about, Lieut. Larned returned and reported to Col. Brown as above.

The unfortunate party was armed, but owing to the fact that no Indian signs had been discovered in that region since the demonstration of the 20th Dec they felt quite secure, believing that the Indians had gone further South, and consequently the attack was quite unexpected.

This startling intelligence, together with that received from the Miami, speaks too plainly that the savages are not satisfied, and are determined to prosecute their murderous operations with an energy entirely unlooked for.

The attack was led by Okehan, sub-chief, who is exasperated at the destruction of his village by the troops, which occurred a short time since.

A letter to the Peninsular from Fort Meade says that scouts are sent out almost daily in search of the Seminoles, but without finding them.

Another letter from the head waters of Manatee river, says that in anticipation of an attack by the Seminoles, all the citizens upon the head waters of Manatee and Miaka rivers, with a few others from elsewhere, have united and organized a mounted company of volunteers.

☞ A Man of Bones.—Here is a curious fact for you. The flesh of a living man once grew into bone. It seems hard to believe, but I suppose it was so; for, in the museum at Dublin, Ireland, there is, or was, the skeleton of one Clerk, a native of the city of Cork, whom they call the ossified man, one of the greatest curiosities of nature. It is the carcass of a man, entirely ossified in his life time, living in that condition for several years. Those who knew him before the surprising alteration, affirm that he had been a man of great strength and agility. He felt the first symptoms of this surprising change some time after a debauch, till, by slow degrees, every part grew into a bony substance, except his skin, eyes and intestines. His joints settled in such a manner that no ligament had its proper operation; he could not lie down or rise up without assistance. He had at last no bell in his body, yet, when he was placed upright, like a statue of stone, he could stand but could not move by the least. His teeth were joined, and formed into one entire bone; therefore a hole was broken through them to convey liquid substance for his nourishment. The tongue lost its use and his sight left him soon time before he expired.

Later from Texas.

By the arrival yesterday of the steamship Mexico, we have our files of Galveston papers to Saturday last, and late dates from interior Texas.

From the Civilian's commercial article of Friday last, we extract the following:

At Galveston the market continues buoyant, owing in a great degree for the demand to fill up ships now loading for distant ports.

The bad state of the roads and cold weather have served to check the receipt of cotton at Houston, though considerable quantities get come in to that city. An arrangement has at length been effected between the contractors and company of the Harrisburg railroad, by which the cars have commenced carrying cotton from Richmond and the quantity accumulated at that point is being rapidly carried off. This will lead to an increase in the amount hauled to Richmond, and the receipts from that quarter will be large for some time to come. The receipts the past week at this port amount to 1868 bales. The exports to 2367 bales. The sales amount to between 700 and 800 bales; and the demand has been unabated, owing to the anxiety to dispatch vessels in port waiting cargo. The following are the prevailing rates for cotton:

Ordinary to Good Ordinary.....6¾ to 7¼
Low Middling.....8 to 8¼
Middling.....8¾ to 8¾
Good Middling.....9¼ to —

We hear of a sale of Good Middling Deaw cotton at 9¼ cents.

Sugar continues in good request. Fair to Fully Fair is worth 7 and 7¼c.

Rings continue in good request here, and at prices, we think, which leave purchasers but little margin for profit in the markets of the North, where the quotations are scarcely a cent per lb higher than our own, while the sales are made on time, and all damaged bales rejected. Here they continue to command 13½ and 14½ cents per lb.

From its Austin correspondent the News learns that the Debt Bill has again been brought out by the Legislature under a high state of excitement. The News says:

"What may be the result appears exceedingly problematical. We cannot, however, but fear that the bill may be defeated. Never have we felt a deeper interest in any public question before our Legislature, and yet we have no personal interestin it, as we own not a dollar of the public debt. But we feel morally certain that the defeat of that bill will inflict irreparable injury on our State.

The Houston Telegraph informs us that the Austin coach on its downward trip upset in Cumming's creek, a short distance above Brenham, on Friday, the 25th ult., and that two or three of the mail-bags were lost. There were eight passengers in the coach, which was buttoned tight, at the time it upset in the creek. While the coach was being righted by the rapidity of the current, all hands made up their minds to "shuffle off this mortal coil," but finally, being lodged partly upon brush and upon the bank, the passengers were enabled to escape. Gen. Baer, of Huntsville, lost some $7000 or $8000, which, however, he subsequently found. Another gentleman lost and afterwards recovered $400. Much valuable mail matter from Austin has, probably, been lost by this accident.

The Nueces Valley Advertiser has the following paragraphs:

The only disease now raging in our community, is the Nicaragua fever. Judging from present appearances, it is likely to carry off to parts unknown, some of our best men.

Pilots at Aransas, look out! We have a rod in pickle for you. Two vessels during the week, have been allowed to go to leeward of the Pass, in consequence of your consummate negligence. Play on—Euchre is a good game.

Louisiana Legislature.

Baton Rouge, January 30, 1856.—Senate.—Pursuant to adjournment, the Senate met. Twenty-three members answered to their names.

A joint resolution of the House was concurred in, instructing the State Printer to have the official proceedings of the Legislature published at the capital, and naming the Democratic Advocate.

The Hon. Ryan, on previous notice, introduced a bill allowing contestants in elections to appeal to the Supreme Court, where the amount involved does not exceed $300.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow at 10 o'clock.

House.—House met pursuant to adjournment. Seventy-five members answered to their names.

The Committee on the Insane Asylum at Jackson, made a report, which was received and ordered to be printed—one thousand copies in English and five hundred in French.

The report of the Committee on Contested Elections being the order of the day, Mr. Lawrason moved that Messrs. Lumsden and Devall be allowed thirty days to obtain testimony. In defense of his position, as a representative of the people and member of the American party, Mr. Lawrason made an eloquent speech. He read the correspondence between the representatives of the two parties in New Orleans prior to the election, to show that the American was quite as anxious as the Democratic party to preserve peace and good order at the polos, and to secure to every man entitled to do so, the exercise of his elective franchise. He referred to the partial and unjust course of the Democratic Central Committee (a self-constituted supreme court) in selecting gentlemen preterminted to ask opinions in reference to the legality of courts in the city to naturalize foreigners, when the question of their right to do so was, and still is, a debatable and unsettled question; said that out of the number thus selected, but one (Judge Nash Ogden) thought proper to ask and answer questions not propounded by the self-constituted tribunal, and his opinion is well-known.

Mr. Lawrason said that the act of 1814 was clearly abrogated and annulled by the act of 1852 and the constitution under which the State is now governed. Mr. L. showed conclusively that the position taken by the Democratic party, that any man has a right to vote who will subscribe to the oath prescribed, without mention from the Judges; is dangerous and fallacious, since the constitution defines the qualifications for a voter in this State, excluding seamen, soldiers, criminals and paupers. Mr. Lawrason maintained that the Democratic party in New Orleans, sought the difficulties complained of at the polls—they courted it for political capital. He said that Mr. Gordon, one of the parties contesting, had told him on board a boat going to New Orleans, before any action was had here in reference to the matter, that his case had been decided—decided in caucus—yes, the very men who hate the loudest, and meanest horrified at a secret political societies, meet in some obscure corner, and because they have the strength which numbers give, perpetuate these wrongs upon us. He thanked God that there were some gentlemen on that floor, who has the moral courage to refuse to obey the dictates of these secret conclaves, and they were ready to meet the facts in open daylight, and judge of them impartially.

Yeas and nays called for on the motion to recommit the report. Yeas 35, nays 40.

Mr. Duperier moved then that the seats of Messrs. Lumsden and Devall be declared vacant, and that the Governor be requested to issue his proclamation ordering a new election. After a speech from Mr. Gantt, the previous question was taken up and carried; 42 yeas to 35 nays.

The question in reference to a chaplain was called up for opposition.

Mr. Pike moved, as an amendment, that each member of the House pray alternately for the same, commencing at the head of the roll, and going down alphabetically. That for the service, they be allowed extra compensation at the end of the session, according to the length of the prayers. The whole matter laid on the table.

Thursday, Jan. 31.—We have already received by telegraph and published the proceedings of the Senate for this day.

House.—Mr. Seuzeneau, of New Orleans, presented himself and took the oath of office.

The resolution adopted yesterday to elect a Catholic Chaplain, was taken up again to-day, and Mr. Pattan offered as an amendment, after a few remarks, that Protestant ministers be invited also.

Mr. Pike offered a resolution to fix the salary at $100 for each. A suspension of the rules was asked for. Yeas and nays called. Yeas, 22, nays 32.

The House soon after adjourned.

Friday, Feb. 1.—Senate.—Senate met pursuant to adjournment; 24 members present.

The Senate refused to concur in the resolution of the House to adjourn until Monday, the 11th inst.

Senate adjourned to meet again to-morrow at the usual hour.

House.—House met at 10 o'clock; 53 members answered to their names.

Messrs. LeBlanc and Gordon, from New Orleans, presented themselves and were sworn in.

Mr. Estlin moved that Messrs. Brice and Shields, Representatives elect from New Orleans, whose seats have been contested, be allowed time to collect evidence in the case, before a Justice of the Peace in New Orleans.

Mr. Gantt moved to lay on the table—said that the gentlemen had been consulted, and their witnesses have been consulted, and their witnesses have been summoned to appear before a committee—said that it would retard the action of the House to the end of the session.

Mr. Estlin said, in explanation, that he offered the resolution in order to facilitate business—that the witnesses were citizens of New Orleans, who have their own affairs to attend to, and it would be difficult to have them at the capital.

Mr. Favrot offered a resolution to have all the documents in reference to contested elections, published—lost.

Notice of many bills was given. The only one of any public importance was that of Mr. Duperier, in reference to some resolutions of instruction to our Senators and Representatives in Congress, relative to a change in the naturalization laws.

The House adjourned to meet to-morrow at 10 o'clock.

The unfortunate man who on last Wednesday took the law into his own hands, has burnt his fingers and dropped it.

THE GHOST OF ROGER WILLIAMS.

BY AN OLD SEXTON.

"Angels and ministers of grace defend us!
Be thou a spirit of health, or goblin damn'd,
Bring with thee airs from Heaven, or blasts from hell,
Be thy intent wicked or charitable,
Thou comest in such a questionable shape
That I will speak to thee."—SHAKSPEARE.

I am not superstitious; I do not believe in ghosts, goblins, or witches. I have no sympathy with the so called "spiritual" movement. It is very convenient when anything happens that we cannot understand, to ascribe it to the agency of the poor spirits. But I am content to let a great many things I cannot explain remain a mystery, for even after we have ascribed the phenomenon to spiritual powers, we are still in the dark. I do not know why the grass grows and I am satisfied to let it remain a mystery in the hands of the All-Wise and All-Good Being, who "doeth all things well."

In the course of my dealings with the dead, I have had my share of observation and experience of the supernatural and mysterious. I could tell many a story of "terrible signs," of mysterious forewarnings," of "spectral visitations;" but I am free to say I do not believe even those which came within my own immediate knowledge. It is true, I cannot explain some very strange phenomena, yet that is no reason why I should believe that water will run up hill—that the founder of natural laws should break them himself, for the sake of telling some ignoramus know that one of his first cousins will die when this time comes. I say some ignoramus, for I have never found a really intelligent person who would credit the ghost stories of the past or the present.

The incident I am about to relate is certainly of a thrilling character, and my friend over the way, who is a firm believer in the modern spiritual manifestations, is perfectly sure there can be no explanation for it; he is satisfied that I have held converse with a being of the other world. The reader may judge for himself.

Twenty years ago, when I lived in ——— street, I had a neighbor, who was somewhat my senior in years, and with whom I was upon the most intimate terms. He was a journeyman mason, and a very clever, honest, and industrious man. His name was Roger Williams, and he claimed kin with his namesake, the illustrious advocate of intellectual liberty, and the founder of Rhode Island. He was a mild, harmless man, with too little energy ever to accomplish any great thing. The only uncharitable act I ever heard of his doing was the disowning of his own brother, though in my opinion there was sufficient cause for it. For twenty-five years he had not spoken to him, or permitted him to come into his presence. He would not own that Eli Williams was his brother; which was certainly not in accordance with the gentle and forgiving spirit of Christianity.

When they were young men, their father had lost the little property he had accumulated, and was left without a penny in the world. Bodger proposed to his brother Eli, that they should jointly pay the rent of the house he had occupied, and provide him with the means of living comfortably in it, for this was what suited the old man best. He had lived in the house so long that he had become strongly attached to it, and so had the old lady; they both loved the place, and both would have been glad to end their days there. But Eli refused, declaring it would cost too much. High words ensued, and they were hopelessly alienated. Roger, who was then young and active, resolved to take the whole burden upon himself, and by the most resolute economy and by working at various odd jobs out of hours, he kept the old folks comfortable, till his mother died; then as there was no one to take care of him, his father consented to live with him, and continued to be a member of his family to his death.

Years after, Eli attempted to bring about a reconciliation, but Rodger told him that the man who could count his money against the comfort and happiness of his old father and mother, was no brother of his; he did not know him. Though Eli lived in the city, they never met again.

After the death of his father, Roger had saved up a sum of money, amounting to some two thousand dollars, with which he intended to buy the house he lived in. He had collected the money together, and deposited it in the bank in anticipation of the purchase. But he could not agree upon the price at once with the owner, and while the negotiation was pending, he was taken sick with the typhus fever.

I watched him with him several times during his sickness. I was impressed with the idea that he should never recover, and I think this thought had an unfavorable effect upon him. His imagination connected all the remedies that were used, and his prediction was fulfilled; he died, even after the physician had given every encouragement that he would recover.

In the course of our intimacy, he expressed a desire that I should administer upon his little property after his death. Though my occupation left me but little time to attend to other matters, I could not refuse the request of a dying man. I buried him, and then took out letters of administration upon his property. The sickness, and the funeral expenses of the deceased, had exhausted the widow's ready money, and she applied to me for a supply. There was no resources but the sum in the bank, which had been appropriated to the purchase of the house. I drew a check for the amount the widow required, and presented myself at the bank, armed with the proper vouches of my authority.

"Mr. Williams has no funds here," replied the teller.

"You are mistaken," said I.

"He drew out all he had deposited."

"When?"

The teller referred to the books, and gave me the date; it was about three weeks before his death.

"Who presented the check?" I asked.

"He presented it himself."

"Will you let me see the check?"

I was very much surprised by this intelligence. It seemed to me that, if he had withdrawn his funds, he would have informed me of the fact, especially as he had asked me to settle his estate. He had never mentioned the subject, however, in any way, and as the case stood, I had no information in regard to the money, and I was sure that the widow believed it to be in the bank.

The check was shown me; the signature was in the stiff, cramped, and somewhat singular hand-writing of Mr. Williams, and I could not doubt its genuineness. It did not occur to me that there was anything out of the way, and I immediately called upon Mrs. Williams to obtain further information.

It was possible that he had again deposited the money in some other bank, but the widow knew nothing about it. Her husband, who was in the habit of conversing freely with her about his business affairs, had never mentioned his intention of changing the deposit to another bank. I examined all the papers with care, for any memorandum that would furnish a clue to the money, but could find nothing.

Mrs. Williams was astounded at the discovery. She was sure her husband would not have touched the money without informing her; and it was certainly very strange that, while he said so much to me during his sickness, about his business, he had never alluded to a matter of so much importance as this.

My next step was to visit all the banks in the city in search of the lost deposit. It was a fruitless task; I could obtain no clue to it. The widow was in the deepest distress; the money was all she had to depend upon for the rest of her lifetime; she was sure it was lost, and I could say nothing to assure her that it might yet be found. But I advanced her a sum sufficient to supply her present wants. For my own part, I did not know what to make of it. The whole affair was involved in mystery. If the deceased had been a man of dissolute habits, the deficit could have been explained; but he was nothing of the kind, and I venture to say, he never spent a penny in a barroom, or lost one in a gambling hell.

I sat in my room one evening, two or three days after my application at the bank, trying to think what had become of the two thousand dollars. My wife had gone out to spend the evening, and I was thinking of going after her, when the door-bell rang.

"Is Mr. Mortal at home?" said a voice at the door.

It sounded strangely familiar to me, and yet I did not at once recognize it.

"He is; that is my name. Will you walk in?"

He bowed, and followed me into my little parlor.

"Take a chair, sir," and I seated him near the fire.

He removed his hat, revealing a head on which the snows of many winters had lain their whiteness. I was sure I knew the person, but my lamp burned dimly, and I could not yet identify his features. He turned down his coat-collar, and I had as good a view of him as the faint light in the room would permit.

I started back, more in wonder and astonishment than in terror, for, as I have before intimated, I am not easily frightened.

It was Roger Williams, the mason.

Of course, I could not positively swear it was he, and the fact that I had seen him die myself, had put him in his coffin, had placed him in the tomb, had locked up his remains in that dark receptacle of mortality, was calculated to stagger my belief, even in the evidence of my own sense.

But there was his bald head, there was his long aquiline nose, there were his features in whole and in detail. It was his voice I had heard in the entry, it was his gait, his manner, his motion.

"Who are you, sir?" I asked, in amazement.

"I am Roger Williams."

"Impossible!"

"I did not come to hold an argument with you," he continued, coldly, and though it was his voice, it sounded strangely hollow.

"Are you alive or dead?"

"It matters not."

"You cannot be Roger Williams!"

I confess that my heart began to flutter rather violently. I knew not what to make of it, and we are instinctively appalled by mystery.

"I am Roger Williams—enough of that, if you please. On the sixteenth of November, I drew from the bank the money I had deposited. Here it is," and he handed me a roll of bills.

I took them, and proceeded to count them. They were the bills of the bank in question, and I found the amount to correspond with the little fortune of my deceased friend. I was astounded, and I could explain the adventure in no other manner than upon the supposition that the person who stood before me was a spirit from the other world. None but Mr. Williams himself could have known the amount, and none but he. It seemed to me, could have produced the money.

He rose from his chair to go when I had counted the money.

"Are you the person whom I buried the other day?" I asked, gathering up confidence from the business-like manner of my ghostly companion.

He made me no answer.

"Are you in the flesh, or are you a spirit?"

He looked at me earnestly, but made no reply?

"I do not believe you are Roger Williams."

"I will not argue that point, or any other. You have the money," said he sullenly, and putting on his hat, he moved towards the door.

"Stay," I called to him. "Shall I buy the house with this money?"

"No!"

I sprang after him, determined to know whether he was flesh and blood, or some more questionable shape; but as I did so, my lamp suddenly went out and the room was involved in darkness. Nothing daunted, however, I rushed to the door. He had gone. Both the entry and the street doors were open, though I had not heard them. I descended the step to the street, but I could see nothing of him.

Returning to my parlor, I lighted the lamp, and after counting over the money again and assuring myself that the bills were genuine, I pondered the remarkable circumstance for an hour. It was a mystery; as yet an impenetrable mystery. I was confused, bewildered, appalled.

"You are pretty much!" said my wife, entering the room.

I had forgotten all about her, but I excused myself by saying I had a visitor.

"Who?" she asked.

"Roger Williams."

"What!"

"Roger Williams, whom I buried the other day."

"Are you mad, husband?"

I assured her I was not, and then told her the story in detail, exhibiting the roll of bills in evidence of what I said. It was a long time before I could convince her it was not a joke; but when convinced, her astonishment and terror knew no bounds.

The next day I informed the widow that I had found the money, though I did not deem it prudent to tell her of the circumstances under which I had received it. I evaded her questions, but in the end was obliged to invent a story to satisfy her. But the money had been found and this was the most satisfactory result that could have been obtained. The cheerless poverty that stared her in the face was removed from her, and she was content.

The reader may believe or dislbelieve this story, as he pleases. To this day I have obtained no satisfactory solution of this mystery. Emmie insists upon it that it was Eli Williams who had taken advantage of his resemblance to Roger and drawn out the money; and then, impelled by the pangs of conscience, had taken this method of restoring it. But whether there was any resemblance or not, I cannot say, as I have never seen Eli.

I do not understand it, but I think it is easier to attribute it to a "mystery," or to some such cause as Emmie suggests, rather than ascribe it to supernatural agency. I am in the dark, and the reader is at liberty to solve the riddle as he pleases.

A Record of the Past.

The following sketch of a visit to a Bavarian bathhouse—its dungeons and torture-room—we clip from a letter in the Milwaukee Sentinel:

Ratisbon has much to interest the traveler who is fond of relics and antiquity. Of its churches and walls, its towers and battlements, dating as far back as the time when it was under the Romans, I shall say nothing, for I fancy my readers are getting tired of reading about them; yet, to me, such places possess deep interest.

I will, however, mention the Rathhouse, as it is called, being an old, irregular pile of ruins, in which the Diets of the German Empire were held for centuries. The new one joins it, which was built some three hundred years since. Down beneath the ground, under the old portions, are shown the cells and torture chamber, with its horrid apparatus, just as it was used in former times. The descent and windings, together with the dungeons, are very similar to those seen after passing over the Bridge of Sighs, which I described in a former letter from Venice. Wicked rulers and tyrants in all countries have ever been ingenious in their devices and plans for venting their malice and cruelty upon their enemies.

A little girl who had picked up considerable English, and who seemed very intelligent, took me down into these cold and loathsome dungeons. With lights in our hands we made the rounds, sometimes entering, and at others only looking in, the passages being so small that it was difficult to get in without crawling on the hands and knees. Previous to going into the torture-chamber, which possesses the most interest, I entered one for the higher grade of criminals by stooping considerably. It is some seven or eight feet square, lined with timbers, something like our jails, without any place to admit air or light, and only one piece of furniture, a block for the unhappy victim to lay his head upon. In the ceiling above is a small aperture, to which there is a pipe communicating with a room above, to enable spies and listeners to hear any word that might be unwarily uttered or sighed by the ill-fated occupant. This room, with some twenty others, were for criminals of a higher character. Beneath these are other dungeons, or vaults rather, having no mode of entrance except through an iron grated door, on a level with the floor, which is strongly secured by bolts and chains. Those that passed this dreaded portal never again saw the light of day. They either were suffered to pine out, in this living tomb, the small balance of a miserable existence, or were soon dispatched. There are only three or four of this kind, but I was satisfied on seeing one.

But I passed on through intricate passages, and small double-bolted iron doors, until I came to the torture chamber, which was large and high, giving ample space for the inquisitors, executioners, surgeons, victims, and instruments of torture. On the outside is a stone bench from which, through an opening in the wall, the helpless captive could see their infernal operations, perhaps upon a father, a brother, or some near friend, and hear his agonizing shrieks. The object of this was to ensure a confession. The imagination will not be slow in conceiving what these instruments were. They were known by different names given to them by the tormenters. The first I saw was what they facetiously called der jung-fr-auenschoor, or "the maiden's imp." This was a high arm-chair, the bottom of which is full of small sharp spikes of wood, on which the victim was obliged to sit with ponderous weights in his lap, and others hanging from his feet. Another was called der gespickte hase, "the larded hare," and consisted of a horizontal rack, resembling a long narrow bedstead, on which there was a roller set with iron spikes over which the victim was drawn with ropes attached to a windlass until life was almost extinct. Another was called die schlimme liesel, or "Bad Bess." This was a sort of upright frame of wood with a windlass attached. The prisoner's feet were each confined to iron rings in the floor, and then with ropes attached to the wrists he was drawn up until the cracking were heard of the bones leaving the sockets, when he was lowered down. Another method was to attach heavy weights to the feet, and then with his arms bound behind his back, raise him to the roof and then let him suddenly fall to within a few inches of the floor. This would start every bone in the body.

Another called rutschbahn, or "slide," was a species of ladder with movable triangular rounds, over which the victim was drawn until every vertebra of his naked back was grazed and the flesh torn and bruised.

Another kind of refined cruelty was named der Spanische esel, or "the Spanish Ass," being a wooden horse, with a sharp back, on which the victim was compelled to ride. There are many other implements of torture and cruelty, but the above are sufficient to show what demons there were in those ages, who were in power, and who administ

MARRIAGE IN PARIS.

Lord Mayor of London has nothing whatever to do with marriages. His Lordship would laugh at me if I were to apply to him on such a subject. Besides, even as a magistrate before whom my mother could make a declaration of her consent, the Lord Mayor is not the proper officer to apply to, inasmuch as he has no jurisdiction in that quarter of the capital in which she resides. You are asking me, therefore, to do what is impossible. I cannot comply with your request."

"Then, Monsieur," said the Mayor, with the most provoking coolness, "on ne vous mariera pas" (we will not marry you.)

"Not marry me! Am I, then, to understand that no Englishman who is under five-and-twenty years of age can be married in France without the consent of his parents, certified by the Lord Mayor of London?"

"Just so Monsieur, if the parents reside in London. The Lor' Mayor"——

"The Lord Mayor," I interrupted warmly, "has nothing to do with it. Mayors in England are not like Mayors in France. They"——

"Monsieur, I know my duty. A Mayor is a Mayor. I perfectly understand the nature of the functions appertaining to that important office. Had I not done me the government of his majesty would not have confided to my care one of the arrondissements of the capital. Besides, some years since, I passed a week or more in London, during which time I made your national institutions my serious study. Of course, I did not forget the Lor' Mayor de Londres; and, therefore, unless I have the consent of madame, certified by him, on ne vous mariera pas."

"Very well, monsieur," said I, with a sigh, feeling quite unable to combat the logic I had just heard—"very well; I must endeavor to satisfy you. Pray go on."

"In what diocese were you domiciled when last in England?" asked the Mayor with the tone and manner of a judge or advocate examining a witness.

"In the diocese of London."

"Which, I believe, is in the province of Canterbury."

"It is," I replied, wondering what would come next.

"Must not the bans of marriage in England be published on three successive Sundays at the parish church of one of the parties?"

"Not if the marriage be by license."

"Eh bien!" cried the Mayor, with a look of triumph; "since monsieur cannot have a license here at Paris, and since his bans cannot be published in ma Londres, he must procure a certificate to the effect that bans may, under certain circumstances, be dispensed with, from Milor, Archveque de Canterbury."

"Nonsense!" exclaimed I, fairly losing my temper at the mention of this other milor, to whom I was to be sent for permission to be married; "Nonsense! the Archbishop of Canterbury has no more to do with this matter than the Lord Mayor of London. It is impossible!"——

"Eh bien! monsieur," said the Mayor, in a towering passion, "on ne vous mariera pas, on ne vous mariera pas! I will have both the pieces I have mentioned—that from the Lor' Mayor de Londres, and that from the Lor' Archeveque de Canterbury. Without them, I repeat, on ne vous mariera pas."

Expostulation was vain. The Mayor was not to be persuaded either that the conditions he insisted on were impossible of fulfilment, or that they were unnecessary. In vain our mutual acquaintance, who all this time had been plunged over head and ears in the Debats, endeavored to bring him to reason. In vain I requested him to take counsel with his brother official in the second arrondissement—that being the quarter where such marriages were most common. The unfortunate word "Nonsense!" had sunk deep into his soul. He was deaf to all remonstrance, and ringing his bell, bowed me hastily out, the last words I heard being, "Lor' Mayor de Londres," and "on ne vous mariera pas."

What was to be done? There was only one Mayor in Paris who could marry me, and he would not, except on certain absurd conditions, which I believed it would be quite impossible to comply with. My best plan, of course, would have been to apply at once to a person competent to give me a legal opinion on the question; but lovers are apt to be impulsive, and forget to weigh pros and cons. A lover who reflects is but half in love. I was really in love, over head and ears, and therefore, without any reflection at all, at once set out for England, without having any very clear idea of what I was going to do when I got there.

We were then in the pre-railway period of the age; and depositing myself in one corner of a coupe of a diligence, I was soon rumbling along on my way to Boulogne. An hour after hour the huge "convenlency" creaked and bumped, and rolled along on the dreary road, I over and over again cursed the obstinacy and conceit of the Jack-in-office who had sent me far away from my bride, and compelled me to adjourn, perhaps for months, the realization of my hopes. Lover-like, I conjured up every possible misfortune which could grow out of this unhappy delay. I half persuaded myself that something must happen to break off the affair altogether; and as, to my excited imagination, the prospect before me grew blacker and blacker, the more and more heartily did I anathematize, in a choice compound of British and Gallic, the pigheadedness Monsieur le Maire du troisieme arondissement. His eternal "on ne vous mariera pas," incessantly haunted my ears. If I endeavored to snatch a moment of repose, my sleep was troubled by frightful dreams, of which the Mayor was the most prominent figure—his nightmare ever standing between me and the girl I left behind me; and when roused from my spasmodic slumbers by the nasal whine of some professional beggar, who was following the lumbering vehicle up the hill, his "charite, s'il vous plait," conveyed no meaning to my mind, but that of "on ne vous mariera pas."

I need not say that I got no certificate from either Lor' Mayor or Lor' Archeveque de Canterbury; but being advised by a friend, who, not being in love, had all his senses about him, I armed myself with the consent of my surviving parent, attested by the police magistrate of the district in which she resided. To this I added certificates of birth and deaths without number, always excepting that of the birth of my father, which, as I had anticipated, I could not easily procure; and, so provided, set off on my return to Paris, in the full persuation that I had done all, and more than all, that was really necessary. Not so, however, thought Monsieur le Maire. Fixing his double eyeglass across the sharp ridge of his long nose, he read every word of the various documents which I had been at so much pains to procure—the English originals, as well as the French translations of them, although of the former language he knew not a word—and then laying them down with great deliberation, he dexterously dropped his spectacles from off his proboscis by a sudden twitch of the nostril and wink of the eye, and said again very emphatically: "Monsieur, on ne vous mariera pas."

"But, monsieur, consider the awkward position in which I am placed. I have proved to you by the signature of a London magistrate, duly attested by that of the British consul in Paris, that I have the full consent of my only living parent; and I have proved, in an equally satisfactory manner, that my father died more than twenty years since. In short I have done all that is really necessary to render my marriage valid, as you may easily ascertain by consulting with your colleague in the arrondissement in which these mixed marriages are of the most frequent occurrence. Your persistence in your resolution places me in a position of great difficulty. If I have done all that the law requires—and permit me to say that I have—what more would you have me du?"

"What more! monsieur, what more! Why, I would have you procure the consent of Madame, votre mere, attested by the Lor' Mayor de Londres; and, also, I would have you procure a certificate from the Lor' Archeveque de Canterbury, to the effect that your bans of marriage need not and cannot be published where you were last domiciled in England, if you should be married in France. Without these two most important pieces, I repeat, on ne vous mariera pas."

So saying, and buttoning his coat over his shirtfrill in a very decided cut-it-short kind of manner, Monsieur le Maire du troisieme erondissement rose from his seat, and once more formally bowed me out of his apartment.

I now determined on doing what I ought to have done at the outset, as soon as the difficulty arose; I determined on seeking legal advice; and I accordingly laid the case before a gentleman with whom I had a slight acquaintance, a deputy procureur du roi. Having fully explained the position in which I stood, namely, the impossibility of getting married because the Mayor refused to perform his office unless I complied with certain impossible conditions to which he obstinately clung, I stated, with great energy, my determination of proceeding at once to England, to get married in that free country, unless a way could be found of speedily bringing the Mayor to reason.

The good natured lawyer laughed heartily at the recital of my troubles, but promised that he would soon get me put out of my misery. He was as good as his word. He forthwith proceeded to argue the point in the Palais de Justice—the Parisian Westminster Hall—before the parquet (court) of Monsieur le Procureur du Roi; and having beaten the enemy at all points—having shown both that such conditions were not required, and that they were impossible to be fulfilled—the poor old Mayor, in a few days, received a very curt and formal epistle from Monsieur le Procureur, requiring and commanding him to proceed forthwith in the matter of the marriage between Monsieur Dash, a British subject, and Madamoiselle Chose, born and now domiciled in Paris. After this, everything marcha, as the French say, comme sur des roulettes. Nothing remained but to "name the day;" and this, after a little becoming hesitation, was soon done. I enjoyed my revenge when I called on the Mayor's clerk, who, Jack-like, had been quite as determined as his master not to marry us, and ordered him to affix the necessary notices or bans of marriage on the front of his office that very day.

As soon as the happy day arrived, or rather the first of them, for people have two happy days in France—that is, if they can afford to devote two days from their ordinary avocations to the business of getting married. The first is devoted to the legal marriage before the civil authorities of the commune. This, although counting as the day of the wedding, the day on which you are legally one in the unromantic, matter-of-fact eye of the law, is not the day on which you really become man and wife: it is not the day of the dressing, and feasting, and dancing, and weeping, and leave-taking, and all the other doings, grave and gay, incident to a wedding. Custom, more powerful than law and revolutions, still ordains that you shall have the priest's blessing as well as the Mayor's; and the second day, therefore, is the wedding day par excellence—the day of elegant toilettes and elaborate repasts. The first day is a sort of business affair, which is passed over in comparative quiet, the gaieties being reserved for the morrow, when the blushing bride, shrouded in her graceful veil, and crowned with white flowers, is led to the altar surrounded by troops of the friends and relatives of the two families. It is certainly curious that, in spite of the little hold which the mere ordinances of their religion have retained on the vast majority of the French people, marriages by the civil authority alone should be so extremely rare. It may be that the legal ceremony is too seche—too prosaic for a people who are so given to display, and so fond of theatrical effect; but whether that be the cause or not, the fact is certain. Very few persons dispense with the benediction of Monsieur le Cure.

The day at last arrived, then, which was to make the woman of my choice legally mine, and in which, to use the Turkish phrase, my tormentor, the poor, stupid old Mayor, was to eat an immensity of dirt—to marry me in spite of his oft-reiterated phrase, "on ne vous mariera pas." Punctually, at the hour appointed, we came all to the Mairo, and in as short a time as it takes to tell it, we were married. Placing ourselves opposite Monsieur le Mairo, at a table covered with green cloth, and accompanied by four witnesses and many relatives, we listened patiently to the captious clerk, while, with the usual legal drawl, he read over to us all the documents relating to the marriage. Then, Monsieur le Mairo, girding himself with the insignia of office, the tricolored scarf, reminded us in solemn tones, of the respective rights and duties of married persons, and put to each of us the all-important question. Lastly, the "yes" being pronounced by the gentleman very distinctly, and by the lady, if not very distinctly, at least sufficiently so to show that there was no mistake, Monsieur le Mairo declered, in "the name of the law," that we were married.

THE FIRST AMERICAN SEA FIGHT.

Within twenty years after the settlement of Plymouth, ship building and navigation began to occupy much of the attention of New England, and as every vessel of any size carried many light guns, the navigation of the period had most of the characteristics of an armed trade. In addition to the ships and barks that crossed the ocean, many decked boats, or small sloops were used on the coast, especially by those who dealt with the Indians for skins. The first engagement that probably ever occurred between inhabitants of the American colonie sand enemies afloat, was a conflict between John Gallop, who was engaged in a trade of this nature, in a sloop of 20 tons, and some Narragansett Indians, who had seized upon a small vessel belonging to a person of the name of Oldham, known to have been similarly occupied. As this is a certain sense, may be deemed the earliest sea-fight of the nation, we consider it worthy to be related.

Some time in May, 1636, Gallop in his little sloop, manned by two men and two boys, himself included, was standing along the Sound near Plum Island, when he was compelled to bear up by a stress of weather, for a refuge, to leward, among the islands that form a chain between Long Island and Connecticut. On nearing the land he discovered a vessel similar to his own in size and equipments, which was immediately recognized as the pinnace of Mr. Oldham, who had sailed with a crew of two white boys, and two Narragansett Indians. Gallop hailed on nearing the other craft, but got no answer, and on running still nearer, no less than fourteen Indians were discovered lying on her deck. A canoe, enbveying goods, and manned by Indians, had also just started for the shore. Gallop now began to suspect that Oldham had been overpowered by the savages; a suspicion that was confirmed by the Indians slipping their cable, and running off before the wind, or in the direction of Narragansett Bay. Satisfied that a robbery had been committed, Gellop made sail in a chase, and running along side of the pinnace in a spirited manner, he fired a volley of deck shot at the savages. The latter had swords, spears and some fire-arms, and they attempted a resistance, but Gallop soon drove them below to a man. Afraid to board in the face of such odds, Gallop now had recourse to a novel expedient to dislodge his enemies. As the pinnace was drifting with no one to manage her, she soon fell to leeward, while the sloop hauled by the wind. As soon as the two vessels were far enough asunder, Gellop put his helm up, and ran directly down on the weather quarter of the pinnace, striking her with so much violence as to come near foreing her over on her side. The shock so much alarmed the Indians, who were on an element and in a craft they did not understand, that six of them rushed frantically on deck, and leaped into the sea, where they were all drowned. The sloop again hauled off, when Gellop lashed an anchor to her bows in such a manner, that by running down on the pinnace a second time, he forced the flukes through the sides of the latter, which are represented as having been made of boards.

The two vessels were how fast to each other, and the crew of the sloop began to fire through the sides of the pinnace into her hold. Finding it impossible, however, to drive his enemies up, Gellop loosened his fasts, and hauled up to the windward a third time, when four or five more of the Indians jumped overboard, and shared the fate of those who had preceded them. One Indian now appeared on deck and offered to submit. Gallop ran alongside, and received the man into the sloop, when he was bound hand and feet, and put into the hold. Another soon followed this example, and he was also received on board the sloop and bound, but fearful that if two of his wily foes were permitted to commune together, they would liberate themselves, the second prisoner was thrown into the sea. But two Indians now remained in the pinnace. They had got into a small apartment below, and being armed, they showed a disposition to defend themselves, when Gallop removed all the goods that remained into his own sloop, stripped the pinnace of her sails, took her in tow, and hauled up for the islands again. But the wind increasing, the pinnace was cut adrift, and she disappeared in the direction of Narragansett Bay, where it is probable she was stranded in the course of a few hours.

On board the pinnace, Gallop found the body of Mr. Oldham. The head had been cleft, the hands and legs were much mangled, and the flesh was still warm. The corpse was thrown into the sea.

Thus terminated this extraordinary conflict, in which Gallop appears to have shown as much conduct as courage, and which in itself illustrates the vast superiority that professional skill gives on an element that requires practice to be rendered successfully available. [Cooper's Naval History.

LAMENTABLE ACCIDENT—A Mother and Daughter Drowned.—A melancholy disaster occurred about 5 o'clock on Saturday evening, on the Delaware river, opposite Marlborough street, to a party enjoying a sleigh ride. The sleigh belonged to Mr. James Calleuder, hotel keeper, in Fourth street, above Thompson, and he had been driving his friends about on the ice during the afternoon. At 5 o'clock, Mrs. Elizabeth Albright, widow of the late Col. Peter Albright, her daughter Emma, about twenty-three years of age, with a niece of Mr. Calleuder, and another little girl, got into the sleigh and it was driven off by Mr. Calleuder. A few minutes later the horse and sleigh disappeared in an air hole opposite Browning's ferry, in the Jersey channel, while the occupants of the vehicle were struggling for life in the water. Col. Page and the various members of the Skating Club were not far off, and immediately flying to the spot, were enabled, by a judicious use of their cords and reels, to rescue Mr. Calleuder and the two girls accompanying him, who were removed to the hotels in the vicinity, where they received every attention requisite. It was supposed that all in the sleigh had been saved, and the crowd began to disperse, when a bystander discovered a body floating beneath the ice, some distance above the air hole. After a short delay, a hole was cut in the ice, and the body of Mrs. Albright recovered. It was removed to Browning's hotel, where an effort at resuscitation was made without success. A DEER HUNT AND A BEAR FIGHT.—Meder Perrigo, residing in Franklin county, N. Y., writes a letter to his brother Wm. H. Perrigo, dated Jenuery 1st, 1856, in which he gives an account of an interesting interview he had lately with a gentleman by the name of Bruin, on one of the Mountains of Northern New York. As this letter contains information which may furnish some useful hints to the hunters of Wisconsin in pursuit of game "under difficulties," we have taken the liberty of publishing an extract from it, as follows:

As you wish to heer my hunting story, I will try and give it to you, but I don't think I can do it justice. I went into the woods, in the neighborhood of Racket Lake, to hunt deer, and having shot two, I started for the shanty usually occupied by hunters in that quarter, and soon came across a bear's track. I followed this track, but not far, before I saw the old chap. I drew up my rifle and fired, but it seems without effect, for he turned and made directly towards me. I attempted to reload, but had no time; we were soon in close quarters. I commenced beating him off with my gun, but through some mishap I lost hold of that, and the bear and I clinched. I threw him down, but I soon found that the underside was his advantage, for he tore my clothes and skin unmercifully. We struggled, rose up again. I thought of my knife, but he hugged me so close that I could not get at it. He attempted to bite my face, and taking a hint from my enemy, I caught his nose in my teeth, and you bet better believe I shut down on him tight, for he soon loosed his hold against me, so that I had an opportunity to reach my knife, which I improved without delay. Being thus armed I gave him several cuts and thrusts in rapid succession, and he beat a retreat. He did not go far, however, before he fell, having been mortally wounded.

The fight being over, I sat down to take breath, and I thought of home, and the danger I had escaped. I will say to you that fighting a bear is no child's play, and although not seriously injured in this, I don't care to have another—it is not pleasant. While I had the old fellow's nose in my mouth, I discovered he had a very bad breath, and nothing but my critical situation enabled me to withstand it. Deliver me from being obliged to kiss or fight a bear.

The Southside Democrat states that a day or two since a gentleman named S. A. Kewson of Wilmington, N. C., on a bridal tour to Petersburg, went down to the river to skate, his wife standing on the bank watching him. He broke through, but got out safely; but his wife was so overcome by the accident that she became a maniac.

WELCOME HOME!

BY L. VIRGINIA FRENCH.

Would I could see again thy soft brown tresses
By southern breezes blown,
And answer to thy gentle arm's caresses,
My hand within thine own!
Would I could list the music flowing ever
From that sweet lip of thine;
It is a rose chalice brimming over,
And kindness is its wine!

How shall I tell thee how our hearts have missed thee,
Dear wanderer o'er the sea?
Or murmur of the many prayers that blest thee
Fondly and fervently?
Did'st thou not feel them as the west-wind kissed thee,
Far n'er the ocean's foam?
Did'st thou not know when its light wing caressed thee
'Twas from the loved, at home!

Thou wast afar where legend haunted castles
O'erhung the bounding Rhine,
And close the peasant's lowly cottage nestles
Beneath the laughing vine.
Or, 'mid the "snow clad hills," where like a streamer
Bright Borealis floats upon the wind,
The birth-place of the good and gentle Bremer,
And noble-hearted Lind.

Far through the famed Alhambra thou hast wandered
Where Moorish shadows kneel;
And great Escurial, whose halls have thundered
To "Leon and Castile!"
The misty Jura, and the Alpine ranges
With rich, melodious swell,
Have sung to thee of all the mighty changes
That swept the land of Tell.

And thou hast looked upon those ruins solemn;
The palace, arch and dome,
With fallen architrave, and prostrate column,
Of old, Imperial Rome,
And like to life gleamed outward from their niches,
The Cenci's pallid face:
The sweet Madonna—the surpassing riches
Of Farnarina's grace.

Fair Venice shone above thy swift gondola,
That skimmed the bright lagoon,
As thro' an amber-tinted aureola
Shines out the summer moon,
And classic Athens, n'er her temples hoary,
Still keeping guarded trust,
Has whispered in thine ear her olden story
Of ages gone to dust.

Thou'st gazed on Fontalnebleau—the ancient Louvre;
And where on every breeze
The gay tri-color floats in beauty over
The stately Tuilleries
And thou hast passed the haughty, frowning portals
Of many a gallery,
Where stalked in days gone by, that dread of mortals,
The "Man of Destiny."

Then "Caledonia wild" spread out before thee
The treasures of her urn,
Sweet Abbotsford, and Ayr, with Stirling hoary
And glorious Bannockburn:
And "merrie England" led thee from the splendors
Of castellated domes,
O'er teeming with ten thousand storied wonders;
Unto her "hearts and homes."

Still, as the changing panorama shifted,
Thy place was ever shown
Within the circle of the great and gifted—
A station all thine own,
For there thou standest always, as serenely
In loveliness enshrined;
As if to show how great is she, and queenly,
Whose monarchy is Mind!

"Doctor," said a hard-looking customer the other day to a physician, "Doctor, I'm troubled with an oppression, an uneasiness about the breast. What do you suppose the matter is?"

"All very easily accounted for," said the physician; "you have water on the chest."

"Water! Come, that will do well enough for a joke; but how could I get water on my chest, when I hav'nt touched a drop in fifteen years.

NO ACCOUNTING FOR TASTES.—On the occasion of two opposition boats startlug from Pittsburg, one employed a German band to attract passengers; the other being minus the music, and not desiring to be outdone, started the steam whistle, which completely drowned the music of the band. The mayor, being called upon, declined to interfere, saying that "one was a specimen of German music, and the other genuine American."

15,000 Acres of Land for Sale.

The lands are situated in Morehouse parish, Louisiana, and is what is known as the "Bastrop Grant." They are of the richest quality of alluvial soil, unsurpassed in fertility by any lands in the South, and fully capable of producing from one and a half to two bales, or fifty to sixty bushels of corn to the acre. They lie near the Ouachita and Boeuf rivers—good navigable streams—and likewise in convenient distance of the route of the Vickeburg, Shreveport and Texas Railroad, now in course of construction and hastening to a rapid completion. A portion of those lands are highly improved and in a flourishing state of cultivation; the country in which they lie is very healthy, the water is excellent and abundant, and altogether they will be found to possess greater advantages and present inducements to purchasers than any lands now offered for sale in the Southern country. They will be sold in quantities to suit purchasers, and on the most favorable terms. Titles perfect.

For further particulars inquire of the undersigned either personally at his residence in Prairie Jefferson Morehouse parish, or by letter addressed to Point Jefferson, Morehouse parish, Louisiana.

Now Principle! No Poison!

Rhodes' Fever and Ague Cure,

OR ANTIDOTE TO MALARIA.

FOR THE PREVENTION AND CURE OF

Fever and Ague, or Chill and Fever; Dumb Ague, and other Intermittent and Remittent Fevers; also of Bilious Fevers, accompanied by Typhoid Symptoms; Typhoid Fever, Yellow Fever, Ship and Jail Fever, General Debility, Night Sweats, and all other forms of disease

WHICH HAVE A COMMON ORIGIN IN

MALARIA OR MIASMA.

This subtle atmospheric poison, which at certain seasons is unavoidably inhaled at every breath, is the same in character wherever it exists—north, south, east or west—and will everywhere yield to this newly discovered ANTIDOTE, which neutralizes the poison, completely purifies the system, and thus entirely removes all the causes of disease.

The proprietor distinctly claims these extraordinary results from its use:

It will protect any resident or traveler, even in the most sickly or swampy localities, from any ague or bilious disease whatever, or any injury from constantly inhaling Malaria or Miasma.

It will instantly check the ague in persons who have suffered for any length of time, from ONE DAY TO TWENTY YEARS, so that they need never have ANOTHER CHILL, by continuing its use according to directions.

It will immediately relieve all the distressing results of bilious or ague diseases, such as general debility, night sweats, etc. The patient at once begins to recover appetite and strength, and continues until a permanent and radical cure is effected. And as a proof that it is

WORTHY OF PUBLIC CONFIDENCE,

Because of its

SINGULAR AND ENTIRE HARMLESSNESS.

The following certificate from one of the most celebrated chemists in the United States is attached to every bottle:

NEW YORK, June 11, 1855.

"I have made a chemical examination of Rhodes Fever and Ague Cure, as Antidote to Malaria, and have tested it for Arsenic, Mercury, Quinine and Strychnine, but have not found a particle of either in it, nor have I found any substance in its composition that would prove injurious to the constitution.

JAMES R CHILTON, M. D., Chemist."

This allows of its

FREE USE AS A PREVENTIVE

by which all persons may thus be sure of entire freedom from the above named diseases, no matter how sickly the season or swampy the locality.

PROOFS OF EFFICACY are frequently published, and the confidence of the public is asked only in proportion to it; actual merits wherever introduced and used. These only are relied upon to prove its worth.

One or two bottles will answer for ordinary cases; some may require more. Directions printed in German, French and Spanish, accompany each bottle. Price One Dollar.

Oil painting	20 00
Ornamental needlework	5 00
Incidental expenses	1 00

Payment to be made at the close of each term. Board, including lodging, washing, lights and fuel, can be procured in the village and immediate neighborhood at ten dollers per month. Students will be received at any time during the session, and will be charged only from the time of their entrance to the end of the term. We would however, respectfully urge all parents or guardians who design placing their daughters or wards in the institution, to do so at their earliest convenience, as it will tend much to the individual interest of the pupils, and the general prosperity of the school, facilitating, as it will, a proper arrangement of the various classes in their respective branches of study.

School books, stationary, &c., may be had at any of the various stores in the village at the usual rates.

Reports will be sent to parents and guardians quarterly, in which will be stated the health, improvement, social and moral deportment of their daughters or wards, with such other information as may be deemed important.

As the design of the Faculty is to render the instruction thorough, and lay the foundation of a substantial education, no young lady will be permitted to rank higher than her attainments will justly entitle her, nor to pass into another department in the course of instruction without having made sufficient proficiency in the preceding studies.

The government of the school is to be understood as that of authority—though parental and mild, yet decided and firm. The institution, in a religious point of view will be conducted without reference to sectarian influence.

Pupils will be required to attend church at least once on the Sabbath, and recite a Bible lesson on each Monday morning.

The scholastic year, embracing ten months, will be divided into two equal terms of five months, one immediately succeeding the other.

The first session commencing on the first Wednesday in October, and closing the last week in February; the second session commencing on the first Wednesday in March, and closing the last week in July. At which time the annual examination will be held, and the usual rewards and honors conferred. The vacation will embrace the months of August and September.

All applications for admission of pupils, &c., to be made to the president of the College.

COLEMAN'S

PREMIUM UNDULATORY CORN AND FLOURING

MILLS,

French Burr Stone, and cast Burr in one solid block.

Seven different sizes of these mills are manufactured adapted to all the various motive powers used or known in milling. The burrs of the smallest size are fourteen inches in diameter, and the largest size are three feet; which last size will grind a greater quantity in any given time than any other mill known. These mills range, in prices from one to five hundred dollars apiece, and will grind from four to seventy-five bushels to the hour, according to the diameter of burr, power applied and velocity given.

The mill that took the premium at the Crystal Palace, New York, was the smallest size (14 inches) and ground a bushel of corn into fine meal in four and a half minutes. Those desiring such mills can be supplied by addressing the patentee and proprietor,

CENTENARY COLLEGE OF LOUISIANA.

Centenary College of Louisiana is located in Jackson, La., 12 miles east of Bayou Sara. Its location is beautiful, retired and healthy. It has commodious buildings, a large library, a good chemical and philosophical apparatus, a well selected mineralogical and geological cabinet, and a full Board of Instruction.

As this section of the Southwest is but poorly provided with academics and preparatory schools, there is connected with the College a Preparatory Department, in which all necessary instruction may be received for entering College proper.

The College is now in a highly prosperous condition, and under the management of the present Board of Trustees and Faculty it promises permanency and extensive usefulness.

FACULTY:

Rev. John C. Miller, M. A., President, and Prof. of Mental and Moral Science.

Rev. Wm. H. Scales, M. A., Professor of Mathematics, Natural Philosophy and Astronomy.

A. R. Holcombe, A. M., Professor of the Greek Language.

G. H. Wiley, A. M., Professor of the Latin Language.

Thomas S. Jones, M. D., Professor of Natural Science.

T. P. Calloury, Professor of Modern Languages.

A. E. Blackmar, M. A., Professor of Music.

Rev. A. G. Miller, Principal of the Preparatory Department.

EXPENSES:

Tuition, per session of ten months	$50
Room rent	5
Contingencies	3
Use of Library	3
Total College charges	$61
Tuition per session in Preparatory Department	$40
Contingencies	3
Total	$43

Other charges the same as in College. In addition to the above regular charges a matriculation fee of $5 is paid by each student on first becoming a member of any regular College Class. College charges must be paid semi-annually, in advance. Tuition is refunded only in case of sickness.

Board and washing can be had at the Steward's Hall, or in private families, for about $11 per month, students furnishing their own rooms, wood, lights, &c.

Every student whose parent or guardian does not reside in the town of Jackson, or in immediate vicinity, shall have an accidental guardian, nominated by himself, with the consent of his parent, or legal guardian, whose duty it shall be to take charge of the necessary expenditures of such student, and with whom shall be deposited such a sum of money as his parent or guardian may think proper. In the article of pocket money the strictest economy is recommended and requested.

If the above rule is not strictly complied with by the parent or guardian, the teachers cannot be blamed for injudicious expenses.

The regular academic year commences on the first Monday in October, and ends on the last Wednesday in July, which is commencement day.

MISSISSIPPI CORRESPONDENCE.

Mr. Editor:—I have no doubt but that n few items—even from this quarter (though not the seat of our publishing house) would quite acceptable to you and some of your readers.

The Legislature is now in session and so are all the Courts. The theatre has been open—the Fakir of Siva has gone—but Padi will be here on Tuesday. The new city hall building, after a journey of several years—has advanced so far towards completion as to admit of its Council room being used both as a ball room and place for setting out a sepper, for benevolent purposes, by the ladies of the Presbyterian church—but on different occasions of course. The churches are generally well attended on Sunday at 11 o'clock—albeit two of them are without regular Pastors—and there you have already a heading of the principal items of news in this metropolis. But you want something in advance. Well.

The Legislature though now sitting for nearly four weeks has passed no grent measures as yet. Legislators, however, say that they have very important measures on the way—upon which they will soon act. The Legislature of '54 appointed three eminent jurists to revise the entire code of laws—with a view to precise worthy view, no doubt, of ascertaining, if possible, what the law of the state is on any given subject. These Commissioners have made their report and the Legislature is now at work on their work. In the chapter on lawful fences. The Commissioners thought that a mud, rail, briar, plank or picket fence five feet high ought to constitute a lawful fence,—but on motion of a farmer, member this was amended so as to read six feet, on the reasonable grounds, as he said, that five feet would be nothing to his mules.

The Legislature has also under consideration the subject of a Universal Common School Bill. When I say universal I mean for this state only—as we have not got to Kansas yet. I doubt exceedingly—however much I may wish it to the contrary, if this Legislature can be got to agree upon any general beneficial measure of this kind, if (as it necessarily must be) the system has to be supported by taxation.

The Temperance cause has also had a passing notice. One reverend member (he is an actual minister of a Christian church,) has introduced a bill to repeal the existing temperance law so far as his county is concerned. In company with some delegates to the Grand Division S. T., a week or two ago I was quite surprised to hear from gentlemen of undoubted intelligence and great ardor in the cause an expression of their doubts as to the present law doing any good—on the plea that in some sections tippling doctors and avaricious druggists evade the law with impunity. (The present law gives the power to a majority of voters in a county, corporation, &c. to say whether there shall, or, shall not be, within their bounds, any house for the retail of spirituous liquors—not affecting the right of drug stores, under prescriptions, to sell for medical purposes). But, if this be so in some quarters it is far different in many more. It has done great good. I would not be at all surprised if the present Legislature should again partially open up the flood gates of misery and death.

The Courts are still after John Doe and Richard Roe—though these venerable personages were once buried by a former Legislature—yet the lawyers wont let them rest. They bring them out of their graves in spite of the Legislature. I have often seen heralded forth in the papers, the fact that such a court (having competent and final jurisdiction) had for ever settled a certain very important point of law and that now, in that direction, we would have nothing but plain sailing, in the future;—but lo and behold a year or two only elapse when through the same medium of communication we are apprised that the same profound oracle (by the mere changes of one of its judges) has cleared up another corner of the same point and whole matter is again topsy turvy. If Thackeray is a snob—there is much truth nevertheless—so far as many of the legal ways of this world are concerned—in the celebrated case of Jarndyce ngaist Jarndyce—one particularly that you are disappointed at last.

I was not at the ball—but nearly everybody was there, of course. It was the "Batobolors Ball"—complimentary to one of the other sex on her departure. In the absence of direct news from this quarter by my failure to attend, (a query on) dancing. What is the fashion in your N. O. Churches as to members of the church going to private promiscuous parties where it is well known before hand that there is to be dancing? Mind you I don't ask as to the rule of the Church—only the fashion. We have rules here but rules can neither make nor unmake the fashion. That is a different power altogether—concerning which it is frequently said, that you may as well be out of the world as out of the fashion. I don't ask the question either because of doubts in my own mind on the subject. My notions of dancing were, long before my connection with Christianity—settled pretty much upon the reported Chinese argument. It is said that, when a number of Chinese mandarins and dignitaries were once on a visit on board on of Her B. Majestoy's ships, the officers in giving examples of English customs and amusements exhibited themselves in all the variations and gyration of the mazy dance and that on the conclusion of the performance the opinion of their visitors was solicited. The answer is said to have been, that it might be very good amusement for the English, but that they (the Chinese) did not see but that it could be done with far less labor by the servants. To return. Even some the Clergy go to these promiscuous private assemblies with the full knowledge before hand that there will be dancing there,—and yet all the Churches have rules against dancing I believe. The rule, I suppose, is either obviated or complied with by the prudent forethought of the kind and excellent host of the occasion in providing two rooms (instead of one) for the entertainment. One room is for the sober (old) and serious members of the party and the attic is for the dancers. In this way, scandal to the cloth and the Church is avoided and the solution of the whole mystery is apparent: the wall, between the rooms, being of wood and mortar, generally six inches thick, the serious portion of the party exactly six inches nearer to heaven than the dancers. And, should the house be built of brick and mortar then these Christians are getting along quite rapidly in their journey—for they are then at least fifteen inches ahead of all their associates—no small distance by the by in this cold weather.

I had intended to say something about the supper but I find that I must cease scribbling. In conclusion, Mr. Editor let me say to you that though I state veritable facts I do not, by name, measure myself, in the least, by your Nashville correspondent—not reckoning myself as even half a Crotchet but simply

Yours, A Quaver.

Jackson, Miss., 1st, Feb. 1856.

American Colonization Society.—The thirty-ninth anniversary of the American Colonization Society was held on Tuesday evening the 15th Jan., in Trinity Episcopal Church, Washington City, J. H. Latrobe, Esq., the president, in the chair. The Rev. Mr. Cumming, pastor of the congregation, offered the opening prayer. Then followed the annual report, read by the Rev. Mr. M'Lain, Corresponding Secretary. The speakers announced were the Hon. Geo. P. Marsh, late minister to Constantinople, and the Rev. Dr. Lee, of Virginia. The latter gentleman, however, owing to the storm, did not reach in time for the meeting, and Dr. DeWitt, supplied his place. The speakers were able and effective, and listened to with deep interest by a large and most intelligent audience, members of Congress, judges of the courts, United States executive officers, and President Pierce also accepted an invitation to be present.

From the annual report we learn that the receipts of the past year were $55,276, and for the first time the treasury was out of debt, $32,000 having been appropriated to this object. In the collections of the year New York takes the lead, $7,669; Mississippi, $6,643; Connecticut, $4,582; Virginia, $4,182; Massachusetts, $3,723; Maryland, $3,475; Kentucky, $3,064; New Jersey, $2,622; Ohio, $2,128; Pennsylvania, $2,000; Choctaw Nation, $267.

Of the liberal amount from Mississippi, $5,000 was a donation of David Hunt, a well-known friend of the cause there, who also annually gives to the Colonization Society $500.

Three expeditions have sailed to Liberia the past year, with two hundred and seven emigrants, a smaller number than usual. Many wished to sail, but it was thought better to postpone their shipment until more ample and better accommodations were furnished for their reception in Afrion. Of the number who sailed, one hundred and twenty were emancipated, fifty-eight by will, and sixty-two by living masters.

Although the general receipts of the year have fallen off, still the voluntary offerings have been larger than the previous one. New Jersey has liberalized or increased her state benefaction. Missouri has appropriated for colonization purposes $3,000, for ten years, and a contribution is anticipated this winter from the legislature of Georgia, and perhaps Alabama, now in session.

Some important changes were made in the Constitution of the American Colonization Society. There are now four secretaries—a Corresponding, Financial, Recording, and Travelling, and the following gentlemen were elected to these offices: Rev. R. R. Gurley, Corresponding Secretary; Rev. W. M'Lain, Financial Secretary; Dr. Lugenbeel, Recording Secretary; Rev. Mr. Orcutt, Travelling Secretary.

One the most important communications laid before the Board was an appropriation of the last United States Congress of $1,000 a year for the support of a United States Consul in Liberia. This is, in fact, a recognition of the Liberia government.

The report furnished another interesting fact, that the state of Maine was about to build a colonization ship for the exclusive control of the society, some $30,000 having been subscribed to the object.—Ch. Ad and Journal.

Admitted on trial: Joseph A. W. Johnson, Valerius C. Cannon, Isaac A. Towers, Grandison Royster, Thomas R. Barcett, Saml. S. Cobb, Willis P. Ocain, Thomas A. Carruth, John F. Andrews, Theophilus J. Johnson, Charles P. Murdock, Robert F. Lenoir, James W. Points, and James M. Mills. Re-admitted: Wm. J. Duval, Thomas C. Coleman, Milton C. Smith and Aaron W. Harris. From the Superannuated list. G. W. Fagg and Owen B. Stanley. By transfers, Wm. L. Murphy, John W. McCrary and W. Davies.

The Conference fund for superannuated and deficient preachers and widows and orphans was not so large as it ought to have been. About 31 per cent only of this claim was paid—a meagre allowance truly for those who are so greatly dependent upon it for their subsistence.

The Missionary collection for the year had been about $3,500—brought up, however, by the anniversary meeting to $4087. The drafts for the ensuing year call for some $2000 more than this Conference furnishes to the Society; and it seemed a prevailing opinion with the preachers, that if they had begun the work of making collections earlier, and proceeded more systematically, they could have more nearly reached the sum needed for home use.

Two brethren died last year, Franklin Stewart, and Wm. Choice. Suitable and merited tributes were paid to their memory.

A fine religious feeling pervaded the congregations at the church. A number of mourners were at the altar for prayer, and all the preachers who occupied the pulpit acquitted themselves well, and preached with the unction and power of the Spirit.

The Conference Tract Society held its anniversary meeting at the church on Saturday afternoon. G. W. Fagg, Agent for that work, delivered an affective address, and $130 20 were raised for the Tract Cause.

HOW TO PUT OFF THE OLD MAN.

A FACT.

Pass your hand over Deacon M.'s head, and about an inch and a half above, and a little forward of the ear, you find a protuberance which phrenologists call the bump of acquisitiveness.

By nature the Deacon loved mammon; by grace he loved God. Between them there was continual war. Both fought, one like Michael, the other like the Devil. As there was long war between the house of David and the house of Saul, so there was long war in the earthly house of the Deacon.

As with Gad, so with the Deacon; a troop overcame him, but he overcame at the last, as appears by the following circumstances:

In the same church with Deacon M. was a poor brother. This poor man had the misfortune to lose his cow. She died. To get him another, the good Deacon headed a subscription with five dollars, and paid it. This act disquieted mammon. Mammon, with true Iscariot zeal, began to rant and rave; "Why is this waste? charity begins at home; the more you give, the more you may; let people learn to take care of themselves," &c.

The Deacon was a Baptist; but he found that the baptismal water did neither drown, wash away, or wash clean, the old man. The tempter hacked mammon, and putting a glass to the Deacon's eye, showed him not the kingdoms and glories of this world, but the poor-house, wretchedness, poverty and rags, and said, "All these things will your master give you in your old age as a reward of your charity."

To still these clamors, Deacon M. went to the destitute man and told him he must give back the five dollars. The poor man returned it. This last act roused the NEW MAN, and now nature and grace stood face to face.

To give, or not to give, that was the question.

There stood the Deacon, poising, balancing, and halting between two opinions. The Deacon spoke—"My brother, some men are troubled with their old woman; I am troubled with my old man. I must put off my old man, as the Jews put off their new man—crucify him, crucify him." Then unstrapping his pocket-book, he took out a ten dollar bill and gave the poor man. "There," said the Deacon, "my old man, say another word and I'll give him twenty dollars."

A Heartrending Reproof.—A short time since, a lady who had been remarkable for her thoughtlessness, requested a professedly pious lady to accompany her that day to visit another lady, who was also professedly pious.

The afternoon passed away, and the subject of religion was not mentioned—probably for fear of offending the guy friend who proposed the visit. As the two neighbors walked towards home, the first mentioned remarked that she had lost the afternoon; for nothing would have induced her to leave home but the expectation of hearing something about religion: "I come to the conclusion that there is nothing in religion, or that my neighbors do not possess it; for if they did, they would speak to me about my soul." She said she had been greatly alarmed about herself for several days, but had concluded that afternoon, that if religion was not worth talking about, it was not worth thinking about.

"Never," said the pious neighbor, "shall I forget that look of despair and reproach. I felt that I had murdered a soul."

BIBLICAL INSTITUTE.

Catalogue of the Methodist General Biblical Institute, Concord, N. H.

Faculty—Prof. S. M. Vail, A. M. Merrill professor of Biblical and oriental literature; Rev. J. W. Merrill, D. D., professor of natural and historical theology, and mental and moral philosophy; and Rev. D. Patten, D. D., professor of reveneld and pastoral theology and sacred rhetoric.

Number of students; seniors, 19, middle class, 17, juniors, 28, total, 64.

The following items of general interest, we quote from the catalogue.

The course of study embraces three years, and the full course cannot well be completed in a shorter time. It is, therefore, recommended that young men come here with the expectation of staying during the three years. The classes are arranged as completely as possible, into junior, middle, and senior, according to the course of study.

It is the design of the trustees and patronizing conferences, to reduce the expenses of the students to the lowest possible grade, so that those candidates for our ministry, whose means are limited, may not fail to obtain an appropriate education for their future calling. Hence no charge is made for tuition. The new and commodious boarding-house, recently erected, is occupied by the students free of rent, and their board and washing is secured at cost. The past year it has averaged about $1 50 per week. The institution makes no charge upon the students, except one shilling per week, for the contingent expenses, upon those who occupy rooms in the building, and one fifty cents per term upon those who room out. A number of the students are now sustaining themselves by supplying vacant congregations on the Sabbath; others by teaching during the winter vacations; and a few by manual labor.

Criticising Sermons.—No one can tell the effect produced upon others by a message, which, indeed, may not have suited our own case, but have fully met the wants of others equally ready. Satan is always busy at work to destroy the seed sown, and if the unconverted find that those who profess themselves to be Christians are dissatisfied with the manner or matter of the preacher, it will take but little to obliterate any good impressions made.

Further Foreign News by the Arabia.

Effect of Peace News in London and Paris.

(From the London Times, Jan. 18.)

The rise to-day in Consols, notwithstanding the large expenditure in the present as compared with former years, was not nearly so great as in previous instances of the announcement of peace. On those occasions, however, there was a vast difference in the price to which prices had first descended. At the peace with France in 1801 there was an improvement from 59¾ to 66, and shortly afterwards to 70. After the treaty of Amiens, in 1802, the movement was from 70¼ to 72. On the restoration of the Bourbons, in 1814, it was from 61¼ to 70¾; and after the battle of Waterloo it was from 53¼ to 59¾.

There was great excitement at the whole of the coffee-houses to-day, when the intelligence respecting peace was first announced, particularly at the Baltic, among the merchants and brokers connected with the Russian trade. Among the Greek firms the intelligence was evidently received with disfavor. At Lloyd's the North and South American, the Jerusalem, and the Jamaica coffee-houses, the sensation created was most remarkable, and, notwithstanding doubts were attempted to be thrown upon the authenticity of the information, the majority viewed it with confidence, and conducted their transactions in accordance with it.

(From the Liverpool Post, Jan. 18.)

Peace is now certain, for Russia has made large concessions; and it would be a needless peddling to quarrel with her about minor points. She has not been entirely wanting in a certain magnanimity during the war, and she does well, when proposing peace, not to mar the concession by small objections. We may easily surmise the influence under which she is acting. Another campaign would certainly interfere with the reputation now ascribed to her arms. Her soldiers have fought well; they are brave fellows; all is not yet lost. They can boast of having taken Kars, of retaining one side of Sebastopol, and of having the Allies from the heights above the Tchernaya. The Crimea is still theirs; they are not entirely beaten; and there is a glory in having resisted so long the finest troops in the world—those of France and England. Peace preserves them this glory; another campaign would partially deprive them of it. The north side of Sebastopol would have to be abandoned, and the heights of Mackenzie deserted. Deprived of ships, the army in Asia, for want of succor, would have to surrender or retire into the mountain fastnesses of Georgia, surrender Kars, and give up even Tiflis to an allied army. The new gunboat system might also endanger the safety of Cronstadt; and Sweden and Austria in alliance, Poland at St. Petersburgh would not be secure. In accepting the propositions, therefore, the Czar has adopted a wise policy, and the humiliation has resulted in the mad obstinacy of his father, who, defied his foes, Sebastopol and the prestige of his empire. For the news yesterday we prepared our readers on Monday last; and the occasion will, perhaps, excuse us in saying that on most important matters we generally anticipate even the London press.

(From the same paper, January 19.)

Russia rejects the second clause of the first proposal—viz: the rectification of her frontier with Turkey.

She also rejects the fifth proposal, by which a right of producing special conditions is reserved to the belligerent powers, and in virtue of which they would demand the engagement not to rebuild Bomarsund.

Russia accepts the rest of the ultimatum, including the neutralization of the Black Sea, with some modifications.

In exchange for the strong places and territories occupied by the Allies, Russia proposes to restore to the Porte, Kars and the territories she has won from Turkey in Asia in the last campaign.

We have reason to believe that Austria keeps her faith with us, and will not receive this counter proposition.

Austria, however, gives the Cabinet of St. Petersburg the benefit of the time she had already allowed, and therefore Russia has till the 18th inst. to notify to Count Esterhazy her acceptance or rejection, without conditions, of the Austrian ultimatum.

If Russia refuse, or if at that date she has not accepted the Austrian ultimatum, par el simple, Count Esterhazy has instructions to withdraw from St. Petersburg.

The Nord, Russian organ, publishes the following telegraphic dispatches:

Berlin, Sunday.—The reply to the proposals of which Count Valentine Esterhazy was the bearer, addressed from St. Petersburg to Vienna, accepts, in principle, those proposals.

The Imperial Cabinet of Russia does not introduce therein any modifications of significance. It refuses the territorial cession demanded in Bessarabia; it consents to the exchange of the territories respectively occupied by the belligerents.

M. de Seebach left Berlin yesterday evening en route for Paris.

Sunday Evening.—Count Buol has rejected the counter proposals of the Imperial Cabinet of Russia without discussion.

At the same time that he made Prince Gortschakoff aware of a probable speedy rupture of diplomatic relations between the Courts of Russia and Austria, Count Buol notified to the Cabinets of London and Paris that Austria would not take the field (n'entrerait pas en ligne) this year.

Position of Austria.

Our (London Times,) Vienna correspondent writes as follows: Austria has seriously taken charge of the whole weight of the last negotiations which are going on at this moment. As she does not decline the responsibility of her acts, and the vigorous duties which an unfortunate issue may impose on her, she has wished that the whole of the action should bear entirely on her.

The Western Powers, confident of her sincerity and good faith, have entirely given up to her the diplomatic ground, and you may be certain that nothing will pass except by way of Vienna. It is between our Emperor and the Czar that the question is debated at this moment, and it is for this that it will become our own quarrel, if Russia repeats the refusal which terminated the conference of 1855.

Vienna, Jan. 14.—On Friday, the 11th December, a "Feldjager," who had quitted St. Petersburg on Saturday, the 5th, reached this city with dispatches for Prince Gortschakoff, and before noon on the same day the latter had called on the Austrian Minister for Foreign Affairs, and communicated to him their contents, which were neither more nor less than the reply of the Russian Government to the propositions made by Count Valentine Esterhazy in the name of this Government. The conditions relating to the Danube, to the neutralization of the Black Sea, and to the Christian population of the Porte, were accepted, although the St. Petersburg Cabinet proposed that they should be worded in a somewhat different way. The alterations proposed were, however, unimportant, and the Allies would hardly have objected to them, had not the Russian Cabinet refused to agree to one of the stipulations contained in the first point, which, as your readers will probably recollect, relates to the Danubian Principalities. The stipulation referred to is the following:

"As an equivalent for the fortified places and territory now occupied by the Allied armies, Russia agrees to a 'rectification' of her frontiers towards Turkey in Europe."

In its reply the St. Petersburg Cabinet took no notice whatever of the demand made by the Powers that a part of Bessarabia should be ceded to Turkey; but it expressed its readiness to restore to Turkey the territory which it recently had lost in Asia Minor, if the Western Powers would agree to withdraw from the Crimea. In a word, Russia considers the Pashalic of Kars a fair equivalent for Kinburn, Eupatoria, Sebastopol, Kamiesh, Balaklava, Kertsch and Yenikale!

As Prince Gortschakoff expressed a wish to be made acquainted with the definitive resolution of the Allied Powers without any loss of time, Count Buol promised to give him the required information within 24 hours. As soon as the Russian diplomatist left the Foreign Office, Count Buol hurried to his imperial master, and, after having communicated to him what had occurred, and received his instructions, he held prolonged consultations with Sir Hamilton Seymour and M. de Bourqueney. Yesterday morning the three allied governments had already resolved on the course to be pursued, and when Prince Gortschakoff, at 1 o'clock, called at the Foreign Office, he learned from Count Buol that Austria, France and England rejected the counter propositions which had been made by Russia. Positive orders were yesterday sent to Count Esterhazy to quit St. Petersburg on the 18th, if the original propositions were not previously accepted, purement et simplement, by the Russian Government. Something has been said of a cession of the Danubian Islands; but such a proposal could not be taken into consideration, as the three great powers have resolved to deprive Russia of the power to invade the Danubian principalities at pleasure. During the last thirty-six hours the Austro-Russian party has done all in its power to shake the resolution of the Emperor, but His Majesty is as firm as a rock. A hundred conflicting reports are in circulation relative to the Russian counter propositions, and it may, therefore, be as well to observe that the information above given is perfectly authentic.

France.

A letter from Paris says: "I attach importance to the reports which reach me that the Senate is expected to propose the regency of the Empress, both in case of the Emperor's decease and in the probable event of his leaving France to take the command of an army. I hear, in a quarter likely to have probable information, that a dowry of a million is to be settled on the Empress, beside the Elysee for her residence."

Another correspondent says: "I am told that the English government has been asked by France whether they can supply vessels for the conveyance of a French force amounting to 80,000 men, 6,000 horses, and 100 guns. It is not said for what point, but there can hardly be a doubt that it is for the Baltic."

It appears that the excess of money, realized from the resources of government, over the expenditure actually made—that is to say the money in hand—is at this moment, 120,000,000 fr. This, joined to 415,000,000 fr., which have yet to be received from the two last loans, forms a disposable total of 535,000,000 fr. (£21,400,000) to meet the necessities of the war in 1856.

The Moniteur publishes a return of the taxes and indirect revenue for the last year. The amount received was 950,879,000 fr., being an increase of 103,619,000 fr., as compared with 1854, and of 101,675,000 fr. with 1853. The only falling off is the duty on beet-root sugar, which has decreased 2,900,000 fr.

PROGRESS OF THE INDIAN WAR.

By the Prometheus we have received dates from San Francisco to the 21st ult. From the news summary of the Alta California we extract the following items:

The most interesting item of news since the sailing of the last steamer, has been the assumption of the State government by the newly elected officers of the Know-Nothing or American party. All the State officers are now filled by members of the new party, who also have a majority in both Houses of the Legislature, thereby giving them complete control of the State administration. This is the first instance since the organization of political parties here, that the Democrats have not possessed the entire control of the State patronage. The Legislature assembled on the 7th inst., and on the 8th both houses were permanently organized by electing to the various offices the caucus nominations of the American party. Hon. D. R. Ashley of Monterey, was chosen President pro tem. of the Senate, and Hon. J. F. Farley of Amador, Speaker of the House. Upon the organization of the two bodies, they proceeded to the inauguration of Gov. Johnson, whose inaugural address bespeaks well for the incoming administration.

But little business has been accomplished yet by the Legislature, most of the time having been spent as with previous Legislatures over the Senatorial question. Considerable dissatisfaction has been occasioned in political circles by the withdrawal of prominent Senatorial candidates. During the first week of the session ex-Gov. Foote withdrew, and the succeeding day entered the field again. Hon. H. A. Crabb, whose chances are thought to be second to none, withdrew on the 14th, and assures his friends that his withdrawal is made in good faith, and for the purpose of harmonizing the American party, as there appeared to be a few members of the Senate who would vote with the Democrats against a joint convention as long as he was a candidate. It is thought that a new man will now be taken up. Hon. W. I. Ferguson, of Sacramento, is spoken of. Foote, Marshal and Stowe are still considered aspirants for the position. The Democrats in the Senate will do their utmost to prevent any election this winter, and as they only lack two votes of having a majority in that body, they may succeed—especially as a somewhat fierce opposition has broken out among rival partisans in the American ranks.

The trial of Charles Cora for the murder of Gen. Richardson, U. S. Marshal for the Northern District of California, was commenced on the 8th inst., five days having been spent in empannelling the jury, and a venire of two hundred and fifty summons exhausted before it was obtained. The trial was one of great interest, and the ablest counsel of the State were engaged upon both sides. Messrs. Byrne, Campbell, Inge and Williams, for the prosecution, and Messrs. Baker, McDougal, James and Tilford, for the defence. The case was submitted to the jury on the 15th, at 7 o'clock, P. M. On the 16th, at 12 M., they sent a communication to the Court saying that they could not agree and asking to be discharged, which the Court refused to do, and they were kept in until the 17th, at 12, M., when they were finally discharged. The jury are said to have stood six for murder, and six for manslaughter. A new trial will probably soon take place.

From Lower California.

By the arrival, says the Alta California, of the brig Geo. Emory, Captain Trask, from La Paz and Cape St. Lucas, where she left on the 10th of December—we are placed in possession of important and interesting news from Lower California. Capt. Trask informs our marine reporter that the bark Archibald Gracie, and whaling bark, R. Adams, Captain Anderson, were at La Paz in possession of the Mexican authorities. The R. Adams had on board near 200 bbls of oil. She was chartered by Col. Zerman, for $1,000 per month, to take a portion of his troops to Acapulco. Capt. Anderson proceeded to La Paz, where his vessel was seized and the troops taken on shore and put in prison, as filibusters. On the arrival of the Archibald Gracie, she was fired into from the town, and one man was killed and three wounded. Col. Zerman, Capt. Denison, Mr. J. J. Arrington, and about 150 of their men were taken and closely confined in prison, in a very destitute condition. They were allowed only one meal in every forty-eight hours. Provisions were scarce, and they were subsisting on a small supply taken from the bark R. Adams. A new Governor had arrived at La Paz and expressed himself in strong terms against all Americans for their interferences in the affairs of Mexico.

American Girls in Captivity.—The Los Angeles Star says:—It will be remembered by many of our citizens and the emigrants by the Southern route in 1851, that Mr. Oatman, wife and five or six children, were found murdered on the Gila River, and supposed to have been done by the Yuma Indians. The bodies of all the family were found with the exception of the two oldest girls, and which, according to a communication in the Southern Californian of last week, are supposed to have been carried into captivity, and are still living, not with the Yumas as at first believed, but with the Mohaves. One of Capt. Washburn's surveying party, just in from the plains, says the girls alluded to were still living among the Mohave Indians as recently as last summer, as stated by one of Walker's men, by the name of Frank, and that both of them are married to chiefs of that tribe. Mr. Oatman, the brother, is desirous of raising a party to go out and effect the freedom of his sisters from Indian bondage. We are pleased to learn that some generous spirits have already volunteered to accompany him, in accomplishing so praiseworthy an object.

From Nicaragua.

British war steamer Hermis, and a British sloop of war were in the harbor of San Juan.

Diamonds in Nicaragua.—A citizen of Grenada, represented to us as extremely poor, who recently made a trip to the mines of Julgalpa, returned during the week with a small pile in the shape of a diamond valued at two thousand dollars. He broke it out of the rough stone, accidentally, with his machette.

Advance in the Army.—During the past week the following promotions have been made by the Commander-in-Chief: Thomas F. Fisher appointed Quartermaster General, with the rank of Colonel. Francis Mahon appointed Assistant Commissary-General, with rank of Captain. D. Lathrop promoted to a First Lieutenancy. H. C. Huston to a First Lieutenancy.

Reinforcements.—Twenty-one recruits arrived in Grenada on Tuesday last from New Orleans, under command of Capt. James Linton. The only officers we could obtain the names of were First Lieutenant J. L. Stith and Second Lieutenant Thomas Stackhouse. The company is composed of fine looking men.

The bark Isabella Hyne, with a cargo of goods from China, was wrecked on the coast about thirty miles to the north of the Golden Gate on the 8th inst. The bark belonged to Nye Brothers of Canton, and was consigned to Messrs. Macondrey & Co. She became a total wreck, and the ship and cargo an entire loss. The captain and mate were both lost by remaining on the ship after she struck, endeavoring to save her. The crew were all saved.

On the 10th, the executors of the late J. L. Folsom commenced the sale of the immense landed estate in this city. The sale was made by Belcher, Slanton & Co., auctioneers, and on the 10th and 11th, the total amount of property sold amounted to $605,000.

The steamer Oregon arrived from Panama on the 12th, with the 9th regiment of the U. S. infantry, and sailed with the same for Oregon on the 16th, for the service of the Indian war.

The P. M. S. S. Co. dispatched the steamer Panama on the 12th for Panama. This is the pioneer steamer in the freight line between this city and New York, which the company propose to establish.

The U.S. steamer Massachusetts, Commodore Swartout, arrived in our harbor from San Juan, via San Diego, on the 13th, and has gone up to Benicia to receive stores to transport to Puget Sound, for the use of the army in the Indian war.

The mail steamer Golden Age, with dates from New York to the 22d December, arrived on the 15th inst. She brought the remainder of the troops destined for the Oregon war, and they were sent forward by the steamboat on the 17th.

The case of A. A. Cohen, late receiver and assignee of the assets of the house of Adams & Co., has created considerable interest lately. He attempted to leave the State clandestinely by the Uncle Sam, on the 5th inst., but was detected before the sailing of the steamer by the sheriff, who found him secreted in the hold of the vessel. He was in the custody of the sheriff at the time of the attempt to escape, but was allowed his parole of honor. This having been forfeited by his endeavor to leave the jurisdiction of the sheriff, he has since been confined in the County Jail. He is now being re-examined before a referee of the District Court, in relation to the funds placed in his hands by Adams & Co., at the time of their failure. On the first examination he refused to answer any questions pertaining to the subject, and the Court committed him for contempt. He now makes the revelations desired, so far as the examination has gone.

The mines continue to yield their regular supply, which enables our capitalists to ship about four and a half millions per month.

Recent developments show conclusively that we have as yet only skimmed over the surface of our mines, and that the greatest yields are to be found hidden beneath the reach of the multitude.

Considerable rain has fallen within the fortnight, which has proved a great benefit to the mining and agricultural interests of the State. Until the past week, farmers in many portions of the country have been unable to plow for want of sufficient moisture. Great preparations are being made for sowing the ensuing season. An unusual amount of wheat will be sown, and, with a fair crop, we shall raise more than our own supply for the next year.

From Oregon.

Dates from Portland are to the 12th of January. In the Oregonian of December 22 we find the following:

The steamer Belle has just arrived with news from the battle-field in the Walla Walla country, to December 15, P. M., being seven days later news. The brief import of the news is that the Indians commenced another attack on the Oregon Mounted Volunteers on the morning of the 9th. We copy from a letter of our correspondent, who is in command of a company. Particulars of the fight up to the night of December 8th, was published last week.

December 9th.—The battle again commenced on the same ground of the day previous, which was a hot contest until dark. Our loss was in wounded, Ira Allen, Co. F, and John Smith, Co. I. On the 10th, the fight commenced still more desperately on the part of the enemy, and if possible with more determination on the part of our troops, to drive the enemy entirely from the field. Before dark they had fallen back to the ground occupied by them the night of the first day's fight, evidently badly whipped. Our loss was in wounded only one, Lieut. Sheppard, Co. F. In the evening Capt. Cornelius, with Co. D and part of Youhill company, arrived. On the morning of the 11th, the hills and plain, instead of being covered with the dusky forms of our savage foe, were bare—not an Indian in sight. All the disposable force went in pursuit, but returned on the evening of the third day, without being able to overtake the flying enemy.

I will not anticipate the official report by particularizing the stations and deeds of valor of the different companies of battle-fields, but most say that I have three times before stood on the battle-field, where contending thousands were engaged, and I never saw braver or more determined men engaged in deadly strife. There were not less than 800 warriors against us, occupying ground of their own choice; a part of them among the trees and dense undergrowth along the river, and the others extending their line across the plain in the sage and small sand hillocks, and the remainder in the ravines and on the rolling hills to the northward.

Jesse Flemming, of Co. A., died of his wound on the evening of the 13th, making our total of killed one Captain, one Lieutenant and four privates.—Wounded—three Captains, one Lieutenant and thirteen privates. Total killed and wounded, twenty-three.

The loss of the enemy is very great, according to their own admission, I think from seventy to eighty killed and as many more wounded, not less than one hundred and fifty in all. Pee-pee-mox-mox is dead. Stock Whitley shot in the neck and through the hips, nod many of their most influential and bravest warriors killed. I believe they have received a blow from which they can never recover.

The Oregonian of the 12th says:

Governor Stevens, of Washington Territory, had arrived at the camp of the Oregon Mounted Volunteers, had made a speech to the regiment and avowed his determination to urge a continuance of the war until every hostile Indian is subdued and a lasting peace is acquired, so that treaty stipulations would in all time be observed.

In an article in the Oregonian of the 5th, we find the following:

How Goes the War?—We answer that the U. S. troops, who are paid for fighting and who have been sent here at the expense of the General Government to protect the people, are all housed in good, warm winter quarters, eating, drinking and making merry—while a few bare-footed, half-starved volunteers, who came here at their own expense, are in the field, fighting the battles of their country. In every fight north they come out first, too.

Burning of the Capitol.—The Capitol at Salem has been entirely destroyed, supposed to be the work of an incendiary.

The Territorial library was entirely consumed—value probably about $6,000 or $8,000. The total loss, of building and library, will not fall much short of $40,000. The papers and journals of the present session were destroyed, principally, and will occasion great inconvenience to the Assembly in its further duties.

The Puget Sound Courier, of December 21, says:

We are informed that the Indians have commenced the work of destruction in this vicinity by burning the house and smith-shop of a German, situated on what is known as Puyallup plains. This house was situated about six miles from this place, and not more than a mile from other houses, occupied by other families. This is doubtless but the beginning of their work, which will no doubt be followed up on every opportunity. The heavy timber which skirts the prairie to the eastward is peculiarly favorable to predatory incursions by these miscreants, and we shall not be surprised to hear of the burning of all the houses in this portion of the prairie.

From Crescent City we learn that a party of 150 soldiers and a few volunteers went in pursuit of a band of Indians who had murdered several persons in the vicinity of Applegate Creek. They came suddenly upon the Indians, who retreated into several log cabins which had formerly been occupied by miners. They here fired upon the troops with such effect that at the distance of 300 yards they killed one man and wounded several others. The cabins were surrendered, however, and a howitzer brought to bear on them.

THEATRICAL MORALS.—One of our most fashionable theatres has got up a new thing, that shocks every moral sense not utterly depraved; yet draws well. There is a solemnity about the tableaux, say the hireling critics. It makes them mandlin souls feel pious! Scripture subjects are brought on the stage. The "Prodigal Son" has had quite a run. The last and crowning blasphemy of this school of morals was the Crucifixion.

Sell a theatre-goer to a friend of ours, meeting a swaggering, graceless fellow on the street, "That's the man that represents Christ on the Cross!"

Return of Rev. J. S. Belton.

We are deeply concerned at the report below. Strange hindrances are sometimes permitted to befal the cause. It was always so. The world has thus far been converted by instrumentalities subject to such vicissitudes as here appear:

JACKSON, MISS., Feb. 7, 1856.

I am in receipt of a letter from my son in China, (J. W. Lambuth,) which informs me that his health and that of his family is good, and that all the mission family are well, except Brother Belton and his wife, who have both been very ill. Such is the State of their health that Dr. Lambuth, of the London Mission, advises his immediate return to the United States. He has determined to sail in ten days. The letter from my son bears date the 6th of October. Brother Belton wishing his friends to know the fact by having it published in your paper. My son informs me that another native Chinese had been converted and joined the Church, which makes the number three since he has been in China, that have been converted and united with our branch of the Church of Christ. This may appear exceedingly small in the estimation of the world, but God will not despise the day of small things: God grant that the report from this field may soon be a thousand fold.

Yours, affectionately,

JOHN B. LAMBUTH.

P. S.—There was a gloom cast over the community to-day by the breaking of a locomotive of one of the Vicksburg and Jackson trains, near the depot in this city. The report was like that of a large cannon. The explosion took place as the train was leaving the depot, killing a negro man and wounding two or three others. A horse was killed also, and several houses very much damaged. It is a miracle that more persons were not injured. It occurred about eight o'clock to-day. The cause is not known, the engineer was living at 9 o'clock this morning.

Yours, J. B. L.

ATLANTA MEDICAL COLLEGE.—It is enough to say, in directing attention to this institution, that Dr. Means and Dr. Boring are professors. One course of lectures has been finished, from May to September last, with eighty students. It is the only institution of the kind purely southern in its course; the advantages of which are obvious. Though young, it stands already honorably recognized in the land.

ANNALS OF METHODISM is not yet out, as many think who are ordering it, but is in press and will soon be out. The author writes that orders indicate a vast run, and assures us they shall not be disappointed who look for a good book.

DEATH OF COL. RICHARDSON.—"Last Thursday," says the Franklin (La.) Banner, "we recorded a note announcing the death of the venerable Col. John G. Richardson, who died of pneumonia on the preceding day, at the residence of his son, F. D. Richardson, in the 71st year of his age."

He was one of the few surviving officers of that event so magnificently celebrated last Saturday at Place d'Armes, the battle of New Orleans. In the year of 1812 he commanded the Wilkinson cavalry. But he fought a better fight and won a nobler victory. We look for a more extensive notice from one capable of making it.

A NEW BUILDING MATERIAL.—We call attention to an advertisement under this caption, as we wish to encourage every useful improvement. From the specimens presented to us by the agent, and from seeing the process of its manufacture in this city, we are strongly impressed with the great utility of this material for building purposes. It is a combination simply of lime and sand, in proportions of one-tenth of the former to nine-tenths of the latter, mixed and placed in moulds in a damp state, and subjected to a pressure of from one hundred to two hundred tons. The pressure is sufficient to bring the particles in contact, forming a beautiful material, resembling fine cut stone. It might appropriately be called artificial marble, or sandstone. We learn that in four or five of the States at the North it is coming into use instead of burnt brick. The blocks we saw made were ten inches long by five wide and four thick, with a cavity in the centre, designed to form an air chamber in the wall, to prevent dampness. They can be pressed in any form to size for ornamental purposes, according to taste. Among the advantages claimed are cheapness and facility of manufacture; also, that laths and plastering become unnecessary, the inside of the wall as well as the outer face being smooth and ready for a thin coat of hard-finish or for papering. The chemical change which takes place in this combination of lime and sand under the action of the atmosphere, renders the silicate sufficiently hard in a few weeks, without burning, to lay in a wall, where the crystallizing or hardening process will go on indefinitely. The agent, who is now in our city, we learn is expecting to visit the principal sections of the South the present season. Address for this "New Building

Defence of the Dark Ages.

We were numbered among the hearers of a part of the course which Bishop Spalding, of Kentucky, concluded on last Sunday night. Of one of the lectures we have already copied a pretty full and correct report from a city paper.

Bishop S. is a pleasing speaker. He has an off-hand way of address. His anecdotes not only entertain, but help to make out the argument upon the popular mind. He does not reason, but narrates; and having been schooled much and traveled far, he is not bad off for matter.

The audiences were not large, save on Sunday night, when we did not attend. His subject on that occasion was indeed a temptation—Civil Liberty; the example and origin of which he stinted not to ascribe to Roman Catholicism!

The weather was contrary, or he would have had full houses. The sunny South, he said, was playing the coquette sadly. He did hope before his next that the "weather would become more civilized."

His lecture on the crusades was one of eulogy. What subsequent ages regard as a wanton waste of life, labor and means—the tilt of a fanatical world at a windmill, the Bishop characterised as noble in motive, grand in conception and worthy in results. Pope Urban II. was the instigator. He counselled and prayed for the Crusades. He it was that marshalled Europe and precipitated her upon the heart of Asia. And it was worthy of the successor of St. Peter. A rather shrewd motive of the Pope was hinted: he wished to consolidate the nations—put an end to their internal feuds; and so he pitted them all against a common enemy. Some of Bishop S.'s descriptions of sieges and assaults were very fine.

But the lecture following the defence of the Crusades—that was worth hearing for its novelty. The Bishop took up the cudgels for the "Dark Ages"—so called. If we believe his report, they were the glory of the world and of the—Church. All useful inventions and great deeds were born in the dark ages—"the much abused dark ages," as he would say.

His description of monastic life, when monks were penmen and laborious scholars, preserving literature and sacred records—when they taught the rude inhabitants agriculture, architecture and useful arts, was a severe rebuke and refutation of that present order of lazy beggars.

The Bishop dwelt eloquently on the art of staining glass, practiced in those dark ages, but lost now; sneered at the stained glass of the "boasted nineteenth century," when compared with that which produced a "holy religious feeling," as the light of the middle ages streamed in through the head of a martyr or scenes of the crucifixion.

Monks in those days wrote with golden ink; that, too, is lost. Then, with skillful touches of the hand they illuminated the margin of manuscripts. This age, with all its pictorials, can't attain such perfection. He had seen them. Such illuminations, (he played on the word,) had the ages called "Dark."

The good Bishop, forgetting our steamships and railroads, and printing presses, and Bible societies, and telegraphs, and common schools, and all such, seemed to sigh for those dark ages. "Alas!" he exclaimed, pathetically, "the days of devotion and chivalry are gone."

Fine times, to be sure, when princes signed treaties with their mark; when the priests monopolized knowledge; when people knew how to stain glass so religiously; when no Bible societies and heretical books plagued the Pope; and when all the world did as he pleased. May those good times——never return.

PULPIT PRONUNCIATION.—Judging from the following, from the New York Churchman, there are other denominations which stand as much in need of increased attention to pulpit elocution as our own. A correspondent of that paper gives samples of what he heard. Thus:

"When I can read my title cle-ah
To mansions in the skies,
I'll bid farewell to every fe-ah,
And wipe my weeping eyes."

"The above style of elocution in which the first lines of Dr. Watt's celebrated hymn were very recently delivered from the deeply recessed chancel of that beautiful church, the rector of which, some time since, so solemnly announced that the 'sufferings of the poo-ah increase with the approach of wint-ah,' and who, from the pulpit, is in the habit of extolling the wounderous efficacy of the gos-pill for the cu-ah of all the ills of suffering humanity. The same accomplished minister, upon the same day on which he delighted, from the chancel, his ravished hearers with the above poetic gem, electrified them by the following burst from the pulpit of eloquent and classical declamation:

'O! sinnah!
The judgmen is ne-ah!
Life is but a va-pah!'"

"We see it stated," says the St. Louis Advocate of Jan. 3d, "in some of our exchanges, that the first church erected in Kansas will be under the auspices of the Unitarians, and that the sum of $5,000 had been raised for that purpose. This is a mistake—a wide mistake. The Methodist Episcopal Church South has had churches there for some months past, built, dedicated, and regularly used for public worship. Long ago we contributed our mite toward erecting at least one church-house there, which house has long since been opened for use."

Circulate the Books.

They do no good on the shelves. The Nashville House must find a vent. The Church, the world, need books, and will be the better for reading and inwardly digesting them. As a good sermon, unpreached, can do no good, so of a good book, unread. The life-blood of Methodism will be richer its vision clearer, its heart enlarged and opinions more exactly correct, and practice improved by chronicling the books.

The Agents have, at 36 Camp street, New Orleans, a number of their publications on sale, at Nashville prices. Mr. McGinnis has devoted a department of his well-furnished store to these publications. They are on exhibition and sale. He is neat and clever, and quick in filling orders. His own ample shelves furnish many things in the line of books and stationery that the Agents do not, at his prices, which we think will be found reasonable.

The Agents desire to build up here a larger depository; they are ready to enlarge as patronage demands. Terms, thirty per cent. discount on cash in advance, or on the reception of the bills.

Among the works now on sale here we notice Winan's Discourses, $2 50; Wesley's Sermons, 4 vols., $2 75; Bascom's Lectures, $1; Summer's on Baptism, 65 cents; Chapman, $1; Life of R. Newton, $1; Progress, by Sammett, 80 cents; Powell on Succession, 65 cents; with all varieties of the Hymn Book, the Discipline, and most of the new Sunday School Catalogue, which grows every week with valuable additions.

Orders on commission merchants make payment convenient. Boats are leaving every day, and there is hardly a point in the Southwest but can be reached by a package made up here.

Bibles and Testaments (for cash) can at the same time be ordered from our Southwestern Bible-House, at New York prices.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

Col. JOHN G. RICHARDSON, son of Francis and Martha Richardson, was born in Sumpter county, S. C., February 28, 1785. In 1809 he married Margaret Dubose, daughter of Daniel and Mary Dubose, of the same State. In 1810 he emigrated to the Mississippi Territory, and settled in Wilkinson county. He had scarcely established himself in a home in his adopted country, when war with the Indians and with Great Britain called him to share in its hardships, privations and dangers. He commanded a volunteer troop of horse, and acquitted himself in a manner so much to the public satisfaction that he was chosen, successively, major and colonel in the regiment in which he had served. In his command, he was brave and prudent, strict in discipline, and kind to his men—at once a popular and model officer.

After a union of eighteen years, he and his excellent wife were parted by the death of the latter. This was a stroke under which his reason reeled; and no wonder that his anguish was nearly unendurable, for a better wife was probably never the portion of man. She had borne him eight children, all of whom, except one daughter, who died in infancy, survived her. He was afterwards twice married, his second wife living but four months. His third wife was survived by him four or five years. Before his death, and within a short time of that event, two sons, a daughter and a son-in-law, in quick succession followed each other to the grave. From his moral constitution, he was peculiarly sensible to these bereavements; but his piety found consolation in a well-founded assurance that there was "hope in the end."

In 1830 he removed to St. Mary's parish, La., where he continued to have his domicile till he was transferred by death to his "better home in heaven." Pecuniary litigations and difficulties occasioned him much perplexity and annoyance for several years; he outlived them all, and attained to circumstances with which he was content.

In his youth, John G. Richardson was proud, irascible and fond of pleasure; a worldly, wicked man. He was, however, high-toned; despising what he esteemed to be mean; abhorring what he considered dishonorable. His passions were easily excited, and under their impulse his action was prompt and reckless of consequences. Ardent in his temperament, his resentments were violent and his friendship warm-hearted. He feared nothing an enemy could do against him, nor grudged ought that he could do for a friend. He would with the like ardor have shed his blood in conflict with the former, or in defense of the latter. A genuine specimen of Southern chivalry.

The conversion and pious example of his wife were instrumental, mainly, in bringing him "from the darkness into light, and from the power of Satan to God." Affliction, severe and protracted affliction, was the minister of mercy to her. Under its rude discipline she was trained to a renunciation of the world, which she had previously loved too much, to put her sole trust in the Savior, to devote herself to the service of God, and to submit without repining to the dispensations of an infinitely wise and gracious Providence. Always amiable and lovely, she was now consecrated to God, in all her attractive qualities. She came out of the furnace of affliction "as gold seven times tried in the fire"—purified, refined, and with added lustre. Her husband felt and yielded to the influence of her sanctified loveliness. His pride and stoutness of heart gave way. He sought to become a companion meet for her society, a fellow-servant of her God, a partaker with her in the blessings of the new covenant, and a joint heir "in the inheritance of the saints in light." Nor did he seek in vain. After a severe struggle against the corruptions of his fallen nature, and against the habits of rebellion in which he had strengthened against God, he obtained deliverance at once from the dominion and the guilt of sin, and rejoiced in spiritual freedom, and in hope of eternal life. This important change took place in 1813 or 1814, so that he was more than forty years a follower of the Saviour. He was long an efficient class-leader and steward in the church.

Soon after experiencing this change, he became the subject of mental alienation; which, after continuing for some months, passed away, leaving his mind sound, and his religious character and enjoyment unimpaired. He ascribed the disturbance of his intellect to his intense but unsatisfied desire for the salvation of his friends. He became a member of the M. E. Church from a thorough conviction of the scriptural character of her doctrines, and the religious and moral wholesomeness of her discipline. In this conviction he never faltered. For the establishment of those doctrines and that discipline he was always zealous; promoting them with ardor, both by word and deed.

In the main, his religious course was steadily onward and consistent; though, from disturbing influences, chiefly from without, acting upon a nature peculiarly susceptible, he was often hindered in his progress and greatly depressed in his spirits. At one time, I remember, he walked in great darkness, and disclaimed all religious comfort; but, holding fast his integrity, the involving cloud was dissipated, and the beams of the "Sun of Righteousness" relumed his soul!

There was more naive simplicity—less suspiciousness in him than in any man, of his age and who had been as much in the world as he had, I ever knew. This was to him a fruitful source of trial and discomfort. When he found his misplaced confidence not justified by the character and conduct of those whom he had trusted, he felt as if personally injured by the disappointment. He was himself the very soul of frankness; and he looked to be met in an equally open-hearted manner, by those with whom he had intercourse. That he was often disappointed, need not be stated. A more benevolent man would be hard to find than was Col. Richardson. No form of human woe or want appealed to him in vain. His liberality was discriminating only in the amount of his contributions; which was large in proportion to his estimation of the importance which belonged to the claim to which it was responded. The spread of the Gospel, and the position of African Colonization drew most largely, I believe, on his liberality. How well he judged, in preferring these to other claims, need scarcely, I trust, be argued.

Till within a few hours of the close of his life, religion, its obligations, its consolations and its hopes, were the themes on which he delighted to dwell. These sustained him, under a long and severe illness, and in the imminent prospect of death; and, though delirium, during those few last hours, rendered his mind a chaos, no abatement in the confidence of his eternal well-being, should be allowed to take place. While reason predominated in his mind, God reigned in his heart; and God would not cast him off, when disease had unsettled his understanding. Doubtless, he has rejoined the loved-ones—his first wife, their two sons and their two daughters, who went before; and that they now rejoice together before the presence of the Divine glory. May the surviving members of his family follow, to the bright and happy abode, into which these departed ones have been introduced, by Him, who said, "I go to prepare a place for you; and, if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you to myself: that where I am, there ye may be also!" And may I, who long loved and was loved by him and them, rejoin them, when called hence!

From what I said about donations to the "Book and Tract Society," some have supposed I put the poor beyond contributing or receiving books. Not so intended. If you want $1 worth of books, or any amount of books, just send us the money, with proper directions. We want all, poor as well as rich, to take some part in this commendable enterprise. If you want books and tracts for yourself or for your Sunday Schools, they can be procured by the amount of money you may send, if desired.

Shall we hear from all of you?

VICKSBURG, Feb. 6, 1856.

The Society for the Propagation of the Gospel have had placed in their hands, by the English Government, the nomination of chaplains for the seat of war. Single clergymen, who have had at least two years' experience in holy orders, are preferred. A free passage is provided by Government, and the salary is equivalent to little less than £300. There are now fifty-two chaplains doing duty with the English army, and more are expected out. The fifty-two include all denominations. There are ten Roman Catholics, eight Presbyterians, about ten or twelve of the Church of England, sent out by the Government, and about twenty-two by the religious societies. The chaplains sent out by the French Government are exclusively of the Roman Catholic order.

OUR NASHVILLE CORRESPONDENCE.

MR. EDITOR:—There has surely never been such a winter as this one. The atmosphere grows colder and still colder as the season advances, and if by chance we have a few hour's thaw, it is sure to be followed by a blast from the north, which freezes up all fancies of a coming Spring, and makes one bless the memory of Prometheus, who, as everybody knows, gave fire to mankind. The ground has been covered with snow for days together, and the glistening coat of ice spread over every thing out of doors this morning, seems to be laughing back defiance to the sunbeams which now and then shine out from the snow-clouds overhead. Old Sol is fairly conquered by his majesty Jack Frost, and we, the interested but powerless witnesses of the combat, have retired within-doors in respectful silence. As you have doubtless observed, the reports from the regions north of us are truly appalling.

The principal occupations here now-a-days are to keep warm, and get something to eat. Wood is selling at six dollars a cord, coal at fifty cents a bushel; both hard to be got at any price.

The Cumberland has been in fine stage, but the Ohio river being closed with ice, navigation is suspended in that direction for the present. The mails are slow and uncertain, and altogether we are in a decidedly stupid state. Under such circumstances, don't expect me to write a news-letter. It is a sheer impossibility.

All going on right at the publishing house I believe. We occasionally see the noble form of our senior Bishop there, and it does me good at such times, to sit and talk with him of events that transpired, and persons he knew, when I was young, and he in his kingly prime, as no other man can talk. He enjoys fine health, but Mrs. Soule is said to be extremely feeble. I wonder if Doctor Elliot of the Western Christian Advocate knew this, when he made his ungentlemanly attack upon her through the columns of his paper? It may interest you to know that the little church out on the Gallatin pike near which the Bishop resides, is called "The City Roads Chapel."

Speaking of the Publishing House reminds me: it is rumored here, that certain unfavorable impressions in regard to Nashville have recently been made in your city. I am grieved that so unnecessary and hurtful a thing has been done. That any one's private convenience and wishes were not gratified by the action of the General Conference which located the Publishing House here, is surely no reason why a word should be said derogatory to its interests elsewhere. When a thing is done, it is more sensible, to say nothing of its being more christian-like on the part of those connected with it, to bury all discontent, and cheerfully labor to make "things work together for good," than it is to indulge in useless and injurious repinings. That the latter rather than the former course should be taken in a majority of instances, only serves to show how often our own comparitively petty interests overshadow great public benefits, and render us insensible to the selfishness involved in this complaining, fault-finding spirit.

I do not deny that other cities may possess some great advantages over Nashville in a business point of view, but it is not true that she has no claims whatever to being the centre of our publishing operations. It would be useless to weary you by a recapitulation of the arguments urged in its favor on the floor of the General Conference,—which seem to have been of sufficient weight to influence that grave and talented body in its decisions—but all this aside, I must insist, that any expressions of dissatisfaction now, especially on the part of those who ought to feel in some sense responsible for the success of this noble enterprize, amount to absolute treason against the general interest of the Church.

Our city missionary, Brother Ellis, has been very successful in his work. Since the session of Conference in October, he has established Sunday-schools and prayer-meetings at various points in the suburbs, and built a church in Edgefield. This, with M'Kendree Chapel, Andrew Chapel, Spruce St. Church, Elysian Grove, Hobson's Chapel, the new German Church, and the two excellent Colored Churches, makes eight Methodist Churches in Nashville and its environs.

People living at a distance from any given places, generally know more of what is going on there, than the residents themselves. Pray, can you tell me what has become of our Sunday School Secretary? Why is he doing nothing? Does he find that editing the paper and magazine, so completely engrosses his time, as to leave him no leisure for attending to this most important duty? If so, it were better to let them both go, and give all his energies if need be, to this, certainly the most important interest committed to the Church.

I understand that the Legislature has just passed a bill, authorizing the purchase of the "Hermitage" by the state, for the purpose of establishing a military school there, but am not certain if this be true.

The health of our city continues good so far as I am informed.

Very truly yours,

CROTCHET.

FOOLED.—A habitual drunkard having in a dream found a cup of excellent wine, set about warming it, to enjoy it with a gusto; but just as he was about to quaff the delicious draught he awoke! "What a fool I am," said he. "Why was I not content to drink it cold?"

TOBACCONISING.

NUMBER I.

The following essay is performed as a religious duty. It is intended for the reading of religious men, or of those religiously inclined; they will be likely to appreciate it. It is written in kindness and Christian love, and not a spirit of fault-finding. It is an humble attempt to vindicate God, and sustain the Truth. It is a sober thoughtful man addressing sober thoughtful men. And the writer expects—he thinks he has a right to expect, the candor and sobriety in return which he offers to others. An attempt at a laugh or a joke will not be willingly received in reply.

The writer is a professor of religion, and writes in no other than a religious spirit. In common with his fellow Christians he has solemnly dedicated himself and all he has—life, person, health, talents, money, character, energies, feelings, habits, wishes,—all—all, to the propagation of Christianity.

The evangelization of the world is the appropriate work and calling of a Christian. Anything which in much as in little—tends to advance this object a Christian man may do. But anything which, in like manner, tends to retard that object he may not do. This is the simple covenant, recorded above. I do not understand how any man can be religious truly and properly so, without laboring in this cause "so much as in us is."

The writer asks his fellow Christians to read the whole of his little essay, and he hopes it will be read in the spirit and temper in which it is written. Readers will then, of course, make such disposition of it as they choose—in the fear of God.

The writer believes the subject to be one of the most important within the range of religious discussion, at the present day, in this country.

1. DIFFICULTY OF APPROACHING THE SUBJECT.—Those who indulge in the practice under consideration endeavor, whether wittingly or unwittingly, to forestall discussion, to treat it with an air of contempt, and raise themselves above the question of its right or wrong. In this they have succeeded in a most remarkable degree. They put previous opinions at defiance by a forced openness and notoriety which they give to the practice. They place themselves among and along side of men of acknowledged standing in the Church; as tho' the standard of men could successfully countervail the principles of Christianity.

This false position—this grossest of all sophistries is perhaps the chief reason why the practice has so long gone unrebuked. In truth, it is greatly difficult, because of those things, to approach the subject in that fair and unbiassed manner which truth and justice require.

And as the sun of Christianity rises, and its light exposes to view more and more of its principles, and brings into action more of the moral and mental energies of man, and as its warmth sinks deeper and deeper into the intelligence and soul of men, the responsibility increases in the premises, with all men. As "talents" increase additional "improvement" is required. A Christian gentleman will not be judged by the same law which applies to a Christian Indian.

2. LET THE MINISTRY BE KEPT PURE.—We all know that the Bible and the Bible alone is the rule of conduct for all Christian people. No man is to follow a minister because he is a minister. Yet such is the power of association and the force of habit that most men, perhaps all men, are considerably influenced in their conduct by what they see others do.

And especially in regard to the ministers of the gospel. Much of the conduct of the world is what it is because the minister does so. It has long since gone into a proverb that "action speaks louder than words." No minister can preach as loud as he acts.

Hence every minister is bound to see that his example is such as other people, young and old ought to follow, and such as they will be benefitted by following.

It is the same thing for a minister to go into the pulpit and preach a sermon occasionally in favor of any custom, practice or habit, and exhibit that habit in his conduct out of the pulpit.

A pure minister is the life blood of the Church. Impurity or indiscretion of any kind in the ministry does vastly more harm to the Church and to society than most person are aware of. It is not a very uncommon thing for a minister to preach well, and then unpreach nearly or quite all he preaches.

If the social and individual acts of the ministers of this country, performed out of the pulpit, were performed with "fear and trembling before God," they would weigh double, treble, quadruple what they do now weigh in real, practical influence.

3. SMALL MATTERS.—There is great danger in estimating the size of moral things. Moral things can only be estimated by the results they produce. Nothing is in a moral sense, in itself, great or small. Many things which appeared to man the most trivial were really the corner stones, the starting point of great events in the world's character and history.

A mother taught her little boy that a degree of reverence was due to the minister. She explained to him how it was, and why it was, that the word "Reverend" is annually prefixed to the name of a minister. Everything the minister did was of course exactly right in the eyes of the boy. The boy became a smoker, and chewer as he entered his teens; his excuse refered to his Reverend exemplar; and the mother's mouth was stopped by her own teaching, which she intended as pious teaching. And she deeply, deeply regretted that the minister had ever been a intimate visitant in her house. And when the boy became a man, and found a habit fastened upon him which he despised, and being of feeble nerve, and, as he thought, incapable of resistance, he cursed that minister in his heart with every removal of the quid, and with every dollar expended to make himself, as he considered it, a fool and a third rate gentleman.

On this particular point a book comes booming up before me and demands to be written. But I must be content here with a mere index-finger pointing to the book, and suggesting an examination of it. We must not forget that Tall oaks from little acorns grow.

INAUGURATION OF THE JACKSON STATUE.

A Great Day in New Orleans.

The gratitude that has slumbered for forty years in the breast of New Orleans, has flamed out into tangibility. Since the glorious victory of Chalmette, the name of the hero of that victory has never been spoken but with emotions of reverence and admiration; and all the honor that thought and speech could confer, was paid to the old Hero while he lived. When great men die, however, their memory demands something more than annually-spoken eulogy or printed history. The genius of sculpture, that sprung into existence in the earliest ages, as the noblest and most enduring form of honor to the illustrious dead, has never lost its supremacy, and towers now, as it did at its birth, high above every other species of homage. The features of a hero may be painted upon canvas; his deeds may be printed in gilded books; the events of his life may be celebrated with oratory and festivity each year; and his name may be bestowed upon every thing susceptible of a name—but all these things are ephemeral, or to a certain extent intangible. They do not impress an adequate idea of the hero upon the sense through the channel of vision. Therefore, a sculptured likeness of a great man—depicting his form, feature, and mien, as they existed in the flesh, and placed in some beautiful or public spot, where it may be viewed and admired, not only by those already acquainted with the greatness of the original, but by the coming multitudes before they know anything of the greatness so honored—is the most pleasing and impressive embodiment of a people's admiration and gratitude that can be devised.

Thus, at length, have the people of Louisiana done honor to the greatness of Andrew Jackson. The bronze equestrian statue of the Old Hero that now adorns the prettiest public place in our city, is the first genuine and worthy tribute that our city has paid its greatest benefactor. It is simply as a work of art, a thing of beauty, that challenges the eye, and compels the enthusiastic stranger to linger around it with an admiration almost equal to that of the American.

We need not say a great deal about the inauguration of the statue on Saturday, for the whole population were out to see for themselves. Fortunately, the weather was bright and beautiful. Flags fluttered from the shipping, public buildings, consulates, printing offices, and other buildings too numerous to mention. Business was in a great measure suspended, and the streets literally swarmed with the population in holiday attire. The military, firemen, benevolent societies and other civic bodies, turned out in full uniform and regalia, with banners and music under the marshalship of Gen. Tracy, and formed into a procession that actually seemed interminable. This procession once under way, the wide-scattered multitudes began to concentrate in the direction of Jackson Square; and when, at noon-day, the concentration had come to a focus, the square and its vicinity formed a spectacle such as was never before seen in New Orleans, and probably will not be seen again for many a year.

It was one unbroken mass of humanity—a quivering sea of animation and beauty. The windows and balconies of the elegant Pontalba Buildings, and of the Court-houses, and of buildings from which diagonal views could be had, were perfectly gorged with ladies and children; the streets around the square, and the levee in front of it, were so densely crowded that carriages and omnibusses could scarcely make headway; and the square itself, with the muffled statue in the center, and the miscellaneous jumble around it of beaver hats, fire hats, soldiers' plumes, and ladies' parasols, all sorts of colors contrasting in the crowd below, and all sorts of banners fluttering in the breeze above, presented a more gay and gorgeous appearance than anything we ever beheld before. It is estimated that the falling of the canvas from the statue was witnessed by at least 25,000 people.

Those of the spectators who must have enjoyed the spectacle most, and who were themselves not the least interesting part of the spectacle, were the veterans of 1815; those who shared the glory of him to whom they were now paying posthumous honors. They had the place of honor in the procession, and were assigned an honorable position in the square. The colored veterans of the same famous occasion, were also out, headed by their fellow veteran, the incomparable drummer, Jordan Noble.

Upon a platform appropriately decorated, in front of the statue, the ceremonies of the inauguration took place. Ex-Mayor Crossman, President of the Monument Association, introduced L. J. Sigur, Esq., to the multitude, as the orator of the day. Mr. S. made an eloquent and appropriate address, reviewing the life of his hero as the warrior and as the chief of a great people; and was interrupted by the frequent applause of those who were able to hear him. When he concluded, a man by the pedestal pulled a string—the canvas fell—and the bronze figure of the warrior, upon his rampant war-steed, glittered in the light of the sun. Instantaneously a deafening cheer arose, and the hats of the multitude were waived aloft; the various bands of music joined in a chorus of the most inspiriting music; and a salute of a hundred guns, given with cannon on the levee, awoke the echoes far and near.

Subsequently Ex-Mayor Crossman introduced Clark Mills, Esq., the designer and builder of the statue, to the assemblage, whom he addressed as follows:

Ladies and Gentlemen:—The statue before you represents one who, with a handful of men, proved himself the savior of your beautiful city. Gen. Jackson is there represented as he appeared on the morning of the 8th of January, forty-one years ago. He has advanced to the centre of the line in the act of review: the lines have come to present arms as a salute to their commander, who is acknowledging it by raising his chapeau, according to the military etiquette of that day. His restive horse, anticipating the next move, attempts to dash down the line; the bridle hand of the equestrian here being turned, shows that he is restraining the horse, whose open mouth and curved neck indicate that the animal is feeling the bit. I have thought this explanation necessary, as there are many critics who profess not to understand the conception of the artist.

Ladies and gentlemen, it will be to my memory a dark day indeed, when I shall forget the vast crowd of faces around me; and should this humble effort meet your approbation, my proudest reflection will be the consciousness of having perpetuated, in imperishable bronze, the form and features of one whose life and character have always been my admiration.

Mr. Mills was loudly cheered. After that, General Planche stepped forward, and announced the ceremonies as at an close. Subsequently, the venerable Bernard Marigny addressed the multitude in French, in a very spirited and appropriate manner, and came off with vociferous honors.

In the evening, at the St. Charles Hotel, the city authorities gave a sumptuous dinner to the leading personages of the day, to-wit: Governor Wickliffe and suite, the Legislative Committees, the Monument Association, Clark Mills, Esq., the artist, and other gentlemen of distinction. The dinner was presided over by Mayor Lewis, assisted by Aldermen Lilgenbuhl and Stith, and Generals Tracy and Pulfrey. The dinner was eminently worthy of the occasion, and, after the removal of the cloth, toasts and responses were given of a nature appropriate to the occasion, and of such a quality as might have been expected from the gallant and eloquent spirits present. We regret that our space will not permit us to narrate the proceedings in detail.—[Crescent.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

NOTICE.—The anniversary celebration of the Jackson M. E. Sabbath school, will be held to morrow, Sunday 17th, at 3 o'clock, P. M., in the Union Hall Room, on Jackson street, Fourth District. Exercises by the children.

The public are invited to attend.

DAVID MAXWELL,
Superintendent.

TO THE MEMBERS OF THE ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—At the recent session of your Conference you resolved to raise in each pastoral charge at least twenty dollars for the Ministerial Education Society, and to forward the amount to your Treasurer at your "earliest convenience."

This is to inform you that claims are now coming in, and payment is urged; and that you have not the funds in your treasury to meet them! At least five hundred dollars will be needed to meet the claims now due and falling due in a few weeks. Please attend to this matter forthwith, and forward the amount to your Treasurer, at Montgomery, Alabama.

☞ Will not some of our laymen, who appreciate an educated ministry, and have the means to help us, come to our assistance in this crisis? Brethren, do help us! Material aid, at this time, will be of much comfort. Any amount you may forward to this object will be thankfully and duly received and duly acknowledged. Who will be the first to respond?

To the Members of the Mississippi Conference.—Dear Brethren: The box containing "Dr. Winne's Conference Sermon" did not reach Vicksburg in time to be distributed among the preachers before the adjournment of our Conference. The best we can do, therefore, is to forward them by mail to the several members of the Conference. Brother Cook, of Vicksburg, has kindly consented to forward them in packages of three copies, to every preacher who will send him his address, and postage stamps enough to prepay the postage on the package. The sermon is about the size of the catalogue of Centenary College, exhibited and distributed among the preachers of our late Conference. So that you can estimate pretty nearly the postage. Address E. G. Cook, Vicksburg, Miss. The postage will be twenty cents per package of two copies. Yours, truly,

H. J. HARRIS.

To the Preachers and Sunday School Superintendents in the bounds of the Mississippi Conference.—The Board of Managers of our Book and Tract Society have instructed me to keep on hand in Vicksburg a sufficient quantity of books to supply the current demand. In obedience to this instruction I have ordered a large supply of the General catalogue; also, of Sunday school books—catechisms, question books, hymns, notes, dictionaries, libraries, &c., and I trust you will send your orders to Vicksburg for these books, accompanied with the cash when convenient: Price same as at Nashville. Time saved to you in the operation. Respectfully,

H. H. MONTGOMERY, Agent.

DEATHS.

It has become our painful duty to record the death of our dear brother, Dr. WM. GRIFFITH MILLS, who departed this life on the morning of the 24th January, at his residence in Vermillionville, La., aged 42.

His health had been precarious for many years. The work of death was accomplished in seven days. Never was a man more beloved. A heart-stricken widow and seven orphan children weep in the sad homestead. An aged mother and many loving sisters and brothers mourn the departed one. The closing scene was truly heart-rending and sublime. The bed was surrounded by weeping relatives, friends and servants. He took an affectionate farewell of all. "Oh! do not weep and cry," he said; "you disturb me. Let me sleep. God has been merciful and kind; he has brought me through. I am so happy! I have faith in God! Christ died for me! We will be a united family in heaven!" He seemed willing to submit to the Divine behest, yet he had much to live for. His interest in this life was great. The benevolent soul poured out its sympathy, its tenderness and its assistance on all objects that came within the range of its influence. It was the joy of his heart to contribute to the comfort of others. The poor from his door were never turned amply away, nor did the sick ever want for attention: To them he was a ministering angel, dispensing health and strength, restoring lustre to the eye and animation to the countenance. These are duties—Christian duties; but to him they were more, they were a pleasure. The work to which his whole heart inclined—to which his life was devoted and dedicated. But there were dearer objects to him than life itself. There was the gentle wife, the partner of his love, the cherished idol of his heart, with whom he hoped to spend many years of happiness; and a group of lovely children claimed a father's love and a father's care. With what deep solicitude, burning interest and ceaseless anxiety he looked upon that treasured band, a parent's heart can only know! Who but heaven can tell the import of those heart-groans that burst from his bosom at the thought of leaving these cherished objects to struggle up to maturity without a father's tender care! These ties bound our brother to earth, and wood him still to stay. But death, inexorable death, has severed them all. May God sustain his surviving partner to raise those dear children he has left "in the nurture and admonition of the Lord."

Oh! yes, we'll meet in that spirit land
Where parting is unknown,
And join the bright, angelic band,
Around the father's throne.

ELIZABETH J. KENNON.

DIED, at his residence, in Bossier parish, La., January 12, 1856, of apoplexy, WM. P. HAUGHTON, in the 47th year of his age.

Brother Haughton had been for many years an acceptable member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. About nine years ago he united with the M. E. Church South, of which he continued a consistent and exemplary member until called from the scene of trial and suffering to his reward above. It was the privilege of the writer of this notice to know him for more than fourteen years, and it was but to love him for his many good qualities: But he is gone; not, however, without leaving a good example, a good influence and a pleasing thought that he is safe in heaven. Brother H. has left a wife with two children to mourn his loss; but they sorrow not as those which have no hope. Oh, may the widow's heart be staid upon God, and may the orphans find that he is their shield and exceeding great reward.

By telegraph from Jackson, we regret to learn that the locomotive Hercules, of a wood train on the Vicksburg and Jackson Railroad, exploded while standing on the track, near Jackson, yesterday afternoon. The engine is a complete wreck, and we regret to learn that a negro of Mrs. Overstreet's was instantly killed by the explosion, and two other negroes badly scalded. The engineer, Graff, was not on the engine at the time of the explosion. A coroner's jury was empannelled soon after the occurrence, to enquire into the cause of the accident. Up to the hour of going to press, we have not learned the result of their verdict. The rails where the engine stood were torn up, and the depot somewhat damaged by the fragments of the engine. A New Building Material.

This material is not surpassed for chimpasses, strength, durability and beauty. It strongly resembles polished marble or cut stone. It is, in fact, artificial stone, produced by a combination simply of common sand and lime, subjected to great pressure in moulds to the shape and size required, without burning, after which a gradual state of crystalization takes place. Presses are now in the city for manufacturing. Specimens may be seen and all particulars had from the agent,

Atlanta Medical College.

The second course of lectures in this institution will commence on the first day of May next, and continue four months.

FACULTY:

Alexander Means, M D, chemistry and pharmacy.
H W Brown, M D, anatomy.
John W Jones, M D, principles and practice of medicine
W F Westmoreland, M D, principles and practice of Surgery.
Jessie Boring, M D, obstetrics and diseases of women and children.
Joseph P Logan, M D, physiology and gen'l pathology.
J C Westmoreland, M D, materia medica and medical jurisprudence.

From experiments made last session, the fact is established beyond dispute that even for winter dissections bodies properly preserved are preferable to those not prepared; and that warm weather does not render such subjects offensive if sound when put up. The dissecting room, supplied with good subjects, will be opened by the 20th of April.

Fees for the entire course of lectures, $105, matriculation, payable once only, $5; dissecting ticket, obligatory once only, $10; graduation, $25.

Good board can be procured at from $3 to $3 50 per week. For further particulars, address,

COLLEGE EDIFICE.

A large and commodious building, planned by the best architectural talent, and erected in the most substantial manner, is now nearly ready for the reception of pupils. Feeling the great importance of space and comfort for the educational and domestic interests of the institution, the Trustees have spared neither pains nor expense to meet the demands of utility and beauty in the construction of the edifice.

EDUCATIONAL FACILITIES.

A new and valuable apparatus has been purchased for the College. Cabinets of minerals, fossils and curiosities have also been provided. Stated courses of lectures on science, art and literature will be delivered.

OPENING.

The first term of the college will commence on the second Monday of February, 1856.

TERMS.

Board, including washing, fuel and lights, will be furnished at $12 50 per month. Tuition fees will be at the ordinary rates.

REMARKS.

The present circular is merely designed to give notice of the approaching opening of the college, and to afford a general outline of its plans and objects. The public may rest assured that the Trustees, in co-operation with the Faculty, will use all proper and possible means to render this institution worthy of a cordial and generous support. The remaining officers of the Faculty will be elected as soon as circumstances will allow, and it is confidently expected that in a short time the college will be fully organized in all the departments of a thorough education.

Acknowledging with gratitude the earnest and liberal sympathy which this enterprise has so generally received and thankful to that kind Providence which has conducted it to its present stage of promising usefulness, the trustees have now the happiness to announce the near fulfilment of their long-cherished wishes. The location of the college is as healthy and agreeable as could be desired. It is perfectly accessible, and yet sufficiently retired for the purposes of a moral, intellectual and womanly culture. Its expenses will be made as moderate as practicable, and a faithful, parental guardianship will be exercised over all who may be committed to the charge of the institution.

Address of Speaker Banks.

Mr. Banks delivered the subjoined address when taking his chair as Speaker of the House of Representatives. There is nothing objectionable in its tone and temper. On the contrary, the sentiments conveyed are praiseworthy, and if Mr. B. carries them into practice he will have the whole Abolition pack, headed by Horace Greeley, "down upon him" in the most savage manner in a very short time, as we predicted he would when the telegraph brought us the news of his election.

We deeply regretted the election of Mr. B., but are willing to judge him by his acts. We believe in keeping well up with—not getting too far ahead or too far behind—the political wagon.

But here is the address:

Gentlemen of the House of Representatives:

Before I proceed to complete my acceptance of the office to which I am elected, I avail myself of your indulgence to express my acknowledgments for the distinguished honor conferred upon me.

It would afford me far greater pleasure, in taking the chair of the House, were I supported even by the self-assurance that I could bring to the discharge of its duties, always delicate and arduous, and now environed with unusual difficulties, any capacity commensurate with their responsibility and dignity. I can only say that, in so far as I am able, I shall discharge the obligations resting upon me with fidelity to the constitution, and with impartiality as it regards the rights of members of the House. I have no personal objects to accomplish. I am animated by the single desire that I may aid in some degree in maintaining the well-established principles of our government in their original and American signification; in the development of the material interests of that portion of the continent we occupy, so far as we may do within the limited and legitimate powers conferred upon us; in enlarging and swelling the capacity of our government for beneficent influences at home and abroad; and, above all, in preserving intact and in perpetuity the priceless privileges transmitted to us.

I am, of course, aware that of my own strength I cannot hope to be equal to the perfect execution of the duties I now assume. I am, therefore, as every man must be who stands in such presence, a supplicant for your co-operation and indulgence; and, accepting your honors with this declaration, I again offer you my thanks.

Mississippi and Tennessee Railroad.

This road, of which the New Orleans public possess little knowledge, comparatively speaking, is destined at no distant day to be an important adjunct and feeder of the Great Northern road; to bring to it an immense amount of business; and to contribute largely to the trade of the city, as well as infinite convenience and benefit to the inhabitants of the extensive and fertile region through which it is to pass.

In the Jackson (Miss.) Flag of the Union, of the 7th inst., we find an interesting account of an interview the editor had with Col. F. M. White, President of the Company, from which we gather the subjoined valuable facts:

The company obtained a charter at the called session of the Legislature in 1852, to construct a railroad from Memphis, Tenn., to Grenada, Miss.; there intersecting the Central Road. The distance is about one hundred miles. The road passes through the populous and wealthy counties of Desoto, Panola, Tallahatchie and Yalobusha, a region of country not surpassed in fertility in the State. It is estimated that the county tributary to the road produces already 100,000 bales of cotton, but suffers more from inaccessibility to market, than any part of the State. Upon the completion of the line, the produce will be doubled or trebled.

The company began work in September, 1854. In little more than a year they had fifteen miles of track finished, laid and in operation; fifty miles of grading nearly done from few thirty-three miles in New Orleans and Memphis—and for twelve miles more on the way from Europe. The grading was let to the Talahatchie.

On the 3d inst a fire occurred in Augusta, Ga., which destroyed twenty stores and dwellings. It extended from Broad to Ellis streets, but as the buildings were mostly frames the loss was not heavy.

LATER FROM EUROPE.

The Armistice Agreed Upon!!

COTTON AND CONSOLS ADVANCED.

BY THE SOUTHERN AND NATIONAL LINES.

NEW YORK, Feb. 9.—The new Cunard steamship Persia has arrived, with later dates from Europe, to the 26th.

Liverpool Cotton Market.

Cotton had advanced 1-16—the improvement being mostly on fair qualities.

Richardson, Spence & Co. quote Orleans fair 6¾d.; Middling 5¾d., Uplands fair 5¾d., Middling 5 9-16 d.

The sales of the week amounted to 70,000 bales, of which exporters took 10,000 and speculators 10,000.

The stock in port amounts to 360,000 bales. The market closed steady.

Flour and Grain.

Flour remains quiet. Western Canal is quoted at 40s., and Ohio at 42s. Corn has declined, and there is little speculative demand. Mixed is quoted at 38s. 6d. and White 43s. to 44s. 6d.

Provisions.

Provisions are quiet without any quotable change.

Consols.

Consols have advanced, and are quoted at 90¼ to 90¾.

Peace Negotiations.

The negotiations for peace are still progressing, but it will be some days yet ere the preliminaries will be arranged and signed. The Czar has, however, ordered Gortschakoff to suspend hostilities.

Russia's sincerity has been much doubted heretofore, but the appearances are all fair now, and the order from the Czar to cease hostilities was a straightforward one, without awaiting the formal conclusion of an armistice, which it is rumored has been agreed on for three months.

France, England and Austria continue to accord, although it is expected that foreign and grave questions will arise during the negotiations.

No place of meeting has been decided upon, and it will be at least the 2d of February before the preliminaries are arranged and the signatures appended to the agreement to meet.

In the meantime Consols had advanced, and closed on Friday at 93¼ to 93¾.

The bullion in the Bank of England had increased £8000.

The London News learns from undoubted authority that certainly before the meeting of Parliament the armistice will be concluded, and that after which the negotiations, with a view to a final treaty of peace, will be entered upon forthwith.

A dispatch from Berlin states that the peace proposals are strongly supported in St. Petersburg by Holland.

The Belgique came very near foundering at sea, having sprung a leak seven hundred miles west of the Lizzards, and it was only by the united exertions of passengers and crew that she was kept afloat until she reached Southampton, where she was found to have six feet of water in the hold and the boiler burned out.

The ships Horizon, Independence and Mary Green, have been lost.

The firm of Kelly & Gillman has failed.

Cholera at Porto Rico.

NEW YORK, Feb. 9.—The steamer Tennessee, which was sent after the filibustering bark Amelia, has arrived at St. Thomas in a leaky condition.

The cholera is raging with terrible fatality at Porto Rico. No less than thirteen thousand cases have occurred since November 21st.

Markets.

NEW YORK, Feb. 9.—Flour has advanced a 6d. in wheat there is nothing done. Corn is quiet at 84c. Cotton quiet—sales of 700 bales. Spirits of turpentine firm at 40¾. Rosin firmer—No. 1 $2 12½ to $2 75. Rice dull. Freights have improved.

The Steamship Pacific.

NEW YORK, Feb. 10.—The steamer Alabama sailed this morning in search of the steamer Pacific, which left Liverpool three days before the Persia.

NEW YORK, Feb. 8.—Flour is a trifle lower. Southern is quoted at $8 87½. Southern Red Wheat at $1 87½.

CINCINNATI, Feb. 8.—Flour is offered at $6 90. Whisky is selling at 24¼.

LOUISVILLE, Feb. 8.—The river appeared to be rising yesterday. The weather has moderated quite fast within the past few hours, and the thermometer at 2 o'clock to-day stood at forty degrees. We have had another fall of snow to the depth of two inches.

LOUISVILLE, Feb. 9.—The weather still continues to moderate.

CINCINNATI, Feb. 9.—Mess Pork, $14. Whisky, 24c.

We copy the following telegraphic items from the Mobile papers of the 9th inst.

Proposed Increase of the Navy.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 7.—In the Senate to-day, Mr. Cass introduced a resolution for the increase of the Navy. No other business of importance was transacted.

Recall of Mr. Crampton.

Since the receipt of the last foreign news, it has become known that Mr. Buchanan has acknowledged the receipt from the State Department, of instructions, demanding from the British Government, the recall of Mr. Crampton.

The Senate have adopted a resolution directing the Finance Committee to report bills for the general appropriations. The Senate have adjourned until Monday next.

In the House the election for Printer has been postponed and the Speaker authorized to appoint some person to act in the interim.

The Committees have all adjourned until Monday.

Mr. French again Refused.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 8.—Parker H. French, Minister from Nicaragua, who some time since offered his diplomatic credentials which were not received by the administration, (and who intimated to him through Mr. District Attorney McKeon, of New York, that he had better get out of the United States as soon as possible) again applied for recognition to-day. The President, however, having seen no reason to change his previous views or determination, again declined to recognize him.

The Hon. Lewis Cass fell this morning from the steps of the Patent Office. He was severely injured, but it is thought not dangerously so.

The injury of Mr. Cass is more serious than was at first anticipated. Serious apprehensions are now entertained that inflammation of the brain may ensue.

NEW YORK, Feb. 8.—The following is the official dispatch from the French Ambassador at Vienna to the Minister of Foreign Affairs at Paris:

Prince Esterhazy announces that he has received from Nesselrode his acceptance, pure and simple, (the words of our dispatch) of the ultimatum offered to Russia, which will become the basis of an immediate Convention to conclude a treaty of peace.

THE BARK AMELIA.—Last November the bark Amelia was seized at Port-au-Prince by the United States vessel-of-war Saratoga, on the ground that she was engaged in some filibustering enterprise, either against Nicaragua or some of the West Indies. The bark was put under the charge of Lieut. Worden, of Baltimore, and Lieut. Henry Erben, and dispatched, with a prize crew of thirty men, for New York. She sailed December 2d, in company with the Clara Windsor. The Windsor separated from her on the second day, and reached New York December 17. The Amelia has not been heard from. She was an old and leaky vessel, and the friends of those on board are fearful that she has either gone down in one of the late gales, or been so disabled as to render it impossible to work her into port. A telegraphic dispatch informed us a few days ago that the government had sent a vessel in pursuit of the missing bark.

MR. TOOMBS IN BOSTON.—It will be remembered that by invitation of a committee, Mr. Toombs, of Georgia, recently delivered a lecture, or address, in Boston, on the subject of slavery. The effort is pronounced a very able one, and doubtless, will not be without its effect. We extract a single paragraph:

A slave escaping into Massachusetts must be delivered up. The Constitution follows the fugitive into every State or Territory, seizes and carries him back to his master. [Hisses.] "Gentlemen, you may hiss your Constitution, it is so nominated in the bond, and as long as there is faith and loyalty, and it stands there, it will be protected by this great country. It does more, my countrymen. I did not put it there. I am giving you the history of the action of your fathers. I am giving you the constitutional rights of your fellow-citizens. If it be distasteful, go back and put your curses where they belong, and not upon one who had no part in this thing." [A gentleman here explained that the hisses arose from some other cause, in the rear of the hall, and not from the words of the speaker.] These manifestations, Mr. Toombs said, only show that we have a free country, and with a free Constitution, it can always be protected.

OFFICIAL.

BOARD OF ASSISTANT ALDERMEN.

The following report and documents from the Commissioners and Agents of the McDonogh Estate, were ordered to be published in the official journal:

To the Honorable the Mayor and Common Council of the City of New Orleans, and the Mayor and City Council of Baltimore:

Gentlemen: The undersigned commissioners and agents of the general estate of John McDonogh, appointed to administer it under the will of the deceased, beg leave to present the following report:

We herewith present four documents, viz:

Document No. 1, a memorandum of the estate as at present in our hands.

Document No. 2, receipts and expenditures of the general estate, from 27th March to 31st December, 1855.

Document No. 3, rent roll of the general estate from 1st November, 1855, to 31st October, 1856.

Document No. 4, memorandum of rent notes, leases, etc., on hand of property leased for a period longer than a year, and falling due in 1857, 1858, 1859, 1860.

The first of these papers shows the appraised and estimated values of the entire estate, in land, slaves, money, etc.; amounting, in all, to the sum of two millions two hundred and seventy-two thousand four hundred and six dollars and five cents.

Since the commencement of our administration, we have received returns from two parishes which were not included in the returns of the appraisement made to us by the Executors, namely, of $303,000 of real estate in the Parish of St. James, and of $5,000 of real estate in the Parish of Lafourche Interior—thus adding $308,000 to the gross value of the estate. Returns have not yet been received from property in the parish of St. Charles, which was also not included by the Executors. The Recorder of that parish has been several times called on to make his return, and we hope to present it in our next report. This will complete the valuation of the entire real estate belonging to this succession, as far as we are able to ascertain from the inventory and title papers in our possession.

The slave account, which forms one of the items of document No. 1, has been set down on the books of the Commissioners and agents at the sum of $30,000, which is an estimated valuation of the remaining four of the slaves, since the commencement of our administration. In the report sent last May to Baltimore by the agents of that city, this item was entered at $20,000, but on a reconsideration of the matter, it was thought best to insert the sum of $30,000 and, accordingly, it has been entered on the ledger of the estate at that amount. It will be remembered that according to the will of Mr. McDonogh, the slaves are directed to be liberated and sent to Africa after the expiration of fifteen years from the period of his death.

The value of the "Theatrical properties," stated at $16,702 in this memorandum, is, of course, subject to some annual diminution, as they are necessarily leased with the theater and are impaired by time and use.

Of the balance of "Bills Receivable and Book Debts" received by the undersigned from the executors, it is believed that not less than $216,342 72 are utterly worthless. Without abandoning the whole amount, (we have therefore considered that, the sum of $60,951 83 was the proper one to enter on the books of the estate as collectable,) and in connection as $8,380 have been paid on that account since our administration began, we now return from our ledger $37,168 67 as separate "Old Bills Receivable," and $21,403 83 of separate "Old Book Debts."

The cash in Bank, etc., has all been deposited in the branch of the Louisiana State Bank, bearing interest at the rate of three and one-half per cent. per annum.

It is proper also to state that among the assets of this estate, but not yet entered on our books, are two judgments of Court against the City of New Orleans, amounting to $17,200, independent of interest. The first of these judgments, for the sum of $9,000 and interest, was rendered for an expropriation of property belonging to the estate, for a public park; and the second, $7,200, for expropriations in opening Philip and other streets in the city of New Orleans. The property taken for these purposes was of course valued in the general return of the inventory, but we have not yet accurately ascertained the quantity of unexpropriated portions of the real estate from which the land was taken, so that we are unable to state the true balance of that account.

Document No. 2 exhibits the cash receipts and expenditures of this Board from the 27th March to the 31st of December, 1855, and, with Document No. 3, presents a complete view of our administration of the property since it passed from the executors into our hands. All the expenditures have been either indispensible for the benefit of the estate, or were made in pursuance of the Will, of existing laws, or of judgments, and every effort has been made to reduce them to the lowest standard.

It will be observed that the amount paid for insurance and taxation is large, though no tax has yet been paid to the city of New Orleans, and none to the State, in any of the parishes except Jefferson, East Baton Rouge and Orleans. Under the opinion of counsel, furnished to this Board, it appears certain that the claim for at least one-half of the tax assessed for the city of New Orleans "is extinguished by confusion." This arises from the fact that the city of N. Orleans is joint owner with the city of Baltimore of all the property belonging to this succession.

In the commencement of our work it was found necessary under the old system of renting as adopted by the Executors, to employ a collector; but since the granting of new leases by this Board, providing that the rent notes shall be paid, specifically, either in bank or at the office of the estate, this expense has been and will be entirely avoided.

The item of $2,442 24-100 in document No. 2, of "Expenses on the McDonogh place" represents the payments made by the undersigned for the support of the forty-six unemployed negroes, whom we found, at McDonogh's late residence, in March last. Immediately after the commencement of our duties, the undersigned endeavored to find service for these slaves, so as to save the estate from the heavy cost of their maintenance in comparative idleness. This we are glad to say has been at length accomplished, by apportioning them in the new leases made in October last, among the parties who rented the Allard, St. Reine and Fleitas Places, and by hiring several to different parties in New Orleans. There are now but three remaining at the cost of the Estate—one of whom is utterly helpless from infirmity and age, another nearly blind, and the third constantly and usefully employed as the porter of this office. Between June and December the sum of $582 25 was received for the hire of those who were employed in the city.

Our most efficient secretary was engaged and compensated according to the direct instructions of the will of Mr. McDonogh; and the foresight of the deceased has been fully proved by the important services this officer has rendered the estate.

It was found indispensable to employ a "Superintendent of wood cutting." This we should have considered necessary even if no revenue had been obtained from that source; for without the watchfulness of such an officer the most shameful waste might be committed on the valuable wood lands of this estate in the neighborhood of New Orleans. His duties consist in a constant inspection of the rural property in this vicinity, and in measuring and accounting for the wood that is cut under contracts. We have been fortunate in securing the time and services of a well known and most responsible person; and we have reason to believe that the revenue from this item will be considerably increased and faithfully collected under his management.

In order to understand the condition of the city property, and to possess a permanent and ready record in our office for reference in leasing, repairs, etc., it was found necessary to have a book of plans and sketches made by a competent draughtsman; This involved the careful examination of all the title papers, and of several surveys, and resulted in one hundred and forty-two plots. We have the satisfaction to report that this valuable service was completed to our satisfaction for the moderate sum of $394 74.

As evidence of our disbursements, on all the items included in the statement of "Receipts and expenditures" we, in all cases, took triplicate receipts upon the payment of accounts, etc., by order of the Board. The original receipt and bill are preserved among the papers and records of this office, and the duplicates and triplicates, numbered from 1 to 22, are herewith transmitted to the cities of New Orleans and Baltimore, respectively, to be filed by them with the reports and accounts of the Commissioners and Agents.

Document No. 3 shows the rent roll from the 31st of October, 1855, to the 1st of November, 1856. It will be seen that the leases are confined to the First, Second and Third Districts of the city of New Orleans, the parish of Jefferson and the parish of Orleans.

The account of "Receipts and Expenditures" includes the collections for the month of November, 1855; so that of the rent from November 1st, 1855, to the 31st of October, 1856, there are only eleven months to be collected and accounted for when they shall be paid.

Document No. 4 exhibits the rent notes, leases, etc., etc., on hand; some of which were made by Mr. McDonogh and his executors, and some by this Board. The longest of these liabilities will expire in the year 1860; but all these rentings, it must be recollected, are entirely independent of the annual leases comprised in the First, Second and Third Districts of New Orleans, and in the parishes of Jefferson and Orleans.

It is probable that if the business of New Orleans for the last year, had been of a character to encourage the commercial classes of this city, the annual rentings in October, 1855, would have presented a more flattering aspect; but the depression of last season unquestionably affected the real estate of the city, and the undersigned believe they have cause to congratulate their constituents on presenting them a certainly undiminished rent roll. By an accurate examination of our accounts, it has been found that the rent roll, as passed from the executors to the commissioners and agents, actually amounted to but $59,542. Yet, notwithstanding the fact that we have lost some considerable lessees during the last fall, the Board is glad to show that it has not only received sufficient augmentations to overcome their loss, but to raise the rentals to $61,010 33.

It will be easily understood by any one who takes the trouble to scrutinize the character of the vast landed property belonging to this succession, that the large unproductive estate, must seriously affect the revenues of the productive. In order to exemplify this, the Board will state that, what may be considered as unproductive property should be estimated at fully $300,350 50. The expenditures for the parishes of Jefferson, Orleans and East Baton Rouge, alone, amount to $9,738 52, while the revenues from Plaquemines, Orleans and Jefferson, are only $1,501 48. These are the only parishes in which the estate owns property yielding an income, so that they leave a balance on the productive property of $7,138 04. This, it should be observed, is altogether independent of the State and parish taxes in all the other parishes in which there is property, bills for which have not been rendered to the undersigned during the period of their administration.

The Board deems it a duty to appeal your honorable bodies that, although the Supreme Courts of Louisiana and of the United States have settled the question of the rightful ownership of this large estate, it is not yet entirely freed from litigation.

The most important of the actions pending at present are:

1st, The heirs of Oliver H. Spencer vs. the Succession of McDonogh et als; in which the plaintiffs claim five thousand one hundred and thirty-four dollars, ninety-four cents, with compound interest at the rate of six per cent per annum from 17th April, 1815. This suit is pending in the 4th District Court of New Orleans, and, as you will see, involves an immense amount of money.

2d, Sarah Greenwood et al., alleging themselves to be heirs of Shepherd Brown vs. the Succession of McDonogh et al.—in which the plaintiffs claim eleven ninety second parts of the whole property of Shepherd Brown, amounting, according to their calculation, to upwards of one hundred thousand dollars; but the precise amount is not stated in their petition. The suit is pending in the 2d District Court.

3d. The important action of the City of New Orleans vs. the City of Baltimore, by which the former claims that this Estate be divided between the Cities.

4th; The Society for the Relief of destitute Orphan Boys against the Cities of New Orleans and Baltimore, in which the petitioner claims the specific performance of the will and general relief.

The most important of all these actions is, probably, the one between New Orleans and Baltimore, involving the question of division. It concerns matters of considerable nicety, and requires the greatest discretion in its management.

Independently of the difference of opinion between the two cities as to the legal right or the propriety of dividing this estate, it may well be doubted whether any mere voluntary partition between New Orleans and Baltimore would serve the purposes of either. Under all the circumstances, it is perhaps best that the question should be settled by the courts, so that there may be no discrepancy between the behests of the will and the acts of the cities.

We have the pleasure to say that we have found no cause either to repeal or modify, as yet, any of the rules and regulations adopted by this Board in April last, (a copy of which was heretofore sent to your honorable bodies), and that they have been entirely successful for the management of the estate entrusted to us.

The cash, on the 31st December, 1855, as has been already stated, $75,697 63. This balance is composed partly of cash received from the executors, partly of the amount of rents and interest accruing and collected during the period of the account, and partly, also, of sums received in payment of "old bills receivable" and "book debts" transferred to us by the executors. The proportion of the cash in bank, which, after deduction of disbursements is made, might be considered as nett revenue of true income, would be comparatively small, and the Board has concluded not to make, at present, any attempt to distribute it, as contemplated by the will of Mr. McDonogh.

The principal consideration which has led the undersigned to this conclusion, is that the amount claimed from the estate in the various suits we have enumerated, is much more than sufficient to swallow up, if allowed, the whole amount in our hands. In view of these contingent liabilities, the Board has not thought it discreet, and perhaps not lawful, to divest themselves of the means of satisfying these claims should they hereafter assume the shape of judgments. To do so, would be to subject what might be termed the capital of this succession (its real estate) to diminution for the purpose of paying debts. This, it is believed, would not accord with the intentions of the testator, who designed that all the liabilities should be extinguished before any appropriations were made of the revenues for the general purposes of his will.

The Board has also been influenced by the consideration that the particular legacies of certain proportions of the nett annual income, are charges upon the universal legacies—that serious doubts have been entertained of the validity of these legacies, or, at least, some of them; and that while the question is still unsettled, it would be inadvisable to take any action which might tend to compromise the rights of any of the parties in interest.

We have the honor to be, gentlemen,

Your obedient servants,

AGRICULTURAL.

CLOVER AT THE SOUTH.—We feel very much inclined to keep this subject before our readers. That it will flourish any where, and on all kinds of soil, without much artificial aid, we shall not attempt to insist. But that we have much soil, and many places in which it will do well, we cannot doubt, and we are quite sure, that with a little help, it might be introduced very extensively, and with how much benefit, we can hardly attempt to estimate. Its value for hogs and other stock, where it was made to abound, would prove a very ample compensation for all that it would cost. But the largest benefit, we imagine, would be to the land. With such constant culture with the plow and hoe, as our crops demand, in the cotton country, our lands must wear out and that very rapidly. Now, if we can find some friendly agent, which could build up and restore our exhausted fields for us while we were exhausting and wearing out another portion, with our cotton crop, we should feel that our case had been greatly met. All this could not perhaps be produced by the clover crop; but nothing else, we suppose, could come so near to it, and with its aid, and such additional, as good managers might provide, we might expect to see our lands grow no worse, and hope for improvement. While at the State Fair at Montgomery, it was our privilege to have a long conversation with Col. Croome, whose experience on his farm in Greene county, Ala., has not been a very short one, in the use and cultivation of the Red Clover. He reports his success as uniform and complete. His experience is, that before the introduction of Clover on his farm, he was a buyer, but that now he has one hundred pounds of pork to the hand, for sale, after ample supplies for the negroes on the farm, and that it costs him so little, that he scarcely knows where it comes from; and besides this he has corn for sale, and makes very full cotton crops. It is demonstrations like these, that make us urge its claims, and insist on a fair trial. We know, moreover, that after the land has been in clover a few years, that its productiveness was increased to an almost incredible extent. We do not ask that any body shall hurt themselves by the trial, but we do insist that it is worth the effort to make a small experiment, so that he who fails, shall not profit by what him, while he that succeeds, shall have discovered a great prize. The first of February is a good time for sowing. Blank lists have not yet been sent out. The plowing for preparation should be very deep, and the pulverization very complete, and the seed should be put in very light, with a brush or light harrow. [Soil of the South.

The Wakulla Times of the 30th ult says:

"COTTON SEED OIL.—The proprietors of one of our linseed oil mills have commenced the manufacture of oil from cotton seed, and about four hundred bags of the seed arrived here this week from Memphis, to be used for this purpose. The oil is used for burning. How far the parties will succeed in their enterprise, remains to be demonstrated. We believe the manufacture of oil from cotton seed has been carried on in the South to a greater or lesser extent, for several years; at Natchez we believe, one of these mills has been in operation for some ten years, but, so far, the oil has not come into general use. The difficulty seems to be in clarifying, as it will not burn in a crude state. Should our enterprising citizens succeed in preparing the oil for sale, it will prove a most important article of commerce.—[Tri-Weekly Current."

"... there is now more cotton seed oil used for lights and other purposes than ever ... of the ... are aware of, to say nothing of the soap, which is of a superior quality, made from the refuse of the oil after clarifying. On this subject a friend, whose statements may be relied on, writes us:

"I notice in a Western paper that a concern in Cincinnati had commenced the manufacture of oil from cotton seed. I will mention a few facts, which may be of use to some body. There is a prejudice against cotton seed oil, ... to a minor, mainly to the fact that the seed have been ... used for that purpose without boiling—the ball imparting to the oil a bitter taste, and a gummy substance, which injured it for drying, and causes a smoke when burning. Notwithstanding this, quantities of this oil have been mixed with linseed and laid ..., and the buyers have been none the wiser for it. Some three years since a friend of mine commenced the manufacture of oil from cotton seed. The seeds were first perfectly boiled, so that nothing but the meat of the seed was used.

"After the oil was extracted, it went through a clarifying process, (a simple one, but very perfect,) leaving it as clear and as pure as the best olive. For burning it has no superior, as it gives a clear brilliant light, without smoke, and for the table in can scarcely be surpassed, for it has deceived, and is still deceiving many good judges of the article. Indeed, my friend assured me that he was unable to fill all the orders for oil put up for the table—but he added: We dare not sell it Cotton Seed Oil, lest it might prejudice the sale.

"We of the Cotton growing States can ... find ourselves perfectly independent of the North for the oil for all purposes."

THE HAVANA WAR WITH SAN DOMINGO.—A letter dated Porto Plata, 19th, says:

DISCOVERY OF A NEW ISLAND.—On the outer verges of Australia of the Ben Nevis, Capt. Heron, in latitude 44.47 south, and in the same longitude as the Crozets, came unexpectedly upon land. Supposing it was the Crozets, he steered one hundred and twenty miles south, and was astonished to find himself at the Crozets. He describes the new island as the highest he had ever seen, for the mountain ridge on it seemed to be as high as the Andes. The Crozets are in line with Prince Edward's Island, Marian and Kerguelin's Island.—[Liverpool Post.

On Monday last, while firing a salute in honor of Gov. Wickliffe's inauguration, Mr. Ellison had his hand blown off, and his arm shattered to the elbow. Mr. Holdridge's hand was also burned. This is the third accident in discharging that cannon within the last year. [Natchitoches Chronicle, 2d.

Later from Texas.

The steamship Charles Morgan, Capt. Sheppard, arrived from Indianola via Galveston yesterday morning. The Civilian of the 5th has the following paragraphs:

Another cargo of railroad iron—making four in all—has arrived from Wales, for the Galveston, Houston and Henderson Railroad.

Last Monday a small boat was capsized on the San Jacinto bay, between New Washington and Lynchburg, and an Irishman known as Barney, and a colored man named Bynum belonging to Col. James Morgan, were both lost. Their death resulted, probably, from cold, by which they were so far benumbed as to render them unable to hold on to the boat or reach the shore. Col. Morgan is probably sixty years of age, and entirely blind. How he survived is almost a miracle. He was taken from the wreck by Mr. Rodger, whose attention was attracted by the cries of the party, but he was only in time to find Col. Morgan on the boat, the others having falling off and sunk before his arrival. Col. Morgan was insensible, and it required some time to restore him to consciousness.

Our latest accounts from the rivers are that both, the Trinity and the Brazos, had fallen some six or eight feet from the first rise, (which went up to about twenty feet in less than two days) but that both rivers had commenced to rise again and were rising at the last dates.

The Victoria Advocate says of the effects of the cold weather in that region:

Considerable damage has been done by severe frosts to plants and shrubbery. The first cold spell, about Christmas, found vegetation green and growing, and of course, more liable to damage than if it had been gradually checked in its growth, and hardened by cold but not freezing weather. Banana plants were killed to the ground, but will probably sprout up again as vigorous as ever. Fig trees, except a few hardy varieties, or those in protected situations, were either killed or greatly injured, and orange and lemon trees shared the same fate. Some of these beautiful trees, (orange and lemon) six or seven years old, and of healthy and vigorous growth, that would probably have produced fruit next season, were entirely destroyed. The choicest varieties of monthly and perpetual blooming roses were also taken by surprise and mostly killed or greatly injured. Apple, pear and peach trees, and the scuppernong grapevine have received no injury.

The San Antonio Texan, of the 31st ult., has the following paragraphs:

An unfortunate affray took place some five miles from our city on last week, by which a man named Richard K. Robertson was killed. As no arrest has been made or evidence elicited, we for the present forbear comments.

We saw a young man with a pair of skates fastened to his feet, skating on the ice in our city on Monday last. The water froze here to an extraordinary thickness, and on this, (Thursday morning) there is an abundance of ice in our streets.

From China and Japan.

By an arrival at San Francisco, dates have been received from Hong-Kong to the 27th of October:

Several vessels had arrived in Hong-Kong from Japan since the last dates. It is reported that the French ship Sycille and the English ship of war Pique, had taken possession of one of the Kurile Islands. The Russian settlements there were destroyed, and the French and English flags planted. The island is about 60 miles long.

We take the following from the friend of China:

We learn by the Tartar that the day after the Japanese convention was ratified at Nagazaki, Admiral Sterling was asked by the Commissioner to give his advice on the best course to be pursued towards the Americans, who it was said, with nine vessels at Simoda, were breaking the peace in the most outrageous manner. The Admiral is reported to have recommended concession to the American demands, provided they were in any way reasonable. An American gentleman writes on this subject:

"I understand that a fleet of twelve sail of American whalers visited Simoda in anticipation of receiving supplies agreeable to the late treaty. Report is they were treated very unkindly, and a determination was made by the Japanese, from some cause, not to furnish them with any supplies.

"The Americans were not to be trifled with; they took what they wanted and paid in dollars at their fair weight; the one third the value, as fixed on by the treaty, they would have no knowledge of. It is said that guns had been fired, and Japanese killed."

Our local provincial reporter tells us that the turbulent spirits of Sun-tuhin, Poon-yo and Heang-shan have determined on taking possession of the Island of Liutin, and there keeping the standard of rebellion flying until they have succeeded in the subjugation of Canton. It appears that large numbers of suspicious junks have been seen near Liutin, and we have no doubt but if left to fight the battle out without foreign interference, the Mandarins will go to the wall. So determined are these people to avenge the bloodshed in Canton this year, that any wanton movement on our part will surely result in something more dreadful than Colonists anticipate.

From Canton, we learn that the city gates are all closed again, and as a precautionary measure against internal enemies, a fresh registration is being made; tallies of a different description from those hitherto in use being delivered to all on the books. It would be well for our Registrar General here to take a lesson from the Canton Government, insisting on each Chinese resident wearing a tally round his neck, (a little piece of varnished wood about three inches by two,) recording the wearer's name, his age, and the party answerable for his conduct, with the seal of the magistrate granting the label.

On the 6th and 8th of October, there was a great battle fought between the Imperialists and the insurgent, Chan-Hun-Liang, who had more than ten thousand men, and fought against the city of Ng-Chew. The insurgents fought bravely, and having no ladders with which they could ascend up to the city, they made the corpses into heaps, and stood on them in order to throw powder shells into the city, by which they took advantage and entered. They had before employed iron chains to prevent the Imperialists' ships from coming into the harbor, and had likewise employed more than one thousand pieces of powder in bamboo pipes. The Imperialists, not knowing what had been done, sailed their ships into the harbor, when the Insurgents took up the ropes and chains and set the fire pipes, upon which a great many of the Imperialists were burnt up. Thus they drove back the troops and took the city.

From the Sandwich Islands.

Files of Honolulu papers to the 29th of December, have been received in San Francisco:

The King had appointed the 1st of January to be kept as a day of thanksgiving and prayer. The King had also approved of the appointment of Daniel C. Bigelow, appointed by the Commissioner of the United States to act as Consul at Lahaina, in place of George M. Chase, deceased, until the pleasure of the President could be known.

THE VOLCANIC ERUPTION.—The inhabitants of the thriving town of Hilo are in great apprehension lest the stream of lava from the recent eruption should overwhelm them. A correspondent writes that the lava approaching Hilo "progresses like that issuing from Vesuvius under similar circumstances—that is to say, a wall of cooled lava is formed at the ends and sides of the stream, which, on moderate slopes, remains for some time stationary, or nearly so, and when the pressure arising from the flow of molten lava behind it becomes too great, the wall is burst, and the lava runs out like the molten iron from a furnace, when it is drawn. This being exposed to the atmosphere, soon cools, and in a little time, by the operation being repeated, another wall of cooled lava is formed as before." The writer advises to tap the side-walls of the stream, so as to divert it from its course on the town of Hilo.

Dr. Kane's Arctic Expedition.

To the Editor of the London Times.—Sir,—Dr. Kane's official dispatches, with the chart of his Arctic discoveries, are now before the public. As I apprehended, they clear away all the obscurity contained in the newspaper accounts, and unquestionably place Dr. Kane in the foremost rank of Arctic explorers.

Had he heard the hearty cheer which, at the suggestion of the Hydrographer, was raised to his honor last night, in the room of the Geographical Society, by the crowded audience who heard his modest, yet extraordinary narrative, he would, I am sure, have been highly gratified.

Having heard, from friends in the United States, that a letter of mine in your columns has had the effect of leading to an erroneous idea that Dr. Kane's arduous and heroic undertaking was not duly appreciated in this country, I shall feel greatly obliged by the publication of this communication, which I trust will have the effect of assuring the gallant doctor that he is highly esteemed and admired by all who take an interest in Arctic exploration.

I may be permitted to add an interesting fact which does not appear in his official dispatch to the Admiralty, but which he communicates in a letter to a friend. It is, that although the temperature at the winter quarters of the expedition was colder than has ever been experienced in the Arctic regions, that of the open water to the north was comparatively high, and a great variety of animal life was seen, including whales and plant-eating birds.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,
C. R. WELD.

DISCOVERY OF A NEW ISLAND.—On the outer verges of Australia of the Ben Nevis, Capt. Heron, in latitude 44.47 south, and in the same longitude as the Crozets, came unexpectedly upon land. Supposing it was the Crozets, he steered one hundred and twenty miles south, and was astonished to find himself at the Crozets. He describes the new island as the highest he had ever seen, for the mountain ridge on it seemed to be as high as the Andes. The Crozets are in line with Prince Edward's Island, Marian and Kerguelin's Island.—[Liverpool Post.

On Monday last, while firing a salute in honor of Gov. Wickliffe's inauguration, Mr. Ellison had his hand blown off, and his arm shattered to the elbow. Mr. Holdridge's hand was also burned. This is the third accident in discharging that cannon within the last year. [Natchitoches Chronicle, 2d.

Foreign News by the Steamship Arabia.

The steamship Arabia arrived at Halifax on the 31st. The New York papers publish full telegraphic reports of her news, from which we extract the following:

The Cunard steamship Asia arrived at Liverpool early on Sunday morning, 13th ult., but lay off several hours for want of water.

The Collins' steamer Baltic arrived at Liverpool at 11 o'clock on Thursday morning, the 17th ult. Four hours after leaving New York, a terrific gale sprang up from the North and East, and continued all day and night. She experienced severe easterly weather all of the passage, and lost one of her boats.

The Union did not touch at Southampton, on the way to New York, but sailed from Havre direct.

The grand news of the week is that Russia agrees to negotiate on the terms proposed by the Allies.

The first announcement was made from Vienna by telegraph to the London Times, in the following words:

"Russia accepts the Allied propositions unconditionally. This is authentic."

The dispatch caused an immense sensation. The funds rose three per cent., and cotton one farthing. In the other markets a panic reigned.

Next day the government published a dispatch from Minister Seymour, at Vienna, as follows: "Russia agrees to accept the Allied proposals as the basis of negotiations." This qualified announcement curbed the excitement, and alarmists begin to fear that Russia merely seeks to gain time by deceptive negotiations. Meanwhile funds remain steady. Previous to the above announcement, the Vienna papers represented the state of affairs as most serious, unexpected and alarming, and that all the personnel of the Austrian Embassy had received orders to quit St. Petersburg, and the Russian Embassy was ordered to leave Vienna.

The following is the text of the Austrian propositions submitted to the Russian Government by Count Esterhazy:

I. Danubian Principalities.

Complete abolition of the Russian protectorate. The Danubian Principalities shall receive an organization conformable to their wishes, to their wants, to their interests, and this new organization, respecting which the population itself will be consulted, shall be recognized by the contracting powers, and sanctioned by the Sultan as emanating from his sovereign initiative. No state shall be able, under any pretext whatever, under any form of protectorate, to interfere in the question of the internal administration of the Principalites; they shall adopt a definitive permanent system, demanded by their geographical position, and no impediment can be made to their fortifying, in the interest of their safety, in such manner as they may deem advisable, their territory against foreign aggression.

In exchange for the strong places and territories occupied by the allied armies, Russia consents to a rectification of her frontier with Turkey in Europe. It would commence in the vicinity of Chotyin, following the line of the mountains, which extend in a south-easterly direction and terminate at lake Sasik. The line (trace) shall be definitively regulated by the general treaty, and the conceded territory would return to the Principalities and to the sovereignty of the Porte.

II. Danube.

The freedom of the Danube, and of its mouths shall be efficaciously assured by European institutions, in which the contracting powers shall be equally represented, except the particular positions of the lords of the soil on the banks (des riverains) which shall be regulated upon the principles established by the Act of the Congress of Vienna as regards the navigation of rivers. Each of the contracting powers shall have the right to keep one or two small vessels stationed at the mouths of the rivers destined to assure the execution of the regulations relative to the freedom of the Danube.

III. Neutralization of the Black Sea.

This sea shall be open to merchant vessels—closed to war navies (marine militaries). Consequently, no naval military arsenals shall be created or maintained there. The protection of the commercial and maritime interests of all nations shall be assured in the respective ports of the Black Sea, by the establishment of institutions conformable to international law, and to the customs sanctioned in such matters. The two powers which hold the coast, engage themselves to maintain only the number of light vessels of a fixed force, necessary for their coast service. This convention, concluded separately between these two powers, shall form part as an annex of the general treaty after receiving the approval of the contracting parties. This separate convention cannot be annulled or modified without the consent of the signatories of the general treaty. The closing of the Straits will oilmit the exception applicable to the Stationary vessels mentioned in the preceding article.

IV. Christian Subjects of the Porte.

The immunities of the Rayah subjects of the Porte shall be religiously preserved, without infringement on the independence and dignity of the Sultan's crown. As deliberations are taking place between Austria, France, Great Britain, and the Sublime Porte to assure to the Christian subjects of the Sultan their religious and political rights, Russia shall be invited, when peace is made, to associate herself thereto.

V.

The belligerent powers reserve to themselves the right which appertains to them, of producing in an European interest speciel conditions over and above the four guarantees.

The actual circumstances were, that when Count Esterhazy handed to Count Nesselrode, at St. Petersburgh, the Austrian Allied note of December 2d, he said that he was not authorized to enter into a discussion, but if the note was not accepted unconditionally before January 8th, he and all the Austrian Embassy must leave St. Petersburgh. To prevent this, Count Nesselrode communicated with Vienna direct, and January 11th, Prince Gortschakoff had a talk with Count Buol, in which Gortschakoff produced a memorandum, expressing a general inclination on the part of Russia to negotiate, but proposed certain alterations in the programme. Count Buol formally received the document next day, Friday the 12th—but inasmuch as it did not contain an acceptance, pure and simple, of the propositions, Austria could make no reply without the concurrence of France and England. The ambassadors of those powers accordingly sent to Paris and London, and received for reply that the Western Powers had no motive to give up a decision which had already been carefully considered, and further, that if by January 18th, Russia did not accept the ultimatum, Count Esterhazy and the Austrian Legation would leave St. Petersburgh, and Austria would immediately seek to obtain the armed co-operation of the Germanic Diet against Russia. During the week that elapsed between Russia's first and second reply, intense apprehension existed in Vienna, although without sufficient cause, for the Austrian Cabinet had taken the precaution to notify the Western Powers that, notwithstanding the rupture of diplomatic relations, Austria would not be in a position to commence hostilities this year. On the 16th, all apprehensions were set at rest by the announcement above stated, that Russia agrees to negotiate on the terms proposed.

There is very little other news.

The Crimea.

From the Crimea there is nothing important.—Numerous ambuseades of Cossacks were distributed around the Allied camp, but vigilance prevented many stragglers being captured. Several additional explosions had been made in the Sebastopol Docks, and they were nearly destroyed. France and England each reserve a gate, by which they were enclosed, as a trophy.

The Invalide Russe publishes a dispatch from Prince Gortschakoff, saying that a party of French, wearing white cloaks to prevent their being seen in the snow, advanced by night and surprised Baklar, bayonetted the outposts and retreated when the Russian reserves came up.

General Codrington's latest dispatch is dated Jan. 1st, and merely reports the health of the army to be good.

Baron Seebach left Berlin on the 13th, on his return to Paris.

Sweden continues her warlike preparations.

The Copenhegan official journal denies the existence of any circular repudiating the Swedish alliance on the part of Denmark.

St. Petersburg letters say that Marshal Paskiewitch has bequeathed his dying injunction to the Emperor to make peace. He would never have given this advice to Nicholas, whose battles he had fought, but to the young Emperor, who had no hand in raising the war, he urged the policy of peace.

The French Council of War continues its sitting at Paris. Two commissions, one for the Army and one for the Navy, are appointed to prepare a report.

Admiral Lyons and General Canrobert are the members for the Army, and Admiral Dundas and General Neil for the Navy. There had been a discussion relating to the withdrawal of the Allied force from the Crimea, retaining only Kamiesch, Eupatoria and Balaclava, and making a campaign up the rivers of the Southern Provinces of Russia. The Admirals opposed the plan, inasmuch as it would take six months to remove the material of the past campaign from the Crimea.

The Baltic.

A Dantzic letter of the 11th says, that the American ship Washington, which lay all summer at Copenhagen, had landed her cargo on the ice and conveyed it in sleighs into Itiga. The American ship Telegraph, is reported in the Categat, and another American vessel at Revel.

Asia.

Constantinople intelligence under date of the 7th inst., reports Mouravieff advancing in Asia. His advanced posts are within three hours march of Erzeroum. The campaign of the Turkish army in Imeretia, is indefinitely abandoned, in order to cover Erzroum. Omer Pacha's troops have begun to arrive at Trebizonde. The Egyptian contingent had already embarked for there. Omar Pacha had tendered his resignation, but the Sultan refused to accept it. Omar was in disgrace at Constantinople. Not long since the official Commissioner for Widows and Orphans applied to attach Omar's property in Constantinople, for the behoof of his children by his first wife. In compliment to Omar, the attachment was not permitted, but since the fall of Kars, the Commissioner has taken the property. The Turkish Government has published the account of the fall of Kars, tending to throw the entire responsibility on Omar. Hussein Col. Simmons to defend him at Constantinople, but Simmons finding himself supplanted there, left for England. Omar blames the Turkish Ministry, and especially Riza Pacha, for withdrawing supplies.

There is some talk that Omar Pacha will be sent as Turkish Minister to England.

Abd-El-Kader has arrived in Damascus, to occupy the palace presented to him by the Sultan.

A Paris commercial letter says the French whaler Espadon was chased two days, near Kurillies Island, in the Pacific, by a Russian corvette, but escaped in a snow storm.

Great Britain.

Home politics are quiet. Palmerston's Ministry is gaining adherents in Parliament. The hope of peace throws all other news into the shade.

The President's Message is, of course, variously commented upon, but the general opinion was favorable. It is considered moderate in tone, yet expressing the President's views with dignity and precision. No one here anticipates a rupture between the two countries.

A treaty has been made with Japan, equaling to British commerce the ports of Nagasaki and Kupokadi, the same as to the Americans.

Hon. Henry Goulbourn, Ex-Chancellor of the Exchequer, is dead.

The Countess Downger of Errol daughter of William IV and the celebrated Mrs. Jordan, is also dead. She was 55 years old.

The fourth consignment of machinery for the government small arm factory, was landed at Woolwich on the 15th instant, from Robbins, Lawrence & Co., Windsor, Vermont.

An exhibition of the capabilities of the Baltic's life boats was made at Liverpool, and found satisfactory.

France.

There was a grand review at Paris, on the 15th, n the troops from the Crimea, when the Duke of Cambridge, in the name of Queen Victoria, presented the British Crimean medal to 14,000 French troops.

The Moniteur publishes the report of the Minister of Finance. The report says the financial condition of the country is excellent, and that the only danger is the temptation to extravagance, but hopes the Emperor will postpone expenditures on all enterprises except those of emergency.

Three new Senators were shortly to be appointed, which rumor says are, the Duke of Valmy, Duke of Malle, and the Marquis of Bethisey.

Portugal.

Heavy rains and freshets in the Douro had caused considerable damage.

The Cortes would meet on the 19th instant.

Spain.

Maria Christina is about to marry her second daughter to Prince Draga, a rich nobleman.

Germany.

Several princes of the Germanic Federation are about to assemble at Berlin, to discuss existing political relations.

Austria.

The Emperor has signed a decree relating to Protestants. It is liberal except so far as it prohibits the marriage of Catholic priests converted to Protestantism.

Government has been obliged already to restrain Italian Bishops in their administration of the Concordat.

Persia.

The Persian official journal announces that the Persian Government is determined to maintain neutrality.

SHIPWRECK.—The schooner Martha Moore, Styron, master, of Plymouth, North Carolina, arrived at this port yesterday from Barbadoes, reports having, on Monday, the 28th ult., fallen in with the wreck of a fore and aft schooner about ten miles south of Timballer Island, in about ten fathoms water. When discovered she was on her beam ends with her mast head just out of water. Her house was carried away, which enabled Capt. S. to discover that she was laden with dressed yellow pine boards. One man, stout built, (supposed to be the captain) was lashed to the main chains, and another, a negro, lashed to the rigging and hanging inside the rail—both were dead, supposed to have been frozen to death, as the Martha Moore experienced a heavy squall and storm with intensely cold weather on the Friday previous, at which time it is supposed the vessel capsized. The captain was marked with small pox, had the letters T. G., 1799 marked in a heart on his arm with a foul anchor underneath. The only things found on his person were two keys, apparently those of a medicine chest and desk, and a piece of a New York newspaper. A number of birds flying around the bodies induced Captain S. to sink them. The schooner had a gilt stern, but most of the gilding had been knocked off, and the only letters of her name that could be discovered were MA. She was eastern built, had "log waist" and "quick" work forward, painted straw color inside, black outside, and a coppered bottom. [Franklin (La.) Banner, 7th.

SILENT THANKS.—A little boy was munching a bit of gingerbread; his mother asked who gave it to him. "Miss Johnson gave it to me." And did you thank her for it?" inquired the mother. "Y-e-s, I did, but I did not tell her so!"

15,000 Acres of Land for Sale.

The lands are situated in Morehouse parish, Louisiana, and in what is known as the "Dastrop Grant." They are of the richest quality of alluvial soil, unsurpassed in fertility by any lands in the South, and fully capable of producing from one and a half to two bales, or fifty to sixty bushels of corn to the acre. They lie near the Ouachita and Bœuf rivers—good navigable streams—and likewise in convenient distance of the route of the Vicksburg, Shreveport and Texas Railroad, now in course of construction and hastening to a rapid completion. A portion of these lands are highly improved and in a flourishing state of cultivation; the country in which they lie is very healthy, the water is excellent and abundant, and altogether they will be found to possess greater advantages and present inducements to purchasers than any lands now offered for sale in the Southern country. They will be sold in quantities to suit purchasers, and on the most favorable terms. Titles perfect.

For further particulars inquire of the undersigned either personally at his residence in Prairie Jefferson Morehouse parish, or by letter addressed to Point Jefferson, Morehouse parish, Louisiana.

New Principle! No Poison!

Rhodes' Fever and Ague Cure,

OR ANTIDOTE TO MALARIA,

FOR THE PREVENTION AND CURE OF

Fever and Ague, or Chill and Fever; Dumb Ague, and other Intermittent and Remittent Fevers; also of Bilious Fevers, accompanied by Typhoid Symptoms; Typhoid Fever, Yellow Fever, Ship and Jail Fever, General Debility, Night Sweats, and all other forms of disease

WHICH HAVE A COMMON ORIGIN IN

MALARIA OR MIASMA.

This subtle atmospheric poison, which at certain seasons is unavoidably inhaled at every breath, is the same in character wherever it exists—north, south, east or west—and will everywhere yield to this newly-discovered ANTIDOTE, which neutralizes the poison, completely purifies the system, and thus entirely removes all the causes of disease.

The proprietor distinctly claims these extraordinary results from its use:

It will protect any resident or traveler, even in the most sickly or swampy localities, from any ague or bilious disease whatever, or any injury from constantly inhaling Malaria or Miasma.

It will instantly check the ague in persons who have suffered for any length of time, from ONE DAY TO TWENTY YEARS, so that they need never have ANOTHER CHILL, by continuing its use according to directions.

It will immediately relieve all the distressing results of bilious or ague diseases, such as general debility, night sweats, etc. The patient at once begins to recover appetite and strength, and continues until a permanent and radical cure is effected. And as a proof that it is

WORTHY OF PUBLIC CONFIDENCE,

Because of its

SINGULAR AND ENTIRE HARMLESSNESS.

The following certificate from one of the most celebrated chemists in the United States is attached to every bottle:

New York, June 11, 1855.

"I have made a chemical examination of Rhodes' Fever and Ague Cure, or Antidote to Malaria, and have tested it for Arsenic, Mercury, Quinine and Strychnine, but have not found a particle of either in it, nor have I found any substance in its composition that would prove injurious to the constitution.

JAMES R. CHILTON, M. D., Chemist."

This allows of its

FREE USE AS A PREVENTIVE

by which all persons may thus be sure of entire freedom from the above named diseases, no matter how sickly the season or swampy the locality.

PROOFS OF EFFICACY are frequently published, and the confidence of the public is asked only in proportion to its actual merits wherever introduced and used. These only are relied upon to prove its worth.

One or two bottles will answer for ordinary cases; some may require more. Directions printed in German, French and Spanish, accompany each bottle. Price One Dollar.

Payment to be made at the close of each term: Board, including lodging, washing, lights and fuel, can be procured in the village and immediate neighborhood at ten dollars per month. Students will be received at any time during the session, and will be charged only from the time of their entrance to the end of the term. We would however, respectfully urge all parents or guardians who design placing their daughters or wards in the institution, to do so at the commencement of a session, as it will add much to the individual interest of the pupils, and the general prosperity of the school, facilitating, as it will, a proper arrangement of the various classes in their respective branches of study.

School books, stationery, &c., may be had at any of the various stores in the village, at the usual rates.

Reports will be sent to parents and guardians quarterly, in which will be stated the health, improvement, social and moral department of their daughters or wards, with such other information as may be deemed important.

As the design of the Faculty is to render the instruction thorough, and lay the foundation of a substantial education, no young lady will be permitted to rank higher than her attainments will justly entitle her, nor to pass into another department in the course of instruction without having made sufficient proficiency in the preceding studies.

The government of the school is to be understood as that of authority—though parental and mild, yet decided and firm. The institution, in a religious point of view will be conducted without reference to sectarian influence.

Pupils will be required to attend church at least once on the Sabbath, and recite a Bible lesson on each Monday morning.

The scholastic year, embracing ten months, will be divided into two equal terms of five months, one immediately succeeding the other.

The first session commencing on the first Wednesday in October, and closing the last week in February; the second session commencing on the first Wednesday in March, and closing the last week in July. At which time the annual examination will be held, and the usual rewards and honors conferred. The vacation will embrace the months of August and September.

All applications for admission of pupils, &c., to be made to the president of the College.

DEFENCE OF OLD LAGRANGE TRUSTEES.

Mr. Editor—Your paper, containing the report of the Committee of the Alahama Conference on Education, has reached me, and from the remarks alluding to the Trustees of LaGrange College, I infer that there is a great mistake existing in the minds of many in reference to the action of the Trustees of that college in regard to the Conference.

The mistake seems to be, that many are of the opinion that the Board of Trustees had taken action to sever the relations which existed between themselves and the Conferences. The fact is, that the last action of the Board on this subject was to declare the institution a Methodist College.

In reference to the removal to Florence, they (the Trustees) never regarded the action of the Conferences as mandatory, but simply advisary; and I am of opinion that it will puzzle any one to make the resolutions published by the Tennessee Conference anything but advisary. Now if this be the correct view of the subject, why was the attempt made to move the college over the heads of the Trustees? And I ask, in all candor, why the reasons which actuated them (the Trustees) were never sought for and laid before the public, so that all might have the opportunity of judging for themselves?

This would have been a fair and Christian mode of proceeding; and we feel that justice to this Board requires, that since you have published the report, which seems to implicate them, you should let them be heard—at least so far as the facts are concerned.

When this agitation about removal commenced, no member of the Board, as far as I knew, ever dreamed that the Conferences intended to take this matter out of their hands, and manage it without their consent. And, if the Trustees were anything else than mere "men of straw," they must have acted according to the best light they had—and so they did; but they have never been heard, notwithstanding the Conferences have declared that the relations which existed between them are severed. If you will allow me, I will state a few of the reasons which prevented the Trustees from acting in accordance with the advice of the Conferences. The first great reason was, that the Trustees were of opinion that the college could not be removed without doing great public injustice, it (LaGrange) being a favorite location with many; especially those who had given their money to build up and sustain it in its times of greatest trial. The citizens of LaGrange and vicinity raised a subscription of $10,000 as a bonus for the location of a college at that place. Now, could any set of Trustees, knowing this to be so, remove the college without restoring the money, and do right? Here was one of the chief difficulties. Many of those donors were alive and opposed to removal; besides that, the charter located the college upon LaGrange Hill, and the Legislature site only once in two years. There being no session last year, no time was allowed to make application to that body by this Board, but a college was opened in Florence, called "LaGrange College at Florence," and an effort was made generally by those who had hitherto been considered its best friends, to break down LaGrange. When the faculty left, the Trustees endeavored to continue the relations which up to that time had existed between the Conferences and the college, by electing a distinguished member of the Conference as President. He declining, on the ground that he could not honorably accept, any further efforts in that direction were discontinued, and the Rev. Felix Johnson, A. M., was elected President.

The Trustees were of opinion that had they removed to Florence without the sanction of law, they would have forfeited their existence as a corporate body, and also every species of property held under the same. Another reason was, they had just borrowed from the State the 16th section fund, in which the college is located, and had secured the payment of the same to the township by a mortgage on the entire college property. Now, to have removed the college, would have destroyed the security given for the payment of the borrowed money, which would have been an act of bad faith and very bad morals. The last point which I will now notice is, they did not remove the college, because they believed that a college ought and could be sustained at LaGrange; and they have demonstrated the truth of their opinion by the success which has attended their every effort since the attempt to remove. Yes, though all the faculty left, and avowed that the college was removed to Florence, and advertisements in the Church papers were sent out that LaGrange College, by the proper authorities, had been removed to Florence, and although a new faculty had to be constituted, still not even a session was lost, and the second session of that year numbered a full average of students in attendance.

Thus has the fact been demonstrated that LaGrange College, Franklin county, Ala., is a favorite seat of learning.

Many unpleasant feelings have been the result of this matter. But now, as the people of Florence have taken a second thought and given up the idea of calling their college LaGrange, and have taken the name of "Florence Wesleyan University," I hope a better spirit may prevail, and justice be done to all parties. For this reason, Mr. Editor, I have thought proper to send you this document, and I hope it may have the desired effect, to put the public right as to the action of the Trustees, and that men's minds may be disabused as to the reasons actuating the Board of Trustees of LaGrange College.

A TRUSTEE.

COURTLAND, ALA., Jan. 31, 1856.

ON RASH JUDGING.

Every day convinces us of the inestimable value of that trait in Christian charity which is opposed to hastiness of judgment. Perhaps more strife and confusion has arisen from pronouncing upon the conduct of others, in view of what is termed in law, circumstantial evidence, than from any other source of human contention. He who is governed by a truly Christian spirit, will always wait for all the facts necessary to a sound opinion, before he decides against his neighbor. He will never decide upon a case at its first presentation, to the prejudice of parties involved. He will wait awhile. He will make further inquiries. He will ascertain beyond reasonable doubt the truth of a tale as first told. He will inquire if there is not a possible gap in it, which, when filled, will change its whole nature. There are some elements which, in the abstract, are perfectly poisen, but become by union with their naturally affinitive principles, the most healthful of substances in the concrete. The man of true charity does not believe a tale in the abstract, but tries to get at it in its concrete form, and view it in its necessary relations.

Indeed, we may say that no practical truth is a truth in the abstract. Truth is a concrete thing. Every fact has its relations, from which separated, it either has no significance or a perverted one. Hence, almost all abstractionists turn fanatics. Hence they are harsh, bitter, denunciatory, unscriptable. Dogmatism and persecution are inseparable associates. For careful investigation, free inquiry upsets dogmatism; and its only refuge, therefore, is to crush out free inquiry by force. Dogmatism will not argue, therefore, but anathematize. Shimei dogmatized. He rashly concluded, because David was in trouble, therefore David was utterly God-abandoned. So Shimei set to cursing David. The Pharisees dogmatized. They concluded hastily that Christ was not the Messiah, because he did not meet their expectations. So the Pharisees crucified Christ.

Rash judgment leads to lying. Part of the truth is falsehood; he who greedily devours and runs off with half a truth, comes at last to love lying, and he "that loveth" is one with he "that maketh a lie." "Without" the temple of truth are all such greedy "dogs."

It is the part of true philosophy to investigate with patience. Bacon directs all the artillery of his great Common Sense against hasty generalization from partial induction. Well might he. Rash judgment, hasty thinking, has been the perpetual bane of all genuine science. It has been fruitful of all error in physics, ethics, and doctrinal theology. There are about one thousand millions of heads in the world. Gall examined, say a few hundred—forthwith phrenology. A few hundred, and many of these hysterical cases have given birth to Mesmerism. As to Spiritualism, it is but a mushroom of yesterday. Then, there, is modern geology—a few holes—some tolerably deep—have been dug in an earth which has been convulsed, until its early identity is almost a shadow; and lo! Biblical critics must torture Hebrew and patch up Scripture, to make the old Mosaic cosmogony conformable to the speculations of a science not yet upon its legs.

But look at the wars national, social, personal, physical, metaphysical and theological, which fill the earth, all because the combatants would not think twice before they spoke once.

Patience! Patience! Wait awhile. Make ready before you fire. When you fire be sure not to mistake a man for a stump. Nor fire simply for the sake of a noise, reckless of the effect of your discharge.

Judge not rashly, but judge righteous judgment—herein, dear reader, is a vast amount of practical Christianity, for which you can find use, every day of your life.—[Memphis Christian Advocate.]

During the recent cold weather in the North many papers complained that brutal sportsmen took advantage of the starving quail when driven by the snow to the stacks and barns. The Boston Post say that no true sportsman would think of firing into a covey of quails under such circumstances any sooner than he would into a flock of school girls.

LETTER FROM CHINA.

One of the best letters yet furnished by the Missionary correspondents is to be found below, from the Nashville Advocate. It seems to us a mistaken policy of our Constitution—by which the Board is governed—that money cannot be expended for building houses. Can we expect heathens to do this? And yet what can the Missionary do out of doors? Never was a nobler band sent out by any Church than Taylor, Jenkins, Bolton, Lambuth, Cunnyngham and Kelly.

SHANGHAI, Oct. 13, 1855.

MR. EDITOR—I have made but few communications to the Advocate during my residence of little more than one year in China, because I have felt that I had little to write of which would be apt to prove of interest to the Church at home, or of value to your mission here. As I have, however, an item of good news to give, as well as a complaint to make, I have concluded to spend an hour to-night in communing with your readers.

Last Sabbath—the first in October—with the Friday and Saturday preceding, may bear chronicled upon their records, for the doings of Methodism in the Middle Kingdom, the first Quarterly Meeting Methodism has ever held within its so supposed world-wide limits. And we, who have seen the old banner spread so gallantly out upon the western breezes, and our impetuous hosts storm with such ardor the enemy's redoubts, while drilled beneath its colors, could but feel our hearts swell and beat with impulses more hopeful than was their wont, as we stood by the staff upon which, for the first time, it unfolded to the Orient.

Nor were the exercises of the Sabbath of a character to detract from the [illegible] which the occasion had begotten in our hearts. Brother Cunnyngham had preached the two days previously, and at eleven o'clock in the morning, when the principal services for the day came on in the afternoon, commencing at three o'clock, introduced by a lecture on the Nature of Water-Baptism, by Brother C., followed by the reading of our baptismal service in Chinese, and the baptism of a woman who has long been a servant in Brother C.'s family, and was with Dr. Taylor before his leaving. Brother C., who has of course the most intimate acquaintance with her, believes her not only to be a thorough convert from idolatry, but a true and rejoicing Christian truth, on the being and nature of God. May it not then seem a little strange to some of us nearest the scene of action, to see, ever and anon, some new item or opinion with reference to the late development from the Tai-ping-wang adherents, usually relating to the great amount of deception which they and their early representatives had practiced upon the world?

You will doubtless hardly expect me, after what has been said above, to give any new facts, pro or con, in reference to this movement, towards which the Church has looked with so much intense desire. I have only to add, that while there was extravagance possibly in the expectations entertained by some early letter-writers, that there are yet some sober thinkers in China who believe the truth of which the Rebels are possessed to be of value to the prospects of a pure Christianity. I had a teacher, some months ago, who could say from personal knowledge, and with apparent regret, that the Rebels not only dismantled Nankin, when they entered it, of every idol, but also destroyed what are more sacred—the ancestral tablets; his, as he was residing in the city at the time, being among the number.

We can well perceive how the highly excited hopes of earlier writers could have led them too far; but it is difficult to fathom the object of later writers, who would destroy recklessly the hopes of our people at home, together with their ardent support, by prayers and money, of the missions which have already been established here. To think too well of our prospects, is not, in all respects, to be desired; but let not a darker cloud than is necessary be made to encircle them.

That our Church may have some cause for disappointment, in the apparent results which have arisen out of her expenditures in men and money, is—there be blame attached to this matter, it must fall back upon those who have failed to give us the funds to erect buildings and carry out plans of operation absolutely necessary to the success of any mission. Our efforts are crippled, from the simple, yet, to us, stern fact, that there is not a dollar in our mission treasury; and even the salaries of our missionaries are, this year, considerably behind. These are not the days of miracles; and if missionaries expected to be fruitful in results worthy of the position they occupy in the great plan of man's redemption, they must be actively, nobly, aye, religiously, supplied with the means necessary not only for their healthful life, but effective working.

Yours, &c., D. C. KELLEY.

The baptism was followed by an able, earnest, and, I might be allowed to add, from the attention with which the people listened, impressive sermon, from our native preacher, Liow. The discourse was full of zeal, and addressed very pointedly against the great outstanding vices of his countrymen. He is as decidedly an anti-opium man as you are anti-liquor; and, as his physical capacity is about a match for yours, mauls away against it with about as much might as you are accustomed to do. The services closed with a warm exhortation from Dr. Jenkins, in which he enforced the necessity of at once believing the truths which had been unfolded to their view during the hour.

Such scenes as these are nice enough, and throw a halo of delight around the tedious labors of your missionaries here; yet we can but feel a little pained amidst them, when we feel that there is a probability that the Church at home may be looking on our stay here as a matter of rather doubtful utility. While this pain is in no wise diminished when we find in religious papers from home—which ought to be the guardians of pure foreign as well as home intelligence for the people—repeated statements which are calculated to cast a chilling effect over the view with which the Church may look on Christianity and its doings in China.

There appears to us, who are on the ground, to be a very careless habit abroad, among the papers at home, in reference to publishing items from China, many of which items we had thought those who have kept themselves informed upon the important movements which have been occurring in this Empire for the last several years would have been prepared to have decided upon at once as preposterous. We do not bring this charge against your paper singly, or our complaints would have been laid before you privately; but against many of your associates, who, we hope, will see, through you, our complaints.

We would seek to disabuse the public mind of the idea, no matter how slightly entertained, that the prospects of Christianity are a whit less bright in China at the present moment than they have been in reality at any former time; while we add the decidedly affirmative fact, that her march at several of the posts is undoubtedly onward.

Another thing which has been more than any thing else the fault, as we fear, of many of your readers at home, is a want in distinguishing properly between the great Taiping-wang rebellion and the local rebellion at Shanghai, which had, so far as we are able to trace, no connection with the former. As a consequence, the former has shared in the abuse which writers have deemed proper to heap so plentifully on the latter. Now, the scarcet wing of the great rebellion is so far distant from Shanghai, and is so thoroughly disconnected with it, that since the arrival of your last missionaries at Shanghai, there has not been one single reliable development in reference to the doctrines of the Tai-ping-wang camp received here. The last, prior to their arrival, brought (with a knowledge of many corruptions) the assertion, in books circulated by the Rebels, of many Christian truths. We have just read the translation of a pamphlet, written some years ago, by Dr. Medhurst, and, with but little change, reprinted by the Rebels, full of wholesome

A Day with the Insane.

A VISIT TO BLACKWELL'S ISLAND.

Some celebrated philosopher thinks we are a world of lunatics, differing only in degrees of insanity. He came to his conclusion, doubtlessly, upon contrasting the comparatively rational and consistent deportment of the so-called insane, who are confined within the walls of the mad-house, with that of the so-called sane, who stride the earth at large, carrying with them their bundles of crotchets and pet isms, and thrusting them in the face of all they meet without stint or mercy.

To some extent, undoubtedly, the theory of this philosopher and his disciples is true. By far the largest half of insane in the world are to be found without the confines of the lunatic asylum. But they manage to preserve so much "method in their madness" that they are considered perfectly "harmless" and so permitted to go at large, very much to the detriment of simple, honest people, who listen to their warped, perverted teachings.

Prompted by my thirst for viewing human nature in its every form, I took the steamboat "King Philip" a day or two since, with "permit" in hand—so politely given me by Mr Kellock—for "Blackwell's Island."

The steamboat was crowded with its usual motley groups. Some like myself going merely as "lookers on in" Bedlam; but the greater part as applicants for the bounty of our charitable city.

One poor creature, brought in the cabin by a gentleman and placed by the stove, looked as though she could scarcely live to leave the boat. She was emaciated to the last degree, and her hollow cough and the two bright spots upon either cheek told the disease.

She sank down in her chair, too feeble to look around her or heed the discomfort of her own situation. I untied her hood, and brushing off the snow and wet from it, hung it to dry. Her shoes were wetted through and full of holes, and, I thought as I arranged a place on the stove-hearth for her to dry her feet, "What would some of the Fifth avenue fine ladies say to having their delicately shod feet as wet and cold as this poor consumptive's?"

I learned her history. The gentleman who came with her and left her had brought her over several years ago in her youth and health as nurse to his children. But the youth and health gave way, and growing to be only a burthen instead of help in his family, she was given over to the tender mercies of strangers, like a sick, worn out horse turned adrift. So goes the world.

Bellevue took her in, and when she leaves Bellevue it will be in a pine coffin.

There was a fresh looking young Irish wife her three months old baby that laughed and crowed for all the world as impudently and self-complacently as though it were the President's son, and had been born in the august White House instead of in the city Poor House. She did not know whose child of a poor Irish [illegible] to be proud of, if nothing else. The young mother had the proof of that with her. Her story was the type of hundreds of others. She had been in a "good place" for several years, when in an evil hour she married "her lady's" coachman. The man was wild, and like too many of the "first" men of the present day who are above this renegade husband in station. The young wife was deserted, the husband going to parts unknown, and his son and heir was born in Bellevue. Unable to work with the child in her arms, the sad young mother was then going to Blackwell's Island Alms House to rear the child.

There were several other melancholy looking women with small babies in their arms on board, who were, without doubt, bound on the same errand. I did not question them, however, of their histories.

I had never before been in the Insane Asylum upon the Island, and what struck me at first sight most forcibly, throughout the whole large building, was its cheerful, airy aspect, and the perfect neatness and order of all its appointments.

Many of the apartments seemed to me somewhat crowded. In fact, the physicians complain of want of room. Large and commodious as the building is, with its off building, called "the Lodge," where the more violent are kept, still more room is required for the unfortunates.

I was surprised by the preponderance of foreigners among the inmates, and of these I should judge the greater portion were Germans.

With few exceptions, these poor, unfortunate victims of warped fancies and delusions, were apparently careless and happy—laughing, singing, and many of them industriously sewing. They are all—the female portion—supplied with plenty of sewing work, as well as other and various means of diverting the mind. The insanity of many is nothing more than an absence of mind or idiocy, and these it is hard to teach anything useful, save how to eat, drink and sleep, apparently with little more consciousness of life than an oyster. Some of these poor "lack-brains," however, are imitative, and sew, or attempt other modes of industry or recreation as they see others.

My little boy, who was with me, seemed to attract universal attention in the female departments. He was nearly devoured with kisses, and squeezed to death with hugs. One blowsy-looking damsel, with hair standing out in all directions, like the "quills upon the fretful porcupine," manifested her philoprogenitiveness in so boisterous a manner that she had to be interfered with by one of the stout, kind-natured nurses. The girl showed no disposition to rebel, but resigned her captive with a laugh, whilst she frisked off to another part of the long hall.

These halls, of which each story of each wing has one, with their long rows of little rooms to the right and left—each room containing a snowy spread bed, chair, &c.—are well warmed and ventilated, and afford ample room for recreation and exercise, and their inmates for the most part, to all appearances, as rational as their nurses or visitors, almost seem to have no there merely to pass a pleasant morning, or to while away an afternoon. But alas! the doors leading to each other are locked, the nurses, physicians, &c., being each provided with a key, and the poor inmates are only prisoners!

In one room in the main building, which was filled with German women, who were engaged for the most part in sewing, a poor, forlorn-looking creature, with a countenance of considerable intelligence, but with an expression of the deepest melancholy, was sitting in a corner apart from all. During the time I was in the room, she never raised her eyes from the floor, and when I returned, upon passing through the room, she was sitting in just the same position, with her eyes still fastened upon the floor. She was to have been married, and the man to whom she was engaged, married another.

In the same room I noticed a woman of about thirty, who must once have been very handsome. She possessed a highly ideal, poetry-loving head, and her insanity must have resulted from some great blow to her highly strung organization. She sought occasion to talk with me, and upon questioning her she answered in very beautiful language, with a slightly German accent, that she had been in the Institution for three years, and that her little son was with her, &c.; and then she related to me a most pathetic story of the capture of her son by some itinerant Italian musicians; and how she followed them from Germany to Italy, and at last succeeded in recapturing him and bringing him to this country. And kissing my boy, she explained to me (as of all things not to trust him a moment out of my sight. She spoke again of her joy at finding her son, and said he was in the next room.

Poor creature! that was her delirium; her son—if she had ever had one—had never been in the building. I could not ascertain the cause of her insanity, but very probably it might have resulted from the loss of this very child, about whom she talks in such beautiful, pathetic language.

I found several other very interesting cases; one in the long hall of the story below, especially, interested me exceedingly.

She could not have been over seventeen or eighteen years old, and with her slender form possessed one of the most spiritual looking faces I ever saw. The expression of her soft brown eyes was gentle in the extreme, and most painfully appealing.

I was looking at her in pity for her beauty and helpless state, when she came up to me and asked me if I came from the city. I told her yes, and then she asked several other questions, all of which I answered in a tone that must have told her of my deep sympathy for her, for the tears started to her gazelle-like eyes and she took me by the hand and said—"Come with me."

She led me into one of the neat little rooms opening out of the hall.

"Is this your room?" asked I.

"Yes," said she, as she sat down upon the snowy bed and motioned me to take a chair close beside her. "I do not like to stay here, and your look kind and good. Won't you get me something for me to do at some milliner's store, and then I can go away?"

Upon my questioning her she told me she had no mother or father, and no friends in all New York. Much more she told me that was very interesting and pathetic, among the rest, that she had been only six weeks there and had been brought there for her health; that she had been sick and it had made her crazy; but that she was well now and wished to go away.

Poor girl! upon questioning one of the nurses I found that she had been but a few months married and had been placed there by her husband, who was her constant visitor, but in her delusion she entirely ignored him. I could not learn whether he had forgiven her or not, or what was the cause of her derangement.

I was very much indebted to the kindness of Dr. [illegible] kausing, one of the resident physicians, who gave me much of his time and much information, showing me the objects worthy of note in the library, etc., among which were some very curious drawings with pen and ink by some of the inmates of the asylum. A design for a record was perfectly marvelous in its intricacy, variety and exactitude of execution.

These poor warp-brained creatures, shut out from the rest of the world, have their pleasures as well as their pains in that little world of their own. Great care is taken to provide them with suitable recreations, and music is one of their chief sources of delight. A concert (due off a few evenings since, I was told, that would have done credit to a band of rational musicians.

Whilst in the parlor, during my visit, I heard some very fine music by a pale, melancholy looking young German. He played some complicated German airs, and then struck off into some delightful waltzes, which I had never heard.

"Those were Labitzky's, were they not?" asked I.

"No," he replied, "they were by Lanner, but they are in Labitzky's style." He conversed in very good English on music, asking me very politely to play.

They have their "Marie," too; I heard him sing some national air with much spirit and feeling. Poor fellow! he is a victim to love. The girl he was going to marry got separated from him in the ships as they were coming to this country.

Among the patients are many who are eminent examples of perversions of the phrenological organs; among the most conspicuous of which are those of perverted self-esteem, such as the woman who imagines herself the President's wife, the President himself, Prince Albert, the husband of Jenny Lind, the Queen of Ireland, &c., &c.

When I was ready to return home, I found the "King Phillip" had returned from Ward's Island and left Blackwell's for an hour or more. We, therefore, took passage in one of the little ferry boats.

The ice, of which the river was full, drove us back several times, but the captain, a regular old "brick," who had served in the Indian wars in Florida, under "Zack" and the renowned "Ralph Ringwood," or Gov. Duval, was not to be daunted. He watched his chance, waited for the tide, and followed down in the wake of a great cake of ice—large enough to raft down an army—amusing me as we went along with narrations of his adventures in Florida.

We landed at Sixty first street, and there encountered a Penitentiary ferry-boat with their Zebra-clad oarsmen, and the "Black Maria." This mysterious vehicle was full of convicts, amongst whom was a woman minus hat, stockings and shoes, and dead drunk. She was lifted out of the vehicle and laid down in the bottom of the boat by the "boys."

Down the pathway from the office above, came a woman with a baby in her arms, both woman and baby crying to the extent of their lungs. Poor thing! her husband was one of the convicts who had been "sent up" for six months.

[illegible] and then, a fine speech on some unrecognized topic surprises us into rediscernment of the hidden stores of thought, that await the magical touch of a master mind. Burke made a great speech on the hardy habits of the Englanders, and Webster found inspiration in steam engines. Sir Humphrey Davy would grow sublime over a description of a gas, and the poet Wordsworth was famous for taking any common topic and investing it with the hues of creative fancy. Our countryman, the Hon. Wm. Elliot, Commissioner of South Carolina to the Paris Exhibition, has made an address before the Imperial and Central Agricultural Society of France, on cotton, and judging from the extracts which we have seen, and we should say, that cotton ought to be hereafter considered a legitimate subject for literary and oratorical treatment. "We have authentic information," says Mr. Elliot, "going to prove that the Sea Island cotton, which, in our opinion, should be exclusively known as the gossypium barbadense, was cultivated in South Carolina as early as the year 1700, and can it be a matter of indifference to you, gentlemen, to know that the cloth selected for the first experiment in the culture of the fine material in Carolina, includes the very spot where Jean Ribault (the pioneer of French discoverers in America,) planted the [illegible] for the crown of France!

"On that very spot on which Ribault planted the standard of France, as marked down on the charts and maps of Ladauiere, now preserved in the Imperial Library, the cotton seed from Anguilla came first to be planted; which, improving from year to year under the joint influences of the climate and culture, came to supply France with the material for her unrivalled cotton fabrics, and has thus proved the union of mercy led from which Algeria has drawn the seed, from which she has raised those beautiful specimens of Sea Island cotton now on exhibition on the Champs de Industrie, and which rival the finest specimens of Carolina production."

After having mentioned the various modes of culture practiced in Carolina, Mr. Elliot spoke of the benefits cotton renders mankind.

"Let us trace out this delicate, fine fibre, from its very origin to its final disposition, and observe what benefits it has diffused through its course. When brought to the domestic market and sold, it pays or should pay rent of land, cost of labor and transportation, and leaves a profit to the grower. When sold it pays a profit, to the merchant. In its transfer in a foreign port it pays the freight to the ship owner, including wages to the mariner. Arrived at a foreign port, it pays its tribute to the custom-house, then pays for commission and storage, and cost of transportation possibly to Rouen or to Alsace to be transformed into laces and muslins—possibly to Lyons, to be woven in with tissues of silk. Arriving at the manufactory, it pays the carder, spinner, weaver, printer, embroiderer, all engaged in the process of fabrication—and lastly, the manufacturer who vends it at a profit to the dealer, from whose hands it passes in the consumption of the country, clothes with rich draperies the gay saloons of fashion by a happier destiny, encircles with its gossamer folds the rounded forms of female loveliness—embellishing and heightening what in itself is perfect, as floating clouds by the happy distribution of their golden tints may be supposed to have enhanced the splendors even of the terrestrial paradise." [Southern Times.

FROM THE WEST COAST OF AFRICA.—The steamer Ethiope arrived at Plymouth on the 20th of January. She brings advices from Liberia to the 18th of Dec., and Sierra Leone to the 14th. We make the following extracts from London papers:

The screw steam-gun-vessel Teazer, 3, Commander Walter Grahee, which returned to Sierra Leone on the 12th of December from a cruise between Cape Mount and the Sherbro, reports that a serious disturbance had occurred at Sinow, arising from a canoe having been taken from the British barque Ariel by one of the people there, and the supercargo, Mr. Harriett, applying to the authorities for its restoration, the sheriff sent to demand it, when one of the native huts was set on fire, and in the affray which took place one of the sheriff's men was killed. Several of the surrounding towns were destroyed, and one with upwards of 100 houses entirely burnt, with the exception of a mission house.

President Roberts, with the British Consul, Newnham, left Monrovia on the 26th November, and arrived at Sinow on the 27th, when they went on shore and found that several of the Liberia people had been murdered. The president and Consul returned the following day to Monrovia, with several European ladies, in the Teazer; and a voluntary corps was being raised to be despatched immediately to Sinow by the American schooner George. An attack was also expected at Cape Mount.

BLOODY TRAGEDY.—In the Memphis Appeal of the 9th, we find the following:

Mr. H. H. Cox, living near Chulahoma, Marshall county, Miss., on Wednesday morning last, killed himself and his wife. About 3 o'clock in the morning four or five pistol shots were heard by the servants. The servant who came in the morning to make up the fire, could not get in. He became alarmed, and on looking in at the window, saw that both Mr. and Mrs. Cox were dead. The overseer was called, and the door broken open, when Mr. Cox was found on the floor with his head towards the fire-place, and his brains scattered on the floor. His wife was lying in bed, with two shots through the heart. He still grasped in his hand a revolver, having shot himself once or twice in the head. The awful deed was committed in a fit of insanity, as Mr. C. had been laboring under fits of derangement for some time past. He has been married but three months. His wife was Miss Sallie Wilson, of Holly Springs. This is truly one of the most awful tragedies we have ever known; and will carry the deepest sorrow to the hearts of many friends and relations.

Mr. Cox, when in his right mind, was remarkable for his peaceful and urbane disposition. He was a man of wealth, a Georgian by birth, but had resided for several years in Marshall county, Miss., where he was much beloved by all his acquaintances.

Among the many good things in the variegated memoirs of the Rev. Sydney Smith is the following: "When you meet with neglect, let it rouse you to exertion instead of mortifying your pride. Set about lessening those defects which expose you to neglect, and improve those excellencies which command attention and respect." This is excellent advice.

Decay of English Power.

In a copy of the Illustrated London News, dated Dec. 22, 1849, we find one of those articles in which English papers sometimes speak unwholesome truths to the ears of John Bull. After quoting the picture of a New Zealander in a remote age of the future, sitting upon a ruined arch of London Bridge and moralizing upon the fate of the once mighty empire become as much a thing of the past as those of Rome, Greece and Assyria, he enumerates the "signs of decay," the causes that threaten English supremacy, and says:

Although our empire stretches to the east and to the west, to the north and to the south—though we have our hands in Asia, our feet in Africa, our arms in America and the South Pacific Ocean, our own peculiar territory is but a small spot in a remote corner of Europe. We have only held that corner by the enormous sacrifices we have made. It was our ambition to become a ruling power—giving the law to the world—and we became so; but it was at a cost of a debt of $800,000,000, that pauperises one population, and lies like a perpetual and killing weight upon the energy of all classes. In addition to this stupendous evil, we share the joblessness of all Europe—There is but one empire within European boundaries that is not worn out and pauperised by debt and extravagance: that Empire is Russia; and she is the enemy of all the rest, and desires to rise upon their ruins. Destiny seems to have traced her path as it has traced ours. The Sclavonian races will inevitably be the new lords of Europe. The Anglo Saxon race must be contented to be the lords of the larger and more splendid inheritance of America and Australia. In this case what becomes of the empire of Great Britain? It falls to the ground, and exists only—like other Powers and Potentates of the world—in the bones and sinews of its sons and successors transferred to a new soil, and enjoying privileges, blessings and opportunities from which their forefathers were excluded.

Let those who dream of a perpetual Britain, think upon these things. The signs of decay are around us on every side. In our fall we shall have few friends. In prosperity, we have not comported ourselves so humbly, as to be justified in the expectation of sympathy or aid from any quarter. Our very excellence has made us foes; and our violence and cupidity have estranged the nations. We may have peopled the earth; we may have spread far and wide our arts and our arms—our commerce and our civilization, but we have not had standing room for our pretensions. Events are more powerful than we are. We must, sooner or later, yield our place to the more prudent, the less embarrassed, and the more vigorous offshoots of our race, and consent to occupy the easy chair of our senility. Nor is there anything to regret in this. What is there in our corner of the globe that it should for ever expect to give law to all others? The civilization that is removed is not destroyed, and the genius of our people can exert itself as well on the banks of the Ohio, or the Mississippi, as on the banks of the Thames; and rule the world from the White House at Washington, with as much propriety as from the Palace of St. James.

We live, indeed, in a remarkable period of the world's history—period in which new empires take the place of old ones with wonderful rapidity; and, in which old empires are paying the penalty of transgressions against the laws of morality and social well being, committed by them during many generations. Europe has enjoyed power and has abused it, and the scepter of the world's dominion is passing from her grasp. Civilization, as of old, is following the course of the sun, and the destinies of humanity will work themselves out in a new field and on a larger scale. The world is, as it were, starting afresh, and from a more favorable starting-point. The lover of humanity can but hope that the new civilization which may arise will take warning from the errors of the old; and that in the decay and fall of empires, humanity itself will merge from each change in brighter lustre, wiser and juster, more peaceable and more religious, and doing as much as man can do to hail the coming of the prophesied time, when "the people shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning-hooks; when nation shall not lift up the sword against nation, nor learn war any more."

A SCRAP OF HISTORY.—Pope Sixtus the Fifth was an honored and revered Father in God, and an infallible successor of the chief of the Apostles. Macaulay, in his new volume, tells us that the holy Pope, finding that he could not directly cope with a gang of outlaws, who had got a strong hold among the Appenines, had a train of mules loaded with poisoned wine and food, sent on a road that ran close to the fastness. The robbers sallied forth, seized the prey, feasted and died. The pious old Pope exulted greatly when he heard that the corpses of thirty ruffians had been found lying among the mules and packages.

SHOOTING IN WOODVILLE.—In Woodville, Miss., on the 9th inst., L. M. Hennis, charged with threatening the life of a person, attempted to escape from the custody of the Deputy Sheriff who had arrested him, and was shot dead by the posse comitatus. This was done five miles from the village.

State Legislature.

WEDNESDAY, Feb. 13, 1856.—Senate.—Mr. St. Paul, introduced a resolution to count the votes for and against the removal of the seat of government, including those scattered about on the floor at the election riots in the fourth and ninth precincts in New Orleans.

Mr. Simms, of Pointe Coupee, on previous notice, introduced a bill to appropriate $50,000 of the swamp land fund for internal improvement service.

The Senate went into executive session; on opening the doors adjourned till to-morrow.

House.—House met at 11 o'clock; 71 members present.

Mr. Downs called up a resolution in reference to printing the Governor's message, to amend it by inserting 1,000 copies.

Mr. Hamilton offered an address, with resolutions, in reference to the removal of Mr. Joseph Hufty, Sheriff of New Orleans.

Mr. Alexander objected to its being read, as under the rule of the House he said it must lay over one day.

Mr. Hamilton said it was an address, and asked that it may be read.

Mr. Semmes concurred in opinion with Mr. Hamilton. The address and resolution were laid over.

Mr. Semmes moved that the sum of $50 be allowed Mr. Seuzeneau, for obtaining testimony in New Orleans, relative to contested election in his own case vs. A. C. T. Morgan. Amended by a resolution to allow Mr. Morgan the same amount. Yeas 17, nays 49.

Mr. Patten called up his resolution of instructions to the Senators and Representatives in Congress, in reference to the naturalization laws. Referred to Committee on Federal Relations.

Mr. Downs, from a Special Committee, reported favorably on a bill to authorize the Baton Rouge, Grand Teto and Opelousas Railroad Company, to effect a loan of $40,000.

Mr. Walker offered a resolution inviting Clark Mills, the sculptor, to a seat within the bar of the House.

Mr. Jordan gave notice of a bill to increase the number of Sheriffs in New Orleans.

Mr. Dyer gave notice of a bill to incorporate the town of Flynn; laid over.

Mr. Hamilton gave notice of a bill to prevent persons from carrying pistols, knives, sling shots, brass knuckles, etc.; read.

Mr. Pike moved to refer it to the Committee on Unfinished Business.

Mr. Hamilton's bill was referred to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. Wright gave notice that he would introduce a bill to lease the State Penitentiary.

The House adjourned to meet at 10 o'clock to-morrow.

THURSDAY, Feb. 14th, 1856.—Senate.—We have no Senate proceedings to-day.

House.—House met at 10 o'clock, 70 members present.

Mr. Hamilton, from a Special Committee, reported favorably to examine the condition of the Savings and Banking Banks in New Orleans. Also joint resolution to count the votes relative to removal of the seat of Government.

A resolution was offered and adopted instructing the committee on Contingent Expenses to inquire into and ascertain the amount of expense incurred by Messrs. Morgan and Seuzeneau in contested elections.

Mr. Gordon gave notice of a bill to require a new survey of the State.

Senate bill to recount the vote relative to the removal of the Seat of Government, called up, and gave rise to some discussion. On the passage of the same the yeas and nays stood, yeas 43, nays 23.

The House adjourned to meet at eleven o'clock to-morrow.

FRIDAY, February 15.

Senate.—The Senate met pursuant to adjournment, 26 members present.

Mr. Ryan, from Judiciary Committee, reported favorably on an act to amend the 7th section of an act to incorporate the New Orleans, Jackson and Great Northern Railroad Company. Also an act to [illegible] into Judicial Districts, and to provide for the trial of recuse cases and compensation in the same.

The minority of the Committee on Contested Elections presented a protest against the decision of the majority, which, on motion, was ordered to be printed, 1000 in English and 500 in French.

The Senate had under consideration to-day "an act entitled an act to reclaim and drain the swamp and overflowed lands of the State of Louisiana, etc," approved 30th April, 1855, and to appropriate the sum of $300,000 to carry out the provisions of this act, approved March 16th, 1854, and to appropriate the sum of $250,000 to carry out the provisions thereof.

The Senate adjourned, to meet at 10 o'clock to-morrow.

House.—The House met at 11 o'clock, pursuant to adjournment.

Roll called, and 60 members answered to their names.

Mr. Wade offered a memorial from certain citizens of New Orleans, asking an entire repeal or material modification of the quarantine laws. Rules suspended and memorial referred to Committee on Commerce.

Mr. Haynes, from Committee on Claims, reported unfavorably on a petition from a citizen of New Orleans, asking indemnity for the violence of a mob.

Mr. Semmes, on behalf of Special Committee on Contested Elections, made a report on the cases of Messrs. Strickliu and Hatch, and also in the case of Brice and Shields. Mr. Semmes asked leave to read the same; which was granted. These reports made special order of the day for to-morrow at 11 o'clock. As the order of the day, the address and resolutions to remove Mr. Hufty from office came up. The bill passed to its second reading. Mr. Eustis made an eloquent speech against the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. Duperier moved to lay it on the table. Yeas and nays called—28 yeas, 44 nays.

After considerable debate, the House adjourned without further action.

COTTON.—The receipts yesterday up to 6 o'clock were, by the Mexico, from Indianola, 49; A. W. Glaize, from Opelousas, 420; National, from White River, 243; City of Cairo, from Camden, 1,136; Choctaw, from Tennessee river, 3,728; Nashville, from Clarksville, 104; Swamp Fox, from Grand Ecore, 1,420; Storm, from Jefferson, Texas, 1,522; Grace Darling, from Montgomery, 283. Total, 8,816 bales.

The Buffalo Republican of the 7th relates a shocking case of loss of life by freezing, on the Niagara Falls Railroad, several miles above Tonawanda. Several men had been sent out to shovel off the track. The snow drifted up the track almost as fast as it was shoveled away. Becoming very cold they attempted to return, and became closed in by the drifts; and when an engine, which had been sent out, came

NEW ORLEANS:

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 23, 1856.

Tenderness.—We beg preachers to give these articles a reading. They wont hurt anybody.

Dedication.—We learn from the pastor, that the new Methodist Church of Montgomery will be dedicated to the service of Almighty God on Sunday, 2d of March next. Sermon by Bishop Pierce. Of course, as strangers are free, the public will feel themselves invited. Happy we should be to avail ourselves of the courteous invitation to witness the dedication of this one of our best church buildings in Alabama.

Panama and Nicaragua Routes.—It will be seen by Bishop Kavanaugh's letter that he has been detained both on Havana and Panama. This grievous detention also befel Bishop Andrew and the preachers who went with him. They spent an unpleasant time at Panama; not at all mitigated by the attentive kindness of the company's agents. We are surprised that persons going from this port do not always take the route by Nicaragua, when gentlemanly agent here, Mr. Peoples, keeps his office on Camp street. This line has no large mail contract to depend upon, like the Panama. Being dependent on the patronage of passengers, it may therefore be expected to be more accommodating. Its route hence to the Isthmus is short and direct—not going out of the way to Havana, and there waiting and changing ships. It crosses at higher latitudes, makes the trip in less time, and seems every way preferable.

The editorial changes of the Southwestern Baptist, Tuskegee, Ala., have not added much charity to the concern, whatever accession of ability there may have been. However, we like distinct definition.

It is a matter of grief to see several of the churches of that excellent denomination of Christians (the Baptists) following the lead of Graves, of Tennessee, and driving on to the highest High-Churchism.

The editor is putting the objections of "Indifferentians," and answering. Hear him:

"But your conduct in not communing with us unchurches all denominations but yourselves.'

"You are greatly mistaken. We cannot unchurch a thing that has never been done. They have never been churched yet, and of course we cannot unchurch them. We are surprised to see men working themselves into such a state of fanaticism as to believe for a moment that Baptists will ever be guilty of such inconsistency of communing with souls who they do not believe, according to the Scriptures, are legal members of the Church of Christ. And we are frank to admit to you, sir, that we do not believe the different denominations to be gospel churches. We do believe, and we act. If we are wrong, it is our misfortune."

The Austrian Concordat.—Under foreign items, we last week published this, of Austria:

"The Emperor has signed a decree relating to Protestants. It is liberal, except so far as it prohibits the marriage of Catholic priests converted to Protestantism. Government has been obliged already to restrain Italian bishops in their administration of the Concordat."

The last especially is significant. How came divines long for the dark ages!

Dr. Cumming recently delivered a public lecture on the Austrian Concordat, which he concluded by expressing his conviction that the concordat was no evidence of renewed vigor in the Papacy. "Rather he believed it to be the kick of a dying giant, the spasmodic clutch of a system that was losing its grasp on the consciences of sovereigns and people. It was Romanism seeking a firmer foothold, convinced that Italy was rising to its ancient glory, that Spain was bursting its chains, that Sardinia was awakening from the sleep of ages, that Hungary and Poland were preparing to assert their Protestantism, the Pope and Emperor had entered into a compact that damaged both, at the same time it had enlightened us as to what Rome desired in this country as well as in Austria, if she only had the power to do what she had the inclination to do."

Universal Church System is a cake and custard. That is, says Mathew Henry, "Let us eat and drink on the one side and be merry for [illegible] on the other side;" Lay [illegible] Gill, "Let us eat our flesh;" "A [illegible] mixture," says Matthew Scott, "of idolatry and the worship of God." Romanism will make up of contradictions [illegible] The same characteristics distinguish many now.

An Interesting Suit.—The Richmond Whig of Tuesday states that a case of great interest is now being argued before the Court of Appeals of that city. The parties to the suit are the Methodist Episcopal Church, North and South, and while this latter only [illegible] a title to church property, (the vexata of Fayetteville, N. C.) will have an influence in [illegible] growing out of the division of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Defense of Street Preaching.

A copy of a sermon is before us preached in Natchitoches, La., 1855, by Rev. Thomas S. Bacon, with the above heading. Mr. B. is an Episcopal minister and pastor of the only Protestant Church in that ancient town, which is the residence of a Romish Bishop. All the old, stagnant vices of the ancient regime of Church and State, are there. Mr. Bacon, finding that preaching in a place was different from preaching to the people of a place, and his intelligent zeal not being satisfied with anything less than this, quit "Trinity Church" and mounted the Court-House steps, one afternoon. He was determined to get at them for whom Christ died. He did get at them, and offered pardon and peace on gospel terms, and intends to keep it up.

But some were scandalized, and this sermon is the consequence. It is an earnest and able defence, a common-sense view of preaching. Take men, as you can. If they wont go to you, go to them. Expect a cross, and bear it. Noble exemplars are not wanting.

After quoting such precedents, as Paul, Wesley, Whitefield and others furnished, and the recent movements in the Church of England in this direction, he goes on to say:

"Having thus got rid of the notion that this kind of preaching is either against Church law or without example, let us now inquire into the propriety of it in itself.

God has a society of his people in this world called the Church. There are certain officers of this who have a commission from Him to speak to assemblies of men, to assemblies not merely of their brethren, but of any men whom they can get to hear them. This is preaching. He has said, 'Go ye into the world and preach the gospel to every creature.' This they must do (and see, now, whether I do not speak the common sense of the matter) according to the laws of their respective churches, and where these are silent, according to their judgment of what may seem the most effective way, and especially according to the divine precept and example of the holy apostles preached, and what the circumstances were in which they did it. And then they must study the circumstances in which they themselves preach, and notice where they agree with and where they differ from those, and then act upon the same principle as adjusted to the different state of things. I think there can be no doubt that this is correct.

We must, however, in this our judgment carefully exclude from the circumstances which should keep us far from exactly following these examples in any practice, the fact that many people find fault with it, even that most do. For so they did in these times. It was when 'the most respectable and influential men' of Jerusalem were greatly scandalized at the preaching of the apostles, that those words of Gamaliel cited as a text were called forth. And let us mark those words well: 'And now I say unto you, refrain from those men and let them alone; for if this counsel or this work be of men, it will come to nought; but if it be of God, ye cannot overthrow it, lest haply ye be found even to fight against God.' * * *

'Ah,' says some one, 'those were different times from these. Such preaching would have done then.' So they were different from these, in this respect, that brave zeal for Christ was more strange and more dangerous then than now. But if you mean that Christians were then of a different spirit, were more honest in their religion than now, ah, that is true! But would you not like to see such times return? And yet, how can we see this but by returning to their spirit and deeds! Much is said in these days of 'apostolic churches' and 'an apostolic ministry;' and surely there can be nothing better, in their way. Let us, then, follow the apostolic examples! Do you ever read the Acts of the Apostles? If so, are you not at times struck with the heroic devotion of those first Christians, and persuaded that they were right, and that we ought to be like them! * * * *

Suppose it had been said to them (especially after their first preaching in the public places had given a wide notice to the matter) by some of their more timid brethren, 'De not preach in the streets of this hostile Jerusalem. Have a room open by yourselves for any to come and hear you who will. If they will not come, still you have done your duty, and the responsibility must rest on them. But do not bring ridicule upon the Church. You will be whipped in the streets and laughed at by all the wealthy and respectable people. They will compare you to the fanatical false prophets of a few years ago, and pay no more attention to what you say than they did to them.' Suppose, I say, that such things had been said to the Apostles, (and perhaps they were) and they had yielded to those arguments. Where would the Church be now? * * * *

Now, what did these great ministers of Christ do in all this, but earnestly believe the gospel, and wherever they could find the hearts of men, strike boldly at them with it, and receive with meek joy the scornful abuse and ill treatment forced upon them!

By doing the same St. Stephen placed his name first on the roll of the 'noble army of martyrs,' being beaten to death with stones by a furious mob."

Happy are we to record that such sentiments are entertained, put forth, defended and acted upon by a minister of the Protestant Episcopal Church; and that, too, in Louisiana. Hear the heroic conclusion:

"So, until then, as a fair day offers and circumstances favor, I shall continue such preaching. Oh that it may not be so ill received or so opposed as to call for a repetition a sentence once pronounced upon an ancient town: 'Curse, ye, Meroz; curse ye bitterly the inhabitants thereof; because they came not up to the help of the Lord, to the help of the Lord against the mighty.'"

TOBACCONISING.

NUMBER II.

4. "Do all to the Glory of God."—First Corinthians, 10:31, is still in the Scriptures, however practically it may be expunged by however many people. What soever ye do—eating, drinking—whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God. This doctrine is as broad as the language in which it is set forth. It is broad, plenary, patent.

It is a sin to "do" anything that is not conscientiously intended to glorify God. This doctrine is the more especially applicable to such things as are done knowingly, wilfully and by premeditation.

How can a Christian habitually do that which he knows and is compelled to acknowledge is not for the glory of God?

I am not speaking about the sentiments, or notions of individual men: I am speaking about the plain, positive declarations of God, and of necessary deductions therefrom. Do all to the glory of God is an injunction as plain, direct, positive and universally binding as any other command of God given to man. No difference in the size of commandments.

How far, in rare cases, a wrong possession, a blinded imagination, a thoughtless infatuation, the power of custom and the fetters of association may in part operate as an excuse or a paliation, is not for me to determine. No man is responsible to me. But I read the Bible as I find it.

If tobacco can be chewed and smoked and dipped and snuffed to the glory of God, why be it so. If not, it is sinful. That is a short argument, but its truth no man will attempt to gainsay.

5. Decency of Behavior.—A minister is presumed to be a gentleman. Nay, more, he must be a gentleman. He must be not only what might by possibility pass loosely by that designation, but he must be found always in the fore rank of gentlemen—A by his behavior.

It has already been most justly and beautifully said, that, "As it is the part of justice never to use violence, so it is the part of modesty never to commit offence."

Tully says, "Virtue and decency are so nearly related that it is difficult to separate them from each other, but in our imagination."

Addison says: "As the beauty of the body, with an agreeable carriage, pleases the eye, and that pleasure consists in that we observe all the parts, with a certain elegance, are proportioned to each other; so does decency of behavior, which appears in our lives, obtain the approbation of all with whom we converse, from the order, consistency and moderation of our words and actions. This flows from the reverence we bear towards every good man, and to the world in general. For to be negligent of what any one thinks of you, does not only show you arrogant, but abandoned."

Several ministers met on the sidewalk. One of them, a highly distinguished minister, said to another, "Step this way—let us walk into this store." And as they walked, he remarked, in a firm tone, "I will not, I am determined I will not, appear in company and associate with a minister on the street with a cigar in his mouth."

"I commend you most heartily," was the reply; and a conversation on cigar-smoking ministers ensued, which was highly creditable to the ministers in question.

"Husband," said a pious lady, in time of Conference, at whose house several ministers were staying, "do try, if you possibly can without direct and open offence, do try and prevail upon that man, brother ——, not to smoke and spit tobacco juice so terribly in the parlor and about the fireplace. Do try. I am tired; I am sick; I don't know what to do. You know, husband, what pains I took to put the parlor in neat order for their accommodation. I have had it cleaned up every morning after the gentlemen have left, but I can't keep it clean. That terrible smoke upon the curtains, and that spitting about the fireplace! What shall I do?"

"Well, my dear, I hardly know what to do. I dislike to offend the man. He is regarded as a very prominent and talented member of the Conference. Perhaps we had as well bear it. You can renovate and renew things afterwards. But I promise you this, most certainly: The next time Conference comes here, if I live, 'smokers and tobacco-chewers excepted' is the law of my house."

A minister I wot of, considered by some a very genteel and leading member of his Conference, was, during the sitting of Conference, in the house of a person whom I know to be one of the most perfect gentlemen I have ever met; a highly respectable and pious member of the Methodist Church. The minister was about to light his cigar, when the gentleman took him by the arm; "Excuse me sir, you must really excuse me, but we cannot allow smoking in the parlor."

The degree of mortification with which the cigar was otherwise disposed of, did not come to my knowledge.

"Well, brother, you are highly favored this year, with one of the best preachers."

"Yes, sir, we have certainly one of the very best in the Conference. His sermons have never been surpassed in our pulpit."

"And you are all highly pleased this year?"

"No, sir, not entirely. His tobacco and cigars, and cigars and tobacco, and tobacco and cigars, are quite offensive to many, and abridge his usefulness very materially."

"Our washerwoman," said a good sister to her husband, "complains considerably that the linen of brother —— is very much bespattered with tobacco juice. What a pity that so young a man, and otherwise so agreeable and genteel, should be liable to such complaint. Do talk to him about it in some mild and fatherly kind of way; not about the linen, for the world, but about the tobacco. He is young, and can and ought to quit it!"

One of the filthiest places I ever saw in my life was the inside of a pulpit in a Methodist church, in a country town supporting a male and female college, both of respectable size and standing. I chanced to be present when some repairs were being made which caused the removal of the floor. There were literally shovels full of filth, mostly, or perhaps I might say, entirely, old worn out tobacco quids, deposited there in the last ten years, by some persons, I know not whom.

"Well, my dear," said a Methodist gentleman to his wife, just before Conference was to meet in their town, "we are to take five preachers."

"And welcome—and welcome," was the reply. "And we might, if necessary, take six or seven. But, see here, do see brother .... and try and not have any chewers and smokers."

"Really, it seems a hard case; somebody must take them."

"But there are places where they chew and smoke themselves, and they won't mind it. But try, husband, and not have any sent here, if you can."

"Cigars have risen!" said a wag, in time of Conference. "By the Hokey, I'll put a dozen of them preachers against any twelve crack smokers in the city."

Two Presbyterian ladies, of wealth and refinement, were in a store, shopping. Two Methodist preachers were in the store, one stationed in the city, and the other from a out of the store, [illegible] me as he sick! I am disgusted! I am disgusted! Brother —— is acquainted, it seems, with one of those ladies, and there he stands talking to her and puffing smoke into their faces. The ladies are trying to get rid of him, two of the clerks have given him a hint, and there he stands, puffing for life. Let us get away from here. I don't want to see the man again."

"I thought," said a lady to her husband, "I thought you told me that Brother —— was going to quit chewing. But judging from the appearance of his chin and the corners of his mouth [illegible] should think you were mistaken."

"Your preacher, I am told," said a minister to a steward, "is a very able preacher, but not a first rate pastor."

"First rate preacher, but no great hand to visit. Ner, to speak plainly, are his visits as a general thing, very desirable."

"Why, what!—why so?"

"Smoke, smoke, smoke! Chew, chew, chew! Spit, spit, spit! wherever he goes. Very annoying, not to say disgusting, in some of our best families.

The above mentioned circumstances, with many others of a like kind, that might be named, are all facts that have come under my personal knowledge within no long time past.

Keep the Mouth Shut During Cold Weather.—In the Journal of Health Dr. Hall advises every person who goes into the open air from a warm apartment to keep the mouth shut while walking or riding. He says:

"Before you leave the room, bundle up well, gloves, cloak, comforter; shut your mouth before you open the street door, and keep it resolutely closed until you have walked briskly for some ten minutes; then, if you keep on walking, or have reached your home, you may talk as much as you please. Not doing so, many a heart once happy and young now lies in the churchyard that might have been young and happy still. But how? If you keep your mouth closed and walk rapidly, the air can only reach the lungs by a circuit of the nose and head, and becomes warmed before reaching the lungs, thus causing no derangement; but if you converse, large drafts of cool air dash directly in upon the lungs, chilling the whole frame almost instantly. The brisk walking throws the blood to the surface of the body, thus keeping up a vigorous circulation, making a cold impossible, if you do not get into a cold bed too quick after you get home. Neglect of these brings sickness and premature death to multitudes every year."

Rev. Philip W. Taylor, a native of Caroline county, Va., a soldier of the Revolution, and one of the early pioneers of Kentucky, died on the 24th ult., in Shelby county, Ky. He was present at the surrender of Cornwallis, and in 1781 emigrated to Kentucky. On his way down the river his boat was attacked by the Indians twenty miles above Louisville and several of his companions killed and wounded, himself among the latter. He knew personally Boone, Kenton, Todd, Harlan, and, indeed, all the pioneer heroes who settled the State. He was for many years a Justice of the Peace in the county of Shelby, for two years its High Sheriff, and for sixty years a minister of the gospel.

Another distinguished man, Gen. J. H. Harvie, died in Richmond, Va., on the 8th inst., at the age of sixty-eight years. The deceased was wounded in the attack on Tripoli, in 1804, while serving as a midshipman. In the war of 1812 he was with the Richmond Light Infantry Blues in service at camp Holly. At a later day he was a State Senator, and at the time of his decease he was the Major General in command of the Eastern Division of Virginia Militia.

Clouds of wild geese passed over the city of Memphis on the 13th. Their direction was North by North-west, a sure indication that the cold term has departed.

LETTER FROM BISHOP KAVANAUGH.

Panama, N. G., Feb. 4, 1856.

Dear Brother—With deep regret and mortification I have to inform you that our steamer, the Philadelphia, failed to be in time to connect with the Golden Gate, the steamer of the Pacific, which we had hoped would take us to San Francisco. The Golden Gate left Panama with the Passengers from New York on the 30th ult., and the Philadelphia did not arrive at Aspinwall until about 8 o'clock on the morning of the 31st. The general sentiment is, that she ought to have waited; and so we think. It were better that the passengers from New York should wait one day, than that we should have to wait fifteen. But the best plan would have been for the Philadelphia to have been in time. Whether her detention at Havana was longer than necessary, I do not know. Capt. McGowan, of the Philadelphia, while under way, was a careful and dilligent navigator, and of kind and gentlemanly manners.

We were detained four days in Havana, and now fifteen on the Isthmus; a circumstance that I greatly fear will prevent my presence at the Pacific Conference. The only hope that I am left to cherish is, that on no day, so far as I can learn, was appointed for the meeting of the Conference, they may await the arrival and notification of the Bishop. Should this not be the case, I shall be subjected to deep but unavailing regrets, and the Conference to much inconvenience. I had written to some of the members of the Conference, and in time, that I should not reach San Francisco until about the 15th inst.

To notice the difficulties in which I am now involved, is the prime object of the present communication. I have many things to say in regard to Havana and New Granada, which I will send you at greater leisure.

The agent of the company at Havana paid the expenses of our detention. The agent at Aspinwall did not pay our company a decent respect, much less our expenses. It is said here that he will be required to do it. We await to see. The agent at this place, (Mr. C., in the absence of Mr. McLane,) appears to have the spirit and manners of a gentleman, which is very refreshing to us, after the self-complacent indifference and rude manners most gratuitously manifested on the part of the agent at Aspinwall.

Mrs K. is suffering some debility from sea sickness and the warm weather; but the passengers generally are in good health. Our brother, Genelia, who, you know, has accompanied us from New Orleans, has, by the kindest attention [illegible] spirits, contributed largely to our comfort and entertainment.

Most truly yours,

H. H. Kavanaugh.

Later from Texas.

By the steamship Mexico, Capt. Lawless, which arrived Monday morning, we have dates from Galveston to Saturday last. The Civilian of Friday has the following paragraphs:

The Trinity river is still high. The water had fallen somewhat in the neighborhood of the mouth, but there are accounts of a further rise above.

Cotton has come in pretty freely during the past week, the receipts up to this morning amounting to 1767 bales. The exports to yesterday were 3,544 bales, of which 626 were to Boston, 926 to New York, 272 to New Orleans, and 1720 to Antwerp. The sales have been to a corresponding extent, with a steady and wholesome market.

We have received from J. Nash, a highly respectable citizen of Cass county, in north-eastern Texas, two lumps of native iron ore, and a bar of iron or steel made from the same, by simply smelting the ore in a blacksmith shop. The specimen may be seen in our office by those wishing to see for themselves. The ore has been tested at various places in the North and found to contain 80 per cent. pure iron, and consequently very rich. It exists in Cass county in inexhaustible quantities, and must at an early day become a great source of wealth to northern Texas, and with railway connections to the coast, diffuse its benefits throughout the State.

Blankenship and Lewis, implicated in the burning of the Auditor's office in Austin, have been arrested and sent to jail. It will be remembered that they caused considerable excitement in Austin by arming themselves and defying the sheriff.

An affray occurred at a fandangu in Eagle Pass on the night of the 27th ult., between two men named Sample and Augustine, in which the latter shot and killed the former.

In the absence of other sport, it is said to be a popular amusement at the Pass, to stand on this side of the river and shoot at Mexicans. Not a few are killed by the operation. The greasers occasionally return these tokens of distinguished consideration, but with little effect.

There have been grand feasts at San Fernando and Piedras Negras recently. The latter place has been re-built, and, from all accounts, looks much better than before it was burned down.

Louisiana Items.—The Iberville Gazette of Saturday says:

We have lately experienced some of the coldest weather within the recollection of the "oldest inhabitant." A respectable gentleman declares that he saw large cakes of ice floating by our town, one day last week. With the exceptions of bad colds, our parish was never in a healthier condition within the recollection of the oldest inhabitant. The doctors, who are idle consider it "distressingly healthy."

It is the opinion of many of our most experienced planters, that the late cold weather will greatly injure the present growing crop. Both the matlaid and plant cane has been damaged, and in some instances nearly destroyed.

The Shreveport Gazette of the 9th has the following paragraphs:

The steamer Storm which arrived here on Wednesday night, made the trip in three days, twenty-three and a-half hours, and was delayed one night in the Mississippi by fog, and three hours at the Falls.

There has been a further reduction of the price of shipping cotton to New Orleans from Shreveport, and it now stands at $2 per bale. We learn that it is the determination of the captains in the trade to hold cotton at the above rates throughout the season, believing that for a less sum they could not realize any profit from the business of steamboating.

In obedience to the verdict, the slave Frederick, convicted of burning the gin-house of his master, Rev. J. C. Harruss, expiated his crime upon the gallows, within the walls of the jail, on yesterday at 11 o'clock. We understand he said nothing under the gallows, but walked deliberately up chewing tobacco. On Thursday he told two gentlemen who visited him in prison, that he was ready to die, and was impatient for his time to come.

The Mexican Drafts.—General Almonte, the Mexican Minister, has received instructions to raise the protest of his Government against the payment of the drafts of the late government of that country against the last instalment of the treaty of the Mesilla, due to sundry citizens of the United States for monies actually advanced. A considerable portion of the amount covered by the drafts in question is said to have been paid on Thursday at the Treasury. The total amount of the draft is $3,000,000.

Lectures at Lyceum Hall.

Prof. Gould delivered his second lecture before the Lyceum last evening, in continuation of the former, showing the relation the theory of probabilities has to the concerns of daily life, not only mathematically and metaphysically, but directly and immediately valuable.

The theory has passed through its infancy, and in its historical bearings, which are most prominent and useful, it is now chiefly considered. The startling doctrine that initiates it, viz: that by a theory, sufficiently certain certainties, an actual certainty is to be reached, astonishes almost every one; but, if considered in all its bearings, the seeming improbabilities pass away and the actual bearing is left clear and fixed. Some apt illustrations were given in support of this statement. The difference between a probable accordance and an accordance that is probable, was alluded to by further illustrations.

The rules of this science are based upon the supposition of a great number of probabilities in every case, and also gives the number of these probabilities, which form the basis of a sound calculation. The science of gambling was introduced as more fully carrying out this theory, by which, although the gambler knows it not, there is a regular per centage for or against him, in accordance with the theory of probabilities. The same principle is evidenced in other games.

Lotteries were taken up in exemplification, and the French, being the most fair, was described—showing the immense improbabilities attending the drawing of any prize; and showing that, when the prize is 50 francs, under a true regulation it should be 72 and 78-100, and yet the French is the fairest of all the world—infinite honesty compared to those of this country. Concerning the whole system of gambling, however, Buffin's statement is good: that, every banker is a rogue and every player a dupe. A fair game between a day laborer, whose whole fortune is ten dollars, and a millionaire, cannot be made fair, unless both put up all they are worth and play all against all.

Leaving gambling aside, however, there are other hazards, of fire and storm and death, which cannot be avoided. Put your eggs in different baskets. Some may be broken, but the probability is that some will be saved. In a fire insurance it is likely that some fires will occur, but those risks to which no accidents occur, will be ready to pay the loss, by an average contribution. Some remarks were entered into concerning insurance of different kinds, showing the necessity there is that the amount of payment should exceed the probable amount of risk, and describing the general workings of the system of insurance.

The theory of probabilities touches the whole policy of government, and says to the South, grow corn as well as cotton, and wheat as well as sugar-cane; for, the two staples that now are, may be rendered worthless by war; but the others are necessities in both peace and war. This theory tells us to endeavor to carry out all industry in an even and harmonious proportion; for, as danger may come then, by this course, they will come without danger. And this theory tells us of what our country may yet be, when iron parallels cross the continent and reach from the pole to the tropics. It speaks of patriotism, and labor, and research—and a glorious day to grow out of them in the dimness of the future.

The theory of probabilities was further illustrated by many citations of facts in different cases and instances; all of which, in their results, were corroborative of the general principles before alluded to—the probabilities of their being smaller dwarfs than Tom Thumb, and more bearded women than the one now on exhibition in this country.

Physicians, statesmen and mathematicians are profoundly interested in the theory of probabilities, and, to a greater or less extent, must be ruled by it. In law the theory is now extensively used; and in trade it has always been more or less consulted. Indeed its bearings upon life, upon government, and upon every thing appertaining to human existence, are multifarious and cannot be defined.

Some general remarks, summing up the preceding ones and the use of the science in its applications, and [illegible] outline—one, however, from which the use and interest of the whole may be understood. It was very handsomely written and delivered—not less beautiful than sound, ornamental than interesting—and as opening a field which has suggested itself to very few, was of much more than ordinary interest.

On Thursday evening Prof. Gould will deliver his next lecture, on—The Relation Astronomy bears to other Sciences.

We were happy to see a larger audience than on the preceding evenings, and trust that the next lecture may find the hall crowded. Much useful, sound and practical knowledge, as well as no inconsiderable amount of diversion can be gleaned from the discourses.—[Crescent.

From Texas.—The Austin State Times says that the Legislature, which has adjourned, accomplished but a single important measure, the passage of the Public Debt bill.

The wife of Gen. Wilson, of Vine Grove, Grimes county, froze to death on the night of the 5th instant. She was returning home from a visit to a neighbor, on horseback, is supposed to have fallen from the animal, and being stunned, was unable to rise, and froze to death. A man named John Crosby was also frozen to death on a prairie in Robertson county.

We learn from Austin that Blankenship and Lewis, charged with having burned down the Auditor's office, had, with forty or fifty friends armed to the teeth, come into the town and openly defied the law, declaring that all the sheriffs in Texas could not arrest them. The affair caused much excitement and indignation, and the Sheriff, at last accounts, was summoning a large force to carry the law into effect.

The Late Disturbances in Montevideo.—A correspondent of the New York Herald on board the United States ship Savannah, writing on the 13th December, off Rio Janeiro, states that during the late disturbances in Montevideo an American marine force was landed from the ships Germantown and Bainbridge, in order to protect the lives and property of our citizens. The difficulties between Brazil and Paraguay were not settled, but Don Pedro was anxious for a tight if the troubles could not be amicably adjusted. At Ilio the weather was warm—health of the port good. The crew of the Savannah had subscribed $500 for the relief of the sufferers from yellow fever in Norfolk and Portsmouth. Forcible allusion is made to the steady increase of the French and British squadrons in the Pacific.

Messrs. Editors:—As the amount of travel increases in proportion to its cheapness, it has always been found to be to the interest of railroads and steamboats to put the rate of passage at as low a figure as possible, consistent with profit. Permit me, therefore, through your journal, to recommend to the attention of our railroad managers, the following statement from the "American Railway Times." The Times says it was prepared by one of the most experienced and intelligent managers:

Cost of running a Passenger Train, with 40 Passengers, 100 miles.
Locomotive power, 24 cents per mile	$24 00
One passenger car, 2 " "	2 00
One luggage car, 2 " "	2 00
One conductor, $2 per day; one brakeman, $1	3 00
	$31 00

The cost of a train, with 2 passengers, is estimated at $29; for 12 passengers, $31.

The Times adds: "A large engine will draw on any road, not exceeding a forty feet grade, 100 tons in addition to the cars; and as 14 passengers, with their baggage, are usually estimated to be a ton, a full train of cars, with 240 passengers, amounts to only 17 tons. The difference in fuel required to draw one or three cars is so small as not to be susceptible of calculation."

If the above calculation be correct, is it not suicidal policy for our railroad managers to charge passengers 3 and 4 cents per mile.

Q.

Look out for the Flood—Pittsburg, Jan. 29, 1856.—The country lying between this and the mountains, and to a considerable extent west of us, is now covered with snow, averaging from two to three feet in depth, which is probably double that which produced the disastrous flood of 1832.

A word of caution to those living or having property upon the low bottom lands of the Ohio and Mississippi rivers may be important in saving life and property. We are not without apprehensions here, and unless the snow passes off in a gradual or partial thaw, without rain, you can scarcely hope to escape. Should it, however, pass off with a rain, you may look for such a flood as has never been known, and all having property within its reach should take warning in advance. The unusual thickness of the ice in our upper rivers will add to the destruction if it passes off with a flood.—[Louisville Journal.

AN AMERICAN COMMODORE.

Great as has been the development and prosperity of the United States, within her own bounds, since victory perched upon her eagle at Yorktown, and a fair field was opened for the display of her enterprise, it is chiefly, if not altogether, owing to the skill, the courage and the hardihood of those brave men who stood at her side when the tempest lashed the sea and her fortune into foam and exposed those dreadful scopuli, on which so many national destinies have foundered. In the list of men whose deeds of daring at the initiation of the voyage contributed so materially to its future success and prosperity, that of Charles Morris, lately deceased, must ever stand bright and prominent.

Born in the State of Connecticut, about 1783—he entered the navy in 1799 and in 1803 was a midshipman on board the Constitution, the flag-ship of Commodore Preble's, squadron, sent out to chastise the Barbary powers for their acts of piracy upon American shipping, and their unjustifiable enslavement of American citizens. The Philadelphia, having grounded in the attack made upon Tripoli, was abandoned to the Corsairs, and by them taken into that harbor and fitted out, ready to cruise against our commerce. Decatur resolved that she should be destroyed, and a plan was accordingly devised for running into the harbor and destroying her at her moorings, and Morris was one selected to bear a hand in the hazardous undertaking. He, with seventy-four others, of which five were midshipmen, was taken from the Constitution and put on board the Ketch Intrepid.

In the evening of the 9th of February, 1804, the Intrepid, under convoy of the Siren, arrived off Tripoli. The night was dark and stormy, and Morris was sent with a boat in shore, to reconnoitre. He pulled close to shore, but finding the weather settling into a gale, returned and ran out with the Siren and Vesuvius just in time to save shipwreck and captivity, or, perhaps, death. On the 16th, however, the weather favored the expedition and disposition was made for the attack. Morris was assigned the hazardous duty of going below and firing the ship after its capture. The arrangements were so complete that the Americans were alongside their enemy before the alarm was given; and, indeed, before the Turks knew it, the ship was taken and they were jumping into the water like so many Newfoundland dogs, or, a wholesome division of seal. The victory was complete, and in forty minutes the daring crew had effected their purpose; taken, fired and left the frigate and sent forth three hearty cheers that made the hostile harbor echo and ring with their defiant shouts. The city and fortresses were awakened by the "noise and confusion"—the cheers and confagration. From batteries and forts, and ships, volleys of artillery were poured into the darkness, and the loaded cannon of the burning ship went off like minute guns in a mournful requiem for her loss. The heroes who fired the train to this grand impromptu celebration, rowed merrily in the harbor, however, and safely returned to their quarters under the stars and stripes. No other of all our naval achievements surpassed this in splendor, and of those who bore a conspicuous part in it no one won a brighter chaplet than Charles Morris.

After this memorable achievement, up to the breaking out of the war of 1812, the life of Morris was as quiet as that of Naval officers ever is. When in July 12, the Constitution—the well-beloved "Old Ironside"—sailed from Annapolis on a cruise under Rodgers, Morris was made her first lieutenant. Few days after her departure she fell in with a British squadron, and then ensued that long chase which strongly verified the old saying—"a stern chase is a long chase." The Constitution was pursued by the best craft in the British Navy—claiming to have the best sailers afloat; she was tried on every tack; with all winds; but against all she came off triumphant—thanks to the oak of which she was built, the rope with which she was rigged, and the brave hearts and skilful heads by which she was manned! One of the chasing vessels was the Guerriere; which on the 19th of August, the same year, Morris had the pleasure of meeting on an equal footing. Then ensued that terrible combat which in thirty-eight minutes reduced the Guerriere to that condition that the wreck was considered only fit for burning, and was accordingly destroyed.

The Constitution was commanded by Capt. Isaac Hull, Morris still being her first Lieutenant.

For his gallantry in this engagement, and before Tripoli, Morris was promoted, March 15, 1813, to the rank of Captain; his appointment gave the highest satisfaction in every quarter.

In December of the same year, the frigate Adams, of 28 guns, was launched, and Morris given the command of her. The next year he was blockaded in the Potomac by a large British squadron; but, running the gauntlet in the night, he got into blue water, and sailing off, made numerous valuable captures. Finally, finding himself chased by a squadron of twenty-five sail, he was compelled to run, and escaped into Savannah, where he re-victualled. Putting to sea again on the 5th of May, he run down to the British channel, and began capturing merchantmen and creating confusion along the coast of the rock-bound isle. He was chased, but succeeded in escaping and put into Penobscot, running up nearly as high as Bangor. Here he was again blockaded by a British fleet of sixteen sail, and finding no means to avoid such a superior force, the ship was reluctantly burned, on the 3d of September, 1814. The crew was ordered to get to Portland the best way they could; and, on the day designated, there they all were, without a single desertion, or even absence!

After this Morris had no more active service. For some years he was wholly unemployed, and for several others he was the commanding officer of the Charlestown Navy Yard. He commanded the national ship in 1825-6, that bore Lafayette back to France, and in 1814 returned from his last cruise previous to that when he tripped anchor and voyaged off into those realms, of which there has been but one pilot ever returned, to place the buoys and mark the channel for safe navigation.

In the latter part of his life Commodore Morris was Chief of the Bureau of Hydrography and Repairs; and died on the 27th inst., after a few weeks' illness. The National Intelligencer, speaking of him, says:

"On the unvarying testimony of his brother officers, and without disparagement to any of the gallant men who adorn the ranks of our navy, Commodore Morris, at the time of his death, was, in all the varied qualities which constitute excellence in his profession, the ablest naval commander in the world. Nothing ever turned him from the line of duty; and when, at the end of fifty-seven years, he reached the highest point of professional honor, he might truly have said: 'I have gained the palm, but not without labor.'"

So, one by one, in faster and faster step, the heroes of the great deeds that made America American, that disenthralled her from a foreign ruler and defended her from foreign insolence; that planted her banner as a sentinel, support and protection around the globe; that made the title-page and preface of our history, gloriously golden in its rubric and inception, fall away from the ranks of the quick and are gathered to their fathers. Of them, none lived a more stainless life, rendering him worthy the chivalric boast of, Bayard, sans peur et sans reproche—than Charles Morris.—[Crescent.

Later from Hayti—The Black War not Ended.—A correspondent of the Journal of Commerce at Cape Haytien, writes on the 4th ultimo:

"Everything is in confusion here, and all business at a stand. The Haytiens have had two engagements with the Dominicans on the frontiers. In the division which accompanied the Emperor all the troops of the south refused to fight, and left him, in consequence of which he has had to abandon his march. He was on his way hither; but the latest intelligence is that the army has advanced again to Ganaminthe, and that all the troops are being collected to continue the invasion. For a time it was thought that the Emperor had lost his sway, and rumor even spoke of his successor having been named at Port-au-Prince; but this requires confirmation. Those who deserted or refused to fight have been shot some twenty miles from here. A number of officers, (all who have been taken,) and many of the common soldiers, have been executed. The most vigorous measures are in force here for the collection of troops. The people are caught up in every direction and put in prison until they are ready to be sent off."

Harbors Closed.—It is stated that New Haven (Conn.) harbor is frozen over as far as the eye can reach, varying in thickness from six to eighteen inches. The same is true of Bristol harbor, Rhode Island. New London (Conn.) harbor is frozen over for the first time in a number of years. Teams can pass over from New London to Groton side with safety. Long Island Sound is frozen over for two miles from Long Island, at Oyster Bay and Lloyd's Neck.

DEATHS.

DIED, at her residence, near Macon, Miss., on the evening of the 25th January, 1856, in the 34th year of her age, Mrs. LUCINDA F. FOOTE, wife of the writer and daughter of Col. C. and Catharine Dade, late of Fauquer county, Va.

The deceased was a Christian, and wore that character in every place. In December, 1840, at the request of her husband, she (with him) joined the M. E. Church, as a seeker of religion, and in 1846 was happily converted. Her's was not a loud, boasting profession of religion, nor was it for Sunday show, but a real principle of love to God and her associates. Meekness and consistency were the characteristics of her life.

As a wife, she was dutiful, respectful, kind and loving. As a mother, her children alone knew her value. Her greatest care was to teach them to toll the truth always, to be honest in all things, and to observe and have a due respect for the demands of God's law. As a neighbor and friend she was most approcinted by those who knew her best. As a mistress, the distress of the domestics told but too plainly they had lost their best earthly friend.

When her children and myself gathered aronnd her to talk of our separation, she was calm; told us she was not afraid to die, and that she expected to meet us in heaven. She remained in her proper mind until she breathed her last; even when unable to speak, would give signs of recognition and understanding until within a few minutes of her departurs.

Her suffering was intense for three months, but she here all with the same meekness and forbearance with which she had lived. Of her it may he truly said, she died as she had lived, peacefully in Christ. It was indeed a bitter reflection for her to give up those she so much loved. She seemed to say, with the poet, "Hide me, O my Savior, hide, 'till the storm of life is past." But hard as the temptation was, she gave up all for Christ, and, without a murmur or a struggle, quietly passed away.

May God sanctify his deed to our good.

DIED, gloriously, at Rehoboth, Ala., on the 9th January, 1856, Rev. THOS. BURCH, in the 52d year of his age.

For years past he had been in feeble health, but unwilling to give up the work of a traveling preacher, toiled on. He was a man of great uniformity of life and punctuality in filling his appointments. His ministrations were often attended with the unction of the Holy Ghost, and made effectual in comforting believers, and convicting sinners. He was one of the few in the Alabama Conference who joined at an early day.

Born in North Carolina, September 7, 1804 he removed while quite young to Tennessee, and was converted on the 20th September, 1820, and in the autumn of 1823 was received into the traveling connection of the Tennessee Conference, and transferred to the Mississippi Conference. He was appointed in 1824 to the Lawrence Circuit, in 1825 to Jones's Valley, in 1826 to Tuscaloosa Circuit, in 1827 to New River Circuit, 1828-9 stationed in Mobile, in 1830 at Claiborne. In 1831 he was supernumerary, and located at the close of that year. In 1847 he was readmitted into the Alabama Conference, and appointed to the Monroeville Circuit, since which time he has filled various appointments. He died in charge of the Prairie Bluff Colored Mission, which he served last year with great acceptability to the planters and their servants. When all his travel was over, God bestowed on him the great blessing of dying at home, in the bosom of his family. He came home from Conference in December, and was able to walk about the house and lot but a few times before he took to his bed and lingered until the 9th of January, and died amid the swelling triumphs of the Christian's faith. Often during his sickness he repeated the song, "O sing to me of heaven." After giving directions as to his burial, funeral, &c., he took an affectionate leave of his wife, children and servants, and sweetly fell asleep in Jesus.

"Oh! may I triumph so,
When all my warfare's past;
And dying, find my latest foe,
Under my last at last!"

DIED, on the 7th January, 1855, in Barbour county, Ala., at the residence of James Tucker, Esq., in the 28th year of her age, Mrs. SARAH TUCKER, consort of Reuben Tucker, and daughter of James and Ginny Johnston, of Hainville, Ala.

Our departed sister joined the M. E. Church in her 16th year, was converted in 1853, and continued a witness for Jesus to the last. The religion she professed fully sustained, in the hour of death, her long-cherished hope. In her death Christianity received another noble witness of its saving power and triumph over the grave.

JAMES G. TISON.

DIED, December 4, 1855, MARTHA GARLIC, wife of Charles Garlic, Louisinna.

She professed religion young. Becoming doubtful of her conversion, she sought the witness of the Spirit for several years, and found it joyfully in the fall of 1854, at a protracted meeting held by Rev. T. J. Lacey at Mount Zion Church. Father Burch, an aged minister, came to see her, and talked much to her. She was calm and happy; told them to sing:

"O, land of rest! for thee I sigh," and joined in the hymn.

☞ A MASTERPIECE OUTDONE.—We have lately supposed Ayer's Cherry Pectoral was the Ultima Thule in its line, and that nothing had been or would be invented which could at all surpass it in its fine points of excellence as a medicine. But we are confidently assured, by those competent to judge on the subject, that Ayer's new Pills excel in high medical artistry even that widely celebrated embodiment of his skill. He has succeeded in making them not only pleasant to take, but powerful to cure the large class of complaints which require a purgative remedy.—Lancaster Argus, Ky.

Steamboat for Sale.

On the 5th day of April next the steamer R. FULTON, of the undersigned will be sold at public auction, at his landing on Pascagoula River. The boat is well calculated for peddling, and has been built with a particular view to this purpose. She is 55 feet long by 8 wide, and has a 2½ horse power portable engine and boiler, occupying on the floor only 5 by 3 feet. Her speed is from 6 to 7 miles per hour, with 50 lbs steam, and her boiler is capable of carrying 100 lbs. She burns but one cord of wood per week, and requires but two men to run her.

Terms of Payment—One-third in cash, ⅓ after six months, and ⅓ after twelve months, with approved security. A. KIRKWOOD.

Good Medicines.

It is estimated that AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL and CATHARTIC PILLS have done more to promote the public health than any other one cause. There can be no question that the Cherry Pectoral has by its thousand on thousand cures of colds, coughs, asthma, influenza, bronchitis, &c., very much reduced the proportion of deaths from consumptive diseases in this country. The Pills are as good as the Pectoral, and will cure more complaints.

Everybody needs more or less purging. Purge the blood from its impurities. Purge the bowels, liver, and the whole visceral system from obstructions. Purge out the diseases which fasten on the body to work its decay. But for diseases, we should die only of old age. Take antidotes early, and thrust it from the system are it is yet too strong to yield.

Ayer's Pills do thrust out disease, not only while it is weak, but when it has taken a strong hold. Read the astounding statements of those who have been cured by them of dreadful scrofula, dropsy, ulcers, skin diseases, rheumatism, neuralgia, dyspepsia, internal pains, bilious complaints, heartburn, headache, gout, and many less dangerous but still threatening ailments, such as pimples on the face, worms, nervous irritability, loss of appetite, irregularities, diseases in the head, colds, fevers, dysentery, and, indeed, every variety of complaints for which a purgative remedy is required.

There are no random statements, but are authenticated by your own neighbors and your own physicians.

Try them once and you will never be without them.

Price, 25 cents per box; 5 boxes for $1.

Thirty-Fourth Congress—First Session.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 7, 1850.—Senate—Mr. Clay introduced a bill to relieve the Commissioner of Pensions from the performance of the duty of signing his name to certificates or warrants for bounty land, which was passed.

Mr. Seward remarked that since the foundation of the Government, no appropriation bill has originated in the Senate. It was an ancient and established principle that the money of the people should not be drawn from the public treasury without the consent of the representatives of the people. The British House of Commons originated appropriation bills; and, when our Constitution was formed, this conservative feature was borrowed from the English Constitution, as necessary for the liberties of the people.

After further debate, in which it was said that, heretofore, bills involving appropriations of eight millions or more of dollars had been passed without even being read, in consequence of being received at the heel of the session, the resolution was passed.

The Senate adjourned to Monday.

House of Representatives.—Mr. Grow gave notice of his intention to introduce a bill to secure homesteads to actual settlers on the public lands; and

Mr. Millson gave notice of his intention to introduce a bill to repeal the act authorizing the establishment of the Naval Board.

Mr. Campbell, of Ohio, moved a reconsideration of the vote by which the House agreed to the election of a printer. The question was decided in the affirmative—yeas 102, nays 81.

Mr. Campbell moved to postpone the further consideration of the subject until Monday next. He stated his object was to act upon the joint resolution for the relief of the poor of Washington and Georgetown.

The House soon after adjourned to the following Monday.

WASHINGTON, February 11.—Senate.—On motion of Mr. Fisk, the Secretary of War was requested to report whether any, and if so, what additional fortifications are necessary for the defence of the harbor of New York, and Brooklyn Navy Yard.

Mr. Iverson presented the petition of a naval officer, complaining of the action of the late Naval Board. He said that this case added another evidence to the many before presented of the worthless character of the law, and its more worthless execution.

Mr. Thompson, of Kentucky, submitted a resolution directing the committee on Military Affairs to inquire into the expediency of abolishing the present Military Asylum located at Harrodsburg, Ky. The place did not suit the Asylum, nor the Asylum the place.

Mr. Sumner submitted a resolution directing the committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads to consider whether the charges on letters carried by the ocean mail steamers are not unnecessarily large and burdensome, and whether something may not be done to secure the benefits of cheap ocean postage. Agreed to.

Mr. Wright presented the joint resolutions of the New Jersey Legislature, praying the restoration of Com. Charles Stewart to the position from which he was removed by the late Naval Board.

The Senate referred so much of the President's message as relates to the finances, public lands, commerce, military and naval affairs, etc., to the appropriate committees.

The discussion of the Central American question was postponed till to-morrow, when Mr. Wilson will address the Senate on the subject.

After an Executive session the Senate adjourned.

In the House, a few unsuccessful ballots for Printer.

DESPERATE AFFRAY AT A SCHOOL HOUSE.—The Lebanon (Tenn.) Herald, of the 24th ult., gives the following account of a terrible and fatal fight in a school-room in Wilson county, in that State:

This most distressing homicide we ever heard of occurred in this county, about seven miles northeast of Lebanon, on last Monday morning was a week ago, between Rufus Watson and his three sons on the one side, and two sons of John Neet on the other. The unfortunate difficulty occurred in a school-room. Young New, aged about nineteen years, was shot through the heart and expired immediately, and his little brother, some thirteen or fourteen years of age, was almost literally cut to pieces—receiving no less, we learn, than seven dangerous wounds. Strange as it may appear, he is still living and hopes are entertained of his recovery. Rufus Watson received the talmed of his recovery. Rufus Watson received the contents of a pistol, loaded with bird shot, in the breast, but was not seriously hurt. The difficulty grew out of an old grudge that has existed between the heads of the respective families.

Watson and his sons were examined at Taylorsville on Friday last. On hearing the evidence the court held them to bail in the sum of $4,000. One of the boys was bailed out, but the other two and the father, failing to give bail, were committed to jail to await their trial at the next term of the Circuit Court.

ARRIVAL OF THE CANADA AT HALIFAX.

ADVANCE IN COTTON.

DECLINE IN BREADSTUFFS.

The Paris Peace Congress.

LOUISIANA LEGISLATURE.

BY THE SOUTHERN AND NATIONAL LINE.

HALIFAX, Feb. 17.—The Royal Mail steamship Canada arrived at this port, en route for Boston, this morning.

The advices of the Canada are to Feb. 2d—one week later than those of the Persia.

The Steamship Pacific.

No tidings have been heard of the missing steamship Pacific.

Liverpool Cotton Market.

LIVERPOOL, Feb. 1.—The market is steady with an advance of ⅛d.

The sales of the week amount to 83,000 bales, of which exporters took 12,000 and speculators 11,000.

The sales of Saturday were estimated at 10,000 bales. The market closed firm and quiet.

Our quotations are as follows:

Orleans Fair, 6⅜; Middling, 5 13-16d.; Uplands Fair, 6d.; Middling, 5 11-16d.

The stock in port amounted to 419,000 bales, of which 253,000 bales were American.

Havre Cotton Market.

HAVRE, Jan. 30.—Cotton is a trifle lower, and Orleans bres ordinaire 8 to 9c.

New York Markets.

NEW YORK, Feb. 16.—Our Cotton market is firm, with sales to-day of 4,500 bales. Flour is quiet and unchanged. In Wheat there is nothing doing. Corn is firmer, and mixed is quoted at 82c.

Spirits of Turpentine, dull at 40½c. Rosin firm: No. 1., 2¼ to 2⅜c. Rice is firm. Freights stiffer.

Breadstuffs.

There is a considerable decline in Breadstuffs. Western and Canal Flour is quoted at 37s.; Ohio, 40s.

Corn has declined. White is quoted at 37s. 6d. to 38s.; Yellow, 36s.

Provisions.

Beef has declined, and is quoted at 114s. Pork has also declined, and the market is quiet. Bacon is quiet at 57s. Lard as declined and is quiet at 60s to 63s.

From Manchester.

Our advices from Manchester are much more favorable.

Sugar.

Our circulars quote a decline of one shilling in Sugar.

The Money

LONDON, Feb. 2.—The Money Market is more stringent. The bullion in the Bank of England has decreased £80,000. Consols closed at 90¼ to 90⅜.

The Steamship Atlantic,

The Collins Mail Steamship Atlantic, from New York, arrived out at Liverpool on the 31st ult.

The Peace Prospects.

Everything speaks favorably for peace now. The Peace Congress meets in Paris about the 15th. It is said to be doubtful as to whether Prussia (?) will be admitted to the Congress.

The Peace protocol memorandum was signed on Friday by the Ministers of the five powers, and a short armistice will next be agreed upon.

A dispatch received at Vienna from Russia confirms the telegraphic announcements of the unconditional acceptance of the propositions of the Allies by the Czar, as the basis of negotiation.

The Congress will meet at Paris on the 17th, and the preliminaries will probably be settled by the 25th.

It is asserted that Prussia refuses to agree to the conditions exacted by the Allies preliminary to admission to the Peace Conference, and that she will consequently be excluded from the Conference.

Baron Brunow and Count Orloff represent Russia; Clarendon, England; Dazeglo, Sardinia; Count Buol, Austria; Walfueski, France, and Dervish Pasha, Turkey.

England.

The Queen's Speech to Parliament is very meagre, and does not touch upon American affairs.

The London Advertiser says that Mr. Buchanan and Lord Clarendon had an interview at the Foreign office on Tuesday, and that very angry words passed between them touching the Central-American question.

BATON ROUGE, Feb. 16.—Senate.—Numerous bills of a private nature were acted upon.

House.—The address for the removal of Duffy passed by a vote of 45 yeas to 23 nays, after a long debate, participated in by Messrs. Brice, Patton, Alexander and Semmes. The vote is of a strictly party character. The House adjourned until Monday.

The following appointments by the Governor have been confirmed:

S. B. Frost, Port Warden of New Orleans; Members of the Board of Health, Dr. W. Stone, Dr. A. F. Axson, George Jones, J. Y. Egana, A. A. Leforest, Dr. W. Rushton; Resident Physician at the Quarantine Station, Dr. J. F. Thorpe; Marshal of the same, A. Lartigue.

Kansas Affairs.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 16.—Gov. Shannon leaves for Kansas to-day. He will remove his office from Shawnee Mission to Lecomton, which is the centre of difficulties.

Orders have been issued by the War Department to Col. Sumner in accordance with the President's views, and, if found necessary, the Governor may call upon 800 troops at Fort Leavenworth, and 400 at Fort Riley.

NEW YORK, Feb. 15.—The Post contains a letter from Sam Houston to the President, in which the writer declares that no consideration would induce him to retain his official position at Washington.

Cotton Market.

NEW YORK, Feb. 15.—Our Cotton Market is active and stiller, with sales to-day of 7000 bales.

BOSTON, Feb. 19.—The Canada has arrived from Halifax. A letter has been received by the Canada, dated Liverpool, 28, stating that the Pacific is safe. The report is considered doubtful.

In the House of Lords, Lord Derby said he regretted that the Queen's speech was not conciliatory. Lord Clarenden said that the Enlistment Question with the United States was susceptible of a peaceful solution.

The English are about to seize the Kingdom of Oude, allowing the King a pension of half a million. (Of what?—Ed.)

From Washington.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 18.—Senate.—The doings of the Naval Board are still under debate. The Senate to-day received a message from the President on Kansas affairs, enclosing the correspondence of the Territorial officials, including the letters and instructions to Col. Sumner to be in readiness with troops to respond to Gov. Shannon's requisitions. The President's course was upheld by Toucy and opposed by Wilson.

House.—A bill is introduced to enable the people of Oregon to form a State Government preliminary to its admission into the Union. Also, re-establishing the boundaries of Kansas, and prohibiting slavery there and in Nebraska. Referred to Committee on Territories.

New York Market.

NEW YORK, Feb. 18.—Cotton firm, with sales of 2,000 bales. Flour lower—Ohio, $8 31; Mixed Corn, 80c; Wheat declined.

Louisiana Legislature.

BATON ROUGE, Feb. 19.—Senate.—The address for the removal of Duffy brought on a warm debate. A motion to make it the special order for Thursday was lost by a vote of 19 to 16. The bill passed to a third reading by the same vote, after speeches by Messrs. Herault, St. Paul, Haynes and Ryan. The bill is exciting much interest, and will pass, doubtless, to-morrow.

House.—No business of importance done.

Rivers and the Weather.

LOUISVILLE, Feb. 15.—The river is still rising, and the prospects of an early resumption of navigation continue good.

The weather is still moderating, and we are having a slight fall of rain, which will help the cause along.

WHALING.

Among the many diversified interests of our country, which include, indeed, almost all that are of use or profit elsewhere—in the actual sense of the word use—there are very few that in a quiet and unostentatious, but nevertheless effective manner, surpass that whose field of operations is the frozen sea, and whose home is where the eternal icebergs pile themselves, like Pelion upon Ossa, to pierce the heavens. In those regions where the sun makes but one long day in the year, embracing months instead of hours, and gives over all the rest to night and darkness, the venture some voyager finds a harvest richer than any of the fertile prairies of the West, or the broad fields of the South; finds a great field to which no title deeds are needful, beyond personal hardihood and unflinching courage, and from which may be gleaned a surer wealth than what is harvested out of the mines of California: finds great fortunes in the back whales, and competence in their greasy blubber.

The courage and skill which is a pre-requisite and necessity to those labors that lie in the shadow of the poles—in either the Arctic or Antarctic oceans—have nowhere so full and complete a life as in our own country; and of those who plunge with pleasure into their many dangers and hazards, there are none like that class of men who are nursed near Nantucket, or New Bedford, and go forth on their long voyages like a lady making a call upon some near and dear friend. From childhood up their education is watery. They know Neptune in all his freaks—angry and pleasant—washing the sandy beach with curling wavelet; leaping towards the sky with many a whitened crest; in action at rest; in sport, at war. They know him and handle him, as the mariners of no other lands can do.

Among the many papers published in this country, devoted to almost every interest appertaining to it, there is no one more curious than that at New Bedford, Mass., called the "Whalemen's Shipping List." which gives the statistics of commerce in this especial field, and enlightens us, who live near the equator, of what our brethren are doing around the pole. From a recent number we gather some information, which, as it is novel to us, may prove so to our readers, and may give them an inkling of a business concerning which they have hardly dreamed. It gives us an additional evidence of that energy, zeal and activity, which crowns our people with laurels, greener than all the titles, sparkles and decorations, that any royalty can bestow.

The journal to which we refer gives the number of American vessels which entered that port for 1855, from foreign ports, as one hundred and forty-nine, and the number of foreign vessels, in the same period of time, nineteen; making a total of one hundred and sixty-eight. Of this number sixty-four were engaged in foreign trade, and all the rest—one hundred and four—sailed under the stars and stripes, chasing the behemoth of the deep, and redddening the cold waves of the south sea with his blood.

Some idea of the extent of the business may be gathered from the fact that the amount of duties, received on merchandise imported to that place, in 1855—consisting principally of such articles as are useful for the pursuit of the whale fishery—amounted to $7,878. The value of the sperm oil entered marked as high as $3,005,971; the value of the whale oil was $2,105,718, and the value of whalebone was $619,170; making a grand total of the harvest, from amid the icebergs of the pole—reaped by American enterprise and American tars, in American bottoms—no less than six millions, sixty thousand, eight hundred and eighty nine dollars! In this there is some cause for boast ing—some reason for pride! It is a victory where manliness, courage and skill, are the essential prerequisites for any success whatever; it is a peaceful triumph of commerce, more creditable and more profitable than all those empty laurels of war for which so fierce and costly a contest is waged by the nations of the old world. We may add that the whole number of protections granted, from this single port, to American seamen during the year, were 2,272.

It is sometimes sneeringly asked, when the pretensions of this country to being a first rate power, are under discussion—"Where is your navy?" How can a country whose war-ships are surpassed four-fold by those of England alone, lay claim to the rank which is challenged by the United States?" A partial answer lies in the figures we have given. A nation's naval strength does not consist alone in the number of war vessels she may have rotting in her docks, but in the number and character of the sailors she has with which to man them. Here is the power of America; that from her merchant marine, she could, to-morrow, man every war vessel the world holds, and so man them that they would be excelled by no other force of an equal size which the world holds. Paul Jones' would spring up like the armed warriors from those teeth sown by Cadmus, and challenge the world to arms; would meet the world's navy on equal terms. In this lies American strength and every figure that goes to show its increase is gladdening to the heart of patriotism. May the day be far distant when those who now fight the whale and defy the poles shall be called to fight their fellow-men; may the career of our peaceful prosperity flow on in a quiet and uninterrupted stream: but should the day arrive when an appeal to arms is needful, where is the country that could successfully encounter the thousands of brave mariners whose education was gathered amid the poles and the icebergs, fighting the whale and the north wind?

President Pierce's Kansas Proclamation.

The Washington Union of the 12th publishes this document officially. After the first portion of the preamble, in which it is stated that the peace of the territory has been endangered by armed organizations, both within and outside its limits, he says:

And whereas all such plans for the determination of the future institutions of the Territory, if carried into action from within the same, will constitute the fact of insurrection, and, if from without, that of invasive aggression, and will, in either case, justify and require the forcible interposition of the whole power of the general government, as well to maintain the laws of the Territory as those of the Union;

Now, therefore, I, Franklin Pierce, President of the United States, do issue this my proclamation to command all persons engaged in unlawful combinations against the constituted authority of the Territory of Kansas or of the United States, to disperse and retire to their respective abodes, and to warn all such persons that any attempted insurrection in said Territory or aggressive intrusion into the same will be resisted not only by the employment of the local militia, but also by that of any available forces of the United States; to the end of assuring humanity from violence and full protection to the persons, property, and civil rights of all peaceful and law-abiding inhabitants of the Territory.

If, in any part of the Union, the fury of faction or fanaticism, inflamed into disregard of the great principles of popular sovereignty which, under the constitution, are fundamental in the whole structure of our institutions, is to bring on the country the dire calamity of an arbitrament of arms in that Territory, it shall be between lawless violence on the one side and conservative force on the other, wielded by legal authority of the general government.

I call on the citizens, both of adjoining and of distant States, to abstain from unauthorized intermeddling in the local concerns of the Territory, admonishing them that its organic law is to be executed with impartial justice; that all individual acts of illegal interference will incur condign punishment; and that any endeavor to intervene by organized force will be firmly withstood.

I invoke all good citizens to promote order by rendering obedience to the law; to seek remedy for temporary evils by peaceful means; to discountenance and repress the counsels and the instigations of agitators and of disorganizers; and to testify their attachment to their country, their pride in its greatness, their appreciation of the blessings they enjoy, and their determination that republican institutions shall not fail in their hands, by co-operating to uphold the majesty of the laws and to vindicate the sanctity of the constitution.

VESSELS ASHORE.—Dispatches of the 11th and 12th from Norfolk says:

The bark Lean Racer, Capt. Eldridge, of and for Baltimore, from Pideran, with a cargo of fruit, went ashore on Cape Henry, on Saturday night. The Captain is lightening her in hopes of getting off.

Schooner Clarendon, Duncan, from this port, bound to Boston, went ashore at 5 o'clock on the morning of the 4th inst., four miles from Race Point. Crew saved by means of the bomb gun and line, which apparatus works admirably. Vessel and cargo will be a total loss. The schooner is full of water.

In Brooklyn there has arisen a conflict of authority between the Coroner, acting as wreck master, and the Mayor, acting as protector to the owners—concerning the wreck of the brig Safford. Both Mayor and Coroner issued orders on Friday, the 8th, to arrest each other's officers, and there was a large crowd on board expecting fun, but the fun didn't turn up, and both parties contrived to unite, trying to raise the vessel.

TENNESSEE RAILROADS.

Report of the Commissioner of Roads.

In compliance with a resolution adopted by the Legislature, Col. Y. G. Payne, Commissioner of Roads, yesterday submitted to the Senate, through the Governor, a report of "the condition, progress, and probable future prospects of the railroads in this State entitled to State aid." The report is somewhat lengthy, and aside from its statistics, is devoted mostly to a description of the various important trunk lines, their condition, prospects, and contemplated future connections. We shall endeavor hereafter, as soon as we are able to get a copy, to publish copious extracts from the report; the facts contained in which are of moment, and cannot fail to be interesting to every reader. From a tabular statement of the various roads entitled to State aid, their length in Tennessee, distance completed, amount of State aid granted, amount received, etc., etc., we copy the following recapitulation, showing the entire liability of the State, and the number of miles of road completed, in progress, and in contemplation likely to be completed:

	Miles in Tennessee.	State aid granted.	State aid received.
W. Tenn.	130.93	$3,193,000	$1,450,000
M. Tenn.	183.85	3,668,000	2,185,000
E. Tenn.	190	5,570,000	1,620,000
Total Lettres	504.78	$12,431,000	$5,057,000

There are twenty-two different enterprises enumerated in the report, for which the above liabilities have been incurred, present and prospective, the total cost of which, when completed, in this State, is estimated at $35,000,000—more than double the State liability. They are as follows, with their length of road in Tennessee:

IN WEST TENNESSEE.

Memphis and Charleston (Memphis to Stevenson,) 87 miles; Mississippi and Tennessee road, (Memphis to Grenada,) nine and eight tenths miles; Memphis and Ohio road, (Memphis to Paris,) 130 miles; Mobile and Ohio road, (Mobile to Cairo,) 1184 miles; Mississippi Central and Tennessee, (Canton, Miss., to Jackson, Tenn.,) 48 miles; Northern road, (Nashville to Hickman,) in West Tennessee, 87 miles; making a total of 470.08 miles in West Tennessee, all of which roads are in an active state of construction and progressing rapidly, and all but one or two have been granted bridge aid, in addition to the $10,000 per mile.

IN MIDDLE TENNESSEE.

Nashville and Chattanooga, 151 miles; Tennessee and Alabama, 135 miles; McMinnville and Manchester, 34½ miles; Central Southern, Columbus, and Decatur, 48½ miles (not yet commenced;) Louisville and Nashville, 175 miles; Edgefield and Kentucky, Edgefield to Henderson, Ky., 48 miles; Southwestern (McMinnville and Danville, Ky.) 85 miles; Winchester and Alabama, (Deckard's Depot, on the Chattanooga road to Guntersville, Ala.) 23 miles; Nashville and Northwestern, (in Middle Tennessee) 81 miles; making in all, in Middle Tennessee, 577½ miles. But three of the roads here mentioned, the two first and the last, are in an active state of construction; and none of the others, with the exception of the Louisville and Nashville, have yet let any portion of the work to contract.

IN EAST TENNESSEE.

East Tennessee and Georgia Road (Knoxville to Dalton) 110 miles finished; East Tennessee and Virginia, (Knoxville to Bristol) 130 miles, in active construction; Knoxville and Charleston (Knoxville to State line) 55 miles; Knoxville and Kentucky (Knoxville to Parkville) 30 miles; Western and Charleston (Athens to Blue Ridge Road) 30 miles; Cleveland and Chattanooga, 30 miles; and Cincinnati, Cumberland Gap and Charleston, 85 miles; making a total of 430 miles in East Tennessee. Of the four last mentioned roads, only one, the one last mentioned, has let any of their work out.

There are other roads in the State, entitled to aid; but the Commissioner estimates that the amount of aid demanded will not exceed the amount granted in the above roads, calculating that the chances are about equal for a failure of some of the roads enumerated, to come within the provisions of the act, and for any of those not mentioned to do so.

[Nashville Banner, 31st Jan.

ORIGIN OF LEAP YEAR.—When Julius Cæsar, that old Roman filibuster, of whom you have heard, undertook to reform the computation of time, he ordained that the year should consist of 365 days except the fourth year, which should consist of 366 days—the additional day to be reckoned by twice counting the 25th day of February, which was the sixth calend of March. Hence the name, from the Latin words, "bis" and "sexstilis," sixth. The calends (whence our calendar) or first day of the month were reckoned backwards to the ides, thus: the first day of March was the first calend; the 28th of February was the second calend of March, February 27th the third, and so on. The Julian year, which by this rule was reckoned at 365 days and six hours, was found not to be accurate, but to exceed the length of the solar year by 11 minutes, which error, would, in 131 years, amount to an entire day. It was, therefore, corrected by Pope Gregory, in 1582, who retrenched eleven days from the Julian computation—being an excess or gain over the solar time. Out of this correction has grown the distinction between old and new style. The Gregorian or new style was introduced into Germany in 1770, and by act of Parliament into England, 1752, just one hundred and three years ago, the 2d day of September (O. S.) of that year being reckoned as the 14th (N. S.) under the Gregorian system. Although the Russyrths is rebuilted with the slanders tongue, we intercalculate the 20th of February every fourth year for Leap Year, and for still greater accuracy, make only one Leap Year out of every four, even every century years, is—the years 1700 and 1800 were not Leap Years; nor will A. D. 1900 be reckoned as one; but the year 2000 will be Bissextile. And that is the way Leap Year became to be an "institutium." [Wash. Star.

Invention of Printing.

The following account of the invention of printing is given by an ancient German chronicler of the name of Trithemius, who appears to have personally known one of the three persons who clearly seem to have the best title to be called the inventors of printing.

"At this time, in the city of Mentz on the Rhine, in Germany, and not in Italy, as some have erroneously written, that wonderful and then unheard-of art of printing and characterizing books was invented and devised by John Guttenberger, a citizen of Mentz, who, having expended almost the whole of his property in the invention of this art, and on account of the difficulties which he experienced on all sides, was about to abandon it altogether; when, by the advice, and through the means of John Fust, (or Faust,) likewise a citizen of Mentz, he succeeded in bringing it to perfection. At first they formed (engraved) the characters or letters in written order on blocks of wood, and in this manner they printed the vocabulary called a 'Catholicon.' But with these forms [blocks] they could print nothing else, because the characters could not be transposed in these tablets, but were engraved thereon as we have said. To this invention succeeded a more subtle one, for they found out the means of cutting the forms of all letters of the alphabet, which they called matrices, from which again they cast characters of copper or tin of sufficient hardness to resist the necessary pressure, which they had before engraved by hand. And, truly, as I learned thirty years since from Peter Opilio (Schoeffer) de Gernsheim, citizen of Mentz, who was son-in-law of the first inventor of this art, great difficulties were experienced after the first invention of this art of printing, for in printing the Bible, before they had completed the third quarter-sion (or gathering of four sheets,) 4000 florins were expended. This Peter Schoeffer, whom we have above mentioned, first servant, and afterwards son-in-law to the first inventor, John Fust, as we have said, an ingenious and sagacious man, discovered the more easy method of casting the types, and thus the art was reduced to the complete state in which it now is. These three kept this method of printing secret for some time until it was divulged by some of their workmen, without whose aid this art could not have been exercised; it was first developed at Strasburg, and soon became known to other nations. And thus much of the admirable and subtle art of printing may suffice—the first inventors were citizens of Mentz. These three first inventors of printing, (videlicet,) John Guttenberger, John Faust, and Peter Schoeffer, his son-in-law, lived at Mentz, in the house called Zum Jungen, which has ever since been called the printing office."

The invention of Schoeffer, which, whatever might have been its first mechanical imperfections, undoubtedly completed the principle of printing, is more particularly described in an early document, which is given in several learned works on typography, as proceeding from a relation of Fust. It is as follows: "Peter Schoeffer, of Gernsheim, perceiving his master Fust's design, and being himself ardently desirous to improve the art, found out (by the good providence of God) the method of cutting (incidendi) from the characters in a matrix, that the letters might each be singly cast, instead of being cut. He privately cut matrices for the whole alphabet; and when he showed his master the letters cast from these matrices, Fust was so pleased with the contrivance that he promised Peter to give him his only daughter Christiana in marriage—a promise which he soon after performed. But there were as many difficulties at first with these letters as there had been before with the wooden ones; the metal being too soft to support the force of the impression; but this defect was soon remedied by mixing the metal with a substance which sufficiently hardened it." John Schoeffer, the son of Peter, who was also a printer, confirms this account, adding, "Fust and Schoeffer, concealed this new improvement by subministering an oath of secrecy to all whom they intrusted, till the year 1462, when, by the dispersion of their servants into different countries, at the sacking of Mentz by the Archbishop Adolphus, the invention was publicly divulged."

A MAN FOUND DEAD IN A CHIMNEY FLUE.—Yesterday morning, (says the New York Courier,) at the tenement house of John Stuart, No. 130 Cherry street, the dead body of a young man was discovered in one of the chimney flues. The body was found to be jammed firmly in the flue, and frozen. He had on no clothing, except his shirt and drawers. It proved to be the body of an insane man, named Louis Miller, who disappeared on New Year's morning. A person saw him go down the chimney on New Year's morning, but supposed he was taking a short cut to his room.

When the new Cunard steamship Persia arrived at Jersey City she attracted much attention. About one-third of the buckets were knocked off during her encounter with enormous ice fields on the banks. The huge iron bars which compose the frame were curled up and twisted as if they had been pasteboard. Notwithstanding her disabled condition, however, the Persia made her last 300 miles to Sandy Hook in 24 hours. After leaving Liverpool, she attained an average of fourteen miles an hour until obstructed by the ice.

HEAVY DAMAGES FOR SLANDER.—The Cost of an Ungoverned Expression.—In the Boston Superior Court, a few days ago, the case of Mary Doherty vs. John L. Brown, was brought to a close. The plaintiff in this case sued for $5000 damages, for injury done to her character by an opprobrious epithet, applied to her by defendant, in whose family she had lived. The use of the language was not denied, and the defendant undertook to prove its truth from the conduct of the plaintiff, but failed. The jury rendered a verdict assessing the damages at $3,666 66.

The Portland State of Maine says that by the end of this year there will be a continuous line of railway from the Atlantic ocean at Portland, to Iowa City, a distance of 1,436 miles, making, it says, the most magnificent line of railway on the globe.

New Ground Receipt.—The following is the famous Newbold receipt, which has acquired a world celebrity:

"Take ten ounces saltpetre, 5 lbs. brown sugar, 2 oz. pearlash, 4 gallons of water. Boil all together, and skim the pickle well cold. Put it on the meat. Hams to remain in eight weeks—beef three weeks. The above is for 100 lbs. weight."

To Restore Pork.—In warm weather, the brine of pork frequently becomes sour and the pork tainted. Take off the brine, boil it, skim it well, then pour it back again upon the meat, boiling hot. This will restore it, even where it was much injured.

Recipe to Preserve Pork.—Take one lb. of black pepper, and grind it fine, for 1 barrel, or 200 lbs. pork, and sprinkle on each layer of pork, and it is quite brown, then put on pickle. It helps to preserve the meat, and adds greatly to the flavor and the smell of it.

Pickle for Beef.—To eight gallons of water add one quart of molasses, three pounds of sugar, four ounces of saltpetre, and [illegible] salt is sufficient to make it so strong that it will bear up an egg. This quantity will suffice for two quarters of beef.

Creosote derives its name from the peculiar quality. It is formed of two Greek words: [illegible] flesh, and [illegible] I save.

Whisky Smuggling Contrivances.

In the days when high-heeled French were the pride of fashion, there was a shoemaker in London who made a fortune by the sale of the best Paris boots at a price which all his fellow-tradesmen declared would ruin him. Newfoundland.

Of this greatest of American Islands—equal in extent to the State of Virginia—so little is generally known that the subjoined account of it, from the pen of Lanman, will possess interest for many of our readers:

To the Editors of the National Intelligencer.—When upon my last piscatorial expedition to Northern New Brunswick, I had the pleasure of throwing the line for several days, in company with a highly intelligent gentleman from Newfoundland. Thwarted as I had just been in my plans for a visit to that Island, and having from childhood ever looked upon it as a most interesting region, I must confess that I well nigh fell in love with my new acquaintance. When not talking about the salmon we were now and then capturing, I devoted myself to asking questions, and the substance of the replies I received, together with a few historical facts, I propose to embody in this letter. And now that this British dependency has recently become a party to the reciprocity treaty, my statements will naturally be more interesting to the public than they might otherwise have been.

Newfoundland was discovered by John and Sebastian Cabot in 1497. By them it was named Primavista, or first-seen-land, and hence its present Anglicised name. It was first colonized by masters of fishing vessels in 1615, and is the oldest British colony in the Western world. The second attempt to plant a colony there was made by Sir George Calvert, afterwards Lord Baltimore, in 1622; and when he abandoned it for a more genial clime it contained three hundred and fifty families. It was in 1635 that Charles I. granted the French permission to cure and dry fish in Newfoundland, and the British fishery was first encouraged, by all exemption from tax or toll, in 1663. From that year until 1728, when the first Governor was appointed, there was no such thing as law or order on the island, owing to the constant animosity existing between the settlers and the merchant adventurers; and its subsequent history only proves that it was looked upon by England merely as a nursery for hardy seamen, and its manifold natural resources almost wholly neglected.

With regard to the physical aspect of Newfoundland, its average length may be roughly stated at four hundred and fifty miles, and its breadth two hundred miles, although at one point it may be three hundred miles wide; its area, therefore, being somewhat larger than that of Virginia. Although the interior of the island has been scientifically explored only to a very limited extent, and many of the roads, so-called, are mere Indian trails or paths worn by the wild animals, the following facts have been established: It abounds in rivers and lakes of moderate size, and the surface of the country is about equally divided between high hills or mountains and low, level land, some of the former attaining an elevation of twelve hundred feet, at some points pushing boldly into the sea, while the low country is composed of peat-bogs and marshy barrens, or covered with woods, in which boulder rocks are abundant. Various species of the spruce, the fir, and the pine grow everywhere, but seldom attain a greater height than thirty feet, and are very slender, while in the more northern portions they are so very low and their branches so matted together that some of the smaller animals have been known to travel a considerable distance on the tops of the stunted trees. The most useful tree indigenous to the island is the tamarac or larch, the timber of which is employed in building small vessels. The elm, the maple, and the beech are rare, and the oak unknown. The birch is found abundantly in some situations, and is said to have been used by the aborigines not only in making their canoes, but a certain tender portion of it as food. The variety of recumbent and trailing evergreens is immense, and all the berries peculiar to northern latitudes are so abundant as to be an article of export. On leaving the wilderness and approaching the habitations of man, at the proper season, it is found that oats and potatoes thrive well; also the best of grasses and clover; also the more common vegetables, such as beans, peas and cabbages. Indian corn will not mature, and wheat only thrives in the interior.

With regard to flowers, both cultivated and wild the varieties are very numerous, and, though beautiful, very few of them have any fragrance. It would appear, therefore, from these few particulars, that the soil of the country is sufficiently fertile to make agriculture profitable; and when we are told by the geologists that coal in large quantities, so important in a cold country where wood is not abundant, with many other minerals, are to be found embosomed under its surface, we cannot but discern the beneficent hand of Providence. As to the climate of Newfoundland, it only differs from that of Canada and New Brunswick in its extreme violentudes. It is not so very cold, but unpleasant; very foggy, but not unhealthy.

But the animal kingdom of this huge island is even more peculiar and interesting than the vegetable. A Swedish naturalist, who spent two years there, reported it to contain no less than five hundred species of birds. The water birds are particularly numerous, the interior lakes affording secure breeding places for the wild geese, and the rocky coasts affording favorable situations for the elder ducks. The wail of the loon is heard on every sheet of water, and a white-headed eagle has his watch-tower in every valley. Ptarmigan are abundant, but partridges are unknown. The snowy owl hoots to his fellow by the light of the aurora; and at midsummer the humming-bird appears for a few days to make the children glad. Snipe, plover and curlews are abundant. Of the larger quadrupeds, the cariboos or American reindeer are most numerous, and the only animals of the deer kind on the island. Their paths intersect the whole country like sheep-walks; they are not domesticated, but hunted only for food. The black bear is found in the wilder parts of the country, and an iceberg occasionally comes floating down from the Arctic bearing a white bear as passenger. The wolf and the fox, the hare, the martin, the beaver, the otter and the muskrat are found throughout the interior, and the entire coasts swarm with varieties of the seal, and the morse or sea horse is sometimes found.

Of domestic animals, the horse, sheep, cattle and swine are all reared to a limited extent; but this island is particularly famous for its dogs. They are of two kinds, a brown wiry-haired and wolfish animal, imported from Labrador, and the curly-haired Newfoundland species. The best of them are perfectly black, and genuine specimens can always be known by the inside of his mouth being black. They are not large, but powerfully built; they subsist entirely upon fish, and are not particular as to whether it is raw, cooked or putrid, and have a fashion of catching their own fish. They are affectionate in disposition, and are quite as much at home in the water as on land. They are very numerous in the island, and when removed to a warmer climate are subject to a glandular swelling in the ear which often proves fatal. One specimen that was sent to the Hon. Mr. Crampton in 1853 died suddenly, as was supposed, merely from the effect of hot weather.

As to reptiles, not a snake or a lizard, a frog or a toad has ever been seen in the country. As he did in Ireland, St. Patrick or some other benevolent saint seems to have "banished all the varmint" from this region. In regard to the finny tribes, the species are not so abundant as might be supposed, but their immense numbers cannot be computed. In the inland lakes and rivers nothing but salmon and trout are ever found, but with nets they are taken by the ton. Few and far between, however, are the fly-fishing streams which have yet been discovered. More numerous by far are the varieties of fish found in the surrounding sea, such as the whale and porpoise, the dolphin and herring, the mackerel and capelin; but the cod-fish outnumbers them all in local favor and commercial importance. This fish is found in certain localities all around the island, but the chief fishing grounds are off the southeast coast. The "Great Bank," to the southeast of the island, is the most extensive submarine plateau yet discovered, being about six hundred miles long by two hundred wide, with a depth of water varying from twenty-five to ninety-five fathoms. Upon this watery plain do the hardy fishermen of at least five nations annually meet to follow their laborious and venturesome business.

The resident population of Newfoundland is now estimated at more than one hundred thousand, and transient visitors at about the same figure. It is governed by a Representative Assembly of fifteen members, with an Executive Council of twelve members, appointed, like the Governor, by the Crown of England. The colony has recently been erected into a Protestant see, but most of the inhabitants are Roman Catholic. That every body is, in one way or other, connected with the fishing or seal-hunting business, is a matter of course, and there is also a great variety of nationalities represented by the population. Generally speaking, the inhabitants are simple in their manners, and have but few educational opportunities. They toil without ceasing, and are contented with the necessaries of life; and those who habitually leave home for business or pleasure have semi-monthly opportunities of taking sailing packets to England, and a steamer plies regularly between the cities of St. John and Halifax.

And now, after a few remarks about the Indians of Newfoundland, I will conclude my rambling dissertation. The Esquimaux of Labrador occasionally visit the northern extremity of the island, and a few Micmac hunters and trappers frequent the interior and southern portions, but the aborigines of the island are said to be extinct. They were called the Beothic or Red Indians, and so named because they painted their faces with ochre. Their history is most melancholy. When first visited by Europeans, three centuries ago, they were mild and inoffensive; but they sternly refused to hold any intercourse with the invaders of their hunting grounds, and consequently became the victims of a heartless revenge. The white men, aided by the Esquimaux and Micmacs, have pursued them and murdered them without a particle of mercy from time immemorial, and, as they stand alone among the savages of the western hemisphere in their undying antipathy to the white man, so is their history more purely romantic than that of any other nation of American aborigines.

The Council of War at Paris.

The Paris correspondent of Le Nord says that when Prince Jerome went to communicate the news of the Russian acceptance of the peace proposals to his daughter, the Princess Mathilde, that lady threw herself upon his neck, "weeping for joy;" also, that when the Emperor Napoleon read the dispatch to the council of war, Admiral Lyons cried, "Sire, I don't exactly understand it; there must be some mistake!" Louis Napoleon smiled, and read it again. Then "the English began whispering busily among themselves. The Duke of Cambridge rose, saying that his mission at Paris was at an end, and that he had only to take leave of the Emperor and start that evening for London. Louis Napoleon insisted that his Grace should remain three or four days. As to Prince Napoleon, after the dispatch was read, his Royal Highness's remark was, 'Then Italy and Poland are sacrificed.'" The same writer asserts that lively differences have taken place in the council between the Duke of Cambridge and Prince Napoleon, the former warmly resisting any project of the re-establishment of Polish independence.

The Manchester Guardian correspondent gives the following version of the scene:

A few instants after receiving the dispatch, the Emperor opened the council of war of that day, or rather he entered the council room, before every one, as is the custom, and the other members were introduced. As soon as the Duke of Cambridge appeared, Napoleon tendered to him a paper, and then turning round to the others, gave them the news. If I am truly informed, Sir Harry Jones went so far as to exclaim, "Can I have heard rightly, or is there some mistake?" Upon which the Emperor is said to have smiled whilst saying, "You see there can be no mistake, for I have this moment given the dispatch to the Duke of Cambridge." It is further affirmed that the few lines of the dispatch once read aloud, Sir Edmund Lyons, crumbling together in his hand some papers he held, took his hat, observing that he had nothing more to do there, and left the council room, before the Emperor had risen, or declared the sitting at an end, which has been commented upon ever since by the persons attached to the court as one of the most extraordinary breaches of etiquette ever committed.

Beautiful Incident.

Among the innumerable amusing and touching episodes which daily mingle with the brilliant and tempting life of Paris, we find the following little gem set in print by the French papers:

About 9 o'clock in the morning a little boy of twelve, whose jacket of white cloth and apron dittto distinctly indicated that he followed the profession of pastry-cook, was returning from market with an open basket containing butter and eggs on his head. When he had reached the vicinity of the church of St. Eustache, the little fellow, who could only with difficulty make his way through the crowd, was violently jostled by a stranger who was passing, so that his basket tipped and fell to the ground with its contents. The poor lad, when he saw his eggs all broken and his butter tumbled in the kennel, began to cry bitterly and wring his hands. A person who happened to be in the crowd that had gathered around the little fellow, drew a ten sous piece from his pocket, and giving it to the boy, asked the rest who stood grouped around him to do the same, to make up the loss occasioned by this accident. Influenced by his example, every one present eagerly complied, and very speedily the boy's apron contained a respectable collection of coppers and silver. When all had contributed their quota, our young Vatel, whose distress had vanished in a moment, as though by enchantment, warmly thanked his new found benefactors for their kindness, and forthwith proceeded to count the sum he had received, which amounted to no less than twenty-two francs and thirty-five centimes; but instead of quietly putting this sum into his pocket, he produced the bill of the articles he had lost, and as its total amounted only to fourteen francs, he appropriated no more than that sum; and then observing in the group that surrounded him a poor woman in rags, the gallant little fellow walked right to her and placed the remainder in her hands.

Certainly it would have been impossible to have shown himself more deserving of public generosity, or to have acknowledged it in any handsomer manner; hence the boy's noble conduct was greeted with the applause of the crowd, who were delighted to find such delicacy and propriety of feeling in so young a bosom.

Cremation.—The New York "Evening Post," in an enlightened article on this subject, suggested by the affecting case of Mrs. Pfeil, of Milwaukie, says:

"We have never heard of any other example of disposing of the dead in this country, by the act of man." The editor had forgotten the case of Col. Laurens, which is an illustrious example furnished by a native-born American.

Henry Laurens, President of Congress, was a native of South Carolina, and took an early part in opposing the arbitrary claims of Great Britain at the commencement of the American Revolution. While on his way to Holland, whither he had been sent by Congress to negotiate a loan, he was captured by the enemy and remained many years a prisoner in England. He returned to America in 1783, and died at Charleston in 1792. He directed his son to burn his body after his death, as the sole condition of inheriting an estate of sixty thousand pounds sterling. His will concluded with the following request, which was complied with. "I solemnly enjoin it on my son as an indispensable duty, that, as soon as he conveniently can after my decease, he cause my body to be wrapped in twelve yards of tow cloth, and burned until it be entirely consumed, and then collecting my bones, deposit them wherever he may think proper." And we have somewhere seen a letter, written by an accomplished daughter of his, in which she approves of this mode of disposing of her father's remains.

Leap Year.—The ladies will not forget that this is leap year, nor fail to exercise the high privilege it confers upon them. There are many crusty old bachelors of our acquaintance who deserve good wives, whose ill luck heretofore has quite discouraged them from further worship at the altar of Cupid. A nod, a beck, a wreathed smile, will do wonders with such dry stubble. Will no one have compassion on them?

As to the rights and privileges of the fair sex during the bissextile, one of the authorities—writing in 1600—lays down the law as follows:

"Albeit it is now become a part of the common lawe, in regard to social relations of life, that as often as every bissextile year doth return, the ladyes have the sole privilege, during the time it continueth, of making love unto the man, which they do either by wurdes or lookes, as to them it seemeth proper; and moreover, no man will be entitled to the benefit of clergy, who dothe refuse to accept the offers of a ladye, or who dothe in anywise treat her proposal with slight or contumely."

Intelligence of a Deaf Mute.—A pupil of the Abbe Sicard gave the following extraordinary answers: "What is gratitude?" "Gratitude is the memory of the heart." "What is hope?" "Hope is the blossom of happiness." "What is the difference between hope and desire?" "Desire is a tree in leaf, hope is a tree in flower; and enjoyment is a tree in fruit." "What is eternity?" "A day without yesterday or to-morrow; a line that has no ends." "What is time?" "A line that has two ends; a path which begins in the cradle and ends in the tomb." "What is God?" "The necessary being; the sun of eternity; the mechanist of nature; the eye of justice; the watchmaker of the universe; the soul of the world." "Does God reason?" "Man reasons because he doubts; he deliberates; he decides. God is omniscient; he knows all things; he never doubts; he therefore never reasons."

The following question is being considered in an out-west debating society: "Which has ruined most men—giving credit or getting trusted?" At the last accounts the disputants were about "nip and tuck."

Rise and Fall of Kingdoms.—Middleton, in his Life of Cicero, speaking of the opinion entertained of Britain by that orator and his cotemporary Romans, has the following passage: "From their railleries of this kind, on the barbarity and miseries of our island, one cannot help reflecting on the surprising fate and revolutions of kingdoms: how Rome, once the mistress of the world, the seat of arts, empire, and glory, now lies sunk in sloth, ignorance and poverty, enslaved to the most cruel as well as the most contemptible of tyrants—superstition and religious imposture; while this remote country, anciently the jest and contempt of polite Romans, is become the happy seat of liberty, plenty and letters; flourishing in all the arts and refinements of civil life; yet running, perhaps, the same course which Rome itself had run before it—from virtuous industry to wealth; from wealth to luxury; from luxury to impatience of discipline and corruption of morals; till, by a total degeneracy and loss of virtue, being grown ripe for destruction, it falls a prey at last to some hardy oppressor, and with the loss of liberty, losing everything that is valuable, sinks gradually again into its original barbarism."

Wolf Island.—The Commissioner of the General Land Office has decided that Wolf Island, which is situated in the Mississippi river, below the mouth of the Ohio river, is within the jurisdiction of the State of Missouri, as originally surveyed and returned by the Surveyor General of St. Louis, and not within that of the State of Kentucky, as was claimed some years since. The lands in the island heretofore withdrawn from sale, have been ordered into market again on and after the the third Monday or 19th day of May next. We understand that the examination and report of the Surveyor General, on which this decision is based, afford conclusive evidence that the main channel of the river, which is made the boundary line between the States of Missouri and Kentucky by the treaty of 1763 with Great Britain and the act of admission of Missouri as a State, passes on the east side of the island. AN ANGEL IN THE WAY.

The following is one of those very pure classical productions, which now and then, at great intervening intervals, are given to the world to enlighten, and please, and instruct. It imparts a lesson which would, if generally adopted, impose upon mankind a system of morals which would tend to their advantage, their happiness, and their honor. The poem appeared originally in Frazer's Magazine, but the author's name is not known:

Fair the downward path is spread,
Love and light thy coming greet,
Fruit is blushing o'er thy head,
Flowers are growing 'neath thy feet,
Mirth and Sin, with lessing hands,
Wave thee on, a willing prey;
Yet an instant pause—there stands
An angel in the way.

Heed the heavenly warning—know
Fairest flowers thy feet may trip;
Fruit, that like the sunset glow,
Turns to ashes on the lip;
Though the joys be wild and free,
Though the path be bright and gay,
Even mortal eye can see
An Angel in the way.

Wilt thou drown in worldly pleasure?
Wilt thou have, like him of old,
Length of days and stores of treasure,
Wisdom, glory, power and gold?
Life and limbs shall sickness waste,
Want shall grind thee day by day;
Still to win thee God hath placed
An Angel in the way.

Trusting all on things that perish,
Shall a hopeless faith be thine?
Earthly idol wilt thou cherish?
Bow before an earthly shrine?
Meet rebuke to mortal love,
Yearning for a child of clay;
Death-shaft cross thy path, and prove
An Angel in the way.

When the prophet thought to sin,
Tempted by his heathen guide;
When a prince's grace to win,
Prophet lips would fain have lied;
Even the brute the same controlled
Found a human voice to say,
"Master, smite me not"—Behold
An Angel in the way.

So, when Vice, to lure her slave,
Woos him down the shining track,
Spirit hands are stretched to save,
Spirit voices warn him back.
Heart of man! to evil prone,
Chafe not at thy sin's delay;
Bow thee humbly down, and own
An Angel in the way.

POEM ON WEBSTER.

At the late celebration in Boston of the birthday of Daniel Webster, the following poem, which was written for the occasion, was recited by Oliver Wendell Holmes:

When life hath run its largest round
Of toil and triumph, joy and woe,
How brief a storied page is found
To compass all its outward show!

The world-tried sailor tires and droops;
His flag is dust, his keel forgot;
His farthest voyages seem but loops
That float from life's entangled knot.

But when within the narrow space
Some larger soul hath lived and wrought,
Whose sight was open to embrace
The boundless realms of deed and thought;

When stricken by the freezing blast,
And nation's living pillars fall,
How rich the storied page, how vast,
A word, a whisper can recall!

No medal lifts its fretted face,
Nor speaking marble cheats your eye;
Yet while these pictured lines I trace,
A living image passes by:

A roof beneath the mountain pines;
The cloisters of a hill-girt plain;
The front of life's embattled lines;
A mound beside the heaving main.

These are the scenes; a boy appears;
Set life's round dial in the sun;
Count the swift arc of seventy years—
His frame is dust, his task is done.

Yet pause upon the noontide hour,
Ere the declining sun has laid
His bleaching rays on manhood's power,
And look upon the mighty shade.

No gloom that stately shape can hide,
No change unscrown its brow;—behold!
Dark, calm, large-fronted, lightning-eyed;
Earth has no double from its mould!

Ere from the field by valor won
The battle smoke had rolled away,
And bared the blood-red setting sun,
His eyes were opened on the day.

His land was but a shelving strip,
Black with the axe that made it free;
He lived to see its banners dip
Their fringes in the Western sea.

The boundless prairie learned his name,
His Words the mountain echoes knew,
The Northern breezes swept his fame
From icy lake to warm bayou.

In toil he lived; in peace he died,
When life's full cycle was complete,
Put off his robes of power and pride
And laid them at his Maker's feet.

His rest is by the storm-swept waves,
Whom life's wild tempests roughly tried,
Whose heart was like the streaming caves
Of ocean throbbing at his side.

Death's cold, while hand is like the snow
Laid softly on the furrowed hill;
It hides the broken seams below,
And leaves its glories brighter still.

In vain the envious tongue upbraids;
His name a Nation's heart shall keep,
Till morning's latest sunlight fades
On the blue tablet of the deep!

The Commissioners who have been employed to investigate the project of a canal across the Isthmus of Suez have reported that it is practicable in a direct line, but that the line by way of Alexandria would encounter many, if not insuperable, obstacles. The line proposed will terminate at Suez in water of eight metres in depth, and in the Gulf of Pelusium in water of the same depth. The cost, as estimated by engineers of the Viceroy, will be 200,000,000 francs.

A letter from Fort Snelling, Minnesota, dated 25th of January, states that from the 20th of December to the 15th of January, the thermometer ranged from 27 to 33 degrees below zero, and that the troops were completely frozen in. One man of Company I, 10th regiment of infantry, was frozen to death, and as many as eight or ten other soldiers had their fingers frozen one morning while mounting guard.

Leap Year.—The ladies of Paterson, N. This sort of woman's rights does not seem very objectionable to the other sex.

It is stated that the Secretary of War has decided to adopt rigorous measures for the complete removal of all the Indians now remaining within Florida, and that no terms will be made with them short of an entire abandonment of the peninsula. It is estimated that there are not more than one hundred warriors left among them.

Betting on the Persia.—The New York Evening Post says:

"We understand that over $20,000 were bet by different parties in this city upon the arrival of the new Cunard steamer Persia, in eight days from the day of her departure."

The Persia was out fourteen days in consequence of exceedingly rough weather, but, it is said, she fully demonstrated her capability of making the passage in eight days, under favorable circumstances.

Jewels for Eternity.—Are your jewels the grateful hearts of the poor? If they are then they will never lose their lustre, but shine brighter and brighter the longer you wear them. I would rather have one grateful tear from a famished child I had fed, than all the jewels that glisten on a queen's brow. I would rather carry light and joy to one desolate home, than call all the kingdoms of the world my own. [Spencer.

A New Building Material.

This material is not surpassed for cheapness, strength, durability and beauty. It strongly resembles polished marble or cut stone. It is, in fact, artificial stone, produced by a combination simply of common sand and lime, subjected to great pressure in moulds to the shape and size required, without burning, after which a gradual state of crystallization takes place. Presses are now in the city for manufacturing. Specimens may be seen and all particulars had from the agent,

COLLEGE EDIFICE.

A large and commodious building, planned by the best architectural talent, and erected in the most substantial manner, is now nearly ready for the reception of pupils. Feeling the great importance of space and comfort for the educational and domestic interests of the Institution, the Trustees have spared neither pains nor expense to meet the demands of utility and beauty in the construction of the edifice.

EDUCATIONAL FACILITIES.

A new and valuable apparatus has been purchased for the College. Cabinets of minerals, fossils and curiosities have also been provided. Stated courses of lectures on science, art and literature will be delivered.

OPENING.

The first term of the college will commence on the second Monday of February, 1856.

TERMS.

Board, including washing, fuel and lights, will be furnished at $12 50 per month. Tuition fees will be at the ordinary rates.

REMARKS.

The present circular is merely designed to give notice of the approaching opening of the college, and to afford a general outline of its plans and objects. The public may rest assured that the Trustees, in co-operation with the Faculty, will use all proper and possible means to render this institution worthy of a cordial and generous support. The remaining officers of the Faculty will be elected as soon as circumstances will allow, and it is confidently expected that in a short time the college will be fully organized in all the departments of a thorough education.

Acknowledging with gratitude the earnest and liberal sympathy which this enterprise has so generally received and thankful to that kind Providence which has conducted it to its present stage of promising usefulness, the trustees hereby now the happiness to announce the near fulfilment of their long-cherished wishes. The location of the college is as healthy and agreeable as could be desired. It is perfectly accessible, and yet sufficiently retired for the pursuits of a moral, intellectual and womanly culture. Its expenses will be made as moderate as practicable, and a faithful, parental guardianship will be exercised over all who may be committed to the charge of the institution.

15,000 Acres of Land for Sale.

The lands are situated in Morehouse parish, Louisiana, and in what is known as the "Bastrop Grant." They are of the richest quality of alluvial soil, unsurpassed in fertility by any lands in the South, and fully capable of producing from one and a half to two bales, or fifty to sixty bushels of corn to the acre. They lie near the Ouachita and Deeui rivers—good navigable streams—and likewise in convenient distance of the route of the Vicksburg, Shreveport and Texas Railroad, now in course of construction and hastening to a rapid completion. A portion of these lands are highly improved and in a flourishing state of cultivation; the country in which they lie is very healthy, the water is excellent and abundant, and altogether they will be found to possess greater advantages and present inducements to purchasers than any lands now offered for sale in the Southern country. They will be sold in quantities to suit purchasers, and on the most favorable terms. Titles perfect.

For further particulars inquire of the undersigned either personally at his residence in Prairie Jefferson Morehouse parish, or by letter addressed to Point Jefferson, Morehouse parish, Louisiana.

THE SONG OF THE NEW-BORN SON.

From Redemption's crimson wave,
Rising free, baptized and white,
Lo my beaming wings I lave
In the uncreated light.

See, my scalding tears are dried,
And my darksome slumbers broken!
See, in angels' arms I ride,
Hear the music seraph-spoken!

See, O, see! the flashing gold
Of a thousand suns out-glancing!
See the starry heavens unrolled,
And the skies around me dancing.

O, how heautiful and warm
To my newly opened eyes!
O, what majesties of form,
And what melodies arise!

Yet I feel a softer splendor
Glowing o'er my heart like balm;
O, how thrilling and how tender!
It is Christ—creation's calm.

Lovely angels, raise me higher;
For my spirit leaps to be
Where, above the crowns of fire,
My Redeemer's face I see.

RELIGIOUS INSTRUCTION OF NEGROES.

NUMBER ONE.

The Southern States contain a population of several millions of slaves, many of whom are cut off from the opportunity of attending the Sabbath ministrations of those pastors who attend to the religious instruction of the white population. This inability arises from several causes. Sometimes thousands of negroes are found on the large sugar or rice or cotton plantations in the low lands, and for many miles in any direction the white population is exceedingly sparse; so that they are not able to command the services of a regular pastor—consisting almost entirely of overseers and employees of the wealthy planters who own all the country around, but, unfortunately for their slaves, are non-residents on their plantations, and live with their families in the cities and towns of the country, for the benefit of society and the facilities of educating their children. An additional difficulty arises from the fact if it even should so happen that an itinerant preacher operates in the country around, he is frequently compelled so to arrange his work as to preclude the possibility of visiting many neighborhoods on the Sabbath, which (with a few honorable exceptions) is the only day on which the negro can attend the house of God. In some instances, indeed, the owners feel so little interest in the matter, that they take no pains to provide the needful instruction for their servants, or to induce them to attend on those instructions when brought within their reach. The result of all these and many other circumstances is, that there are not a few sections of country containing thousands of negroes who rarely if ever hear the gospel of the grace of God. In some instances, too, truth requires us to say, that even when there are churches convenient and a ministry constantly in attendance, there is either no room or provision in the house for the blacks, or the blacks, or the preacher seems to regard himself as not the pastor of the slaves, but only of their masters. Now where this is the case, the result is easily foretold. The negro, seeing and feeling that he is not cared for, very soon ceases to attend at the house of prayer, and, as no man cares for his soul, gives himself up to the control of the lusts of his own fallen and corrupt heart, and levies upon his master and his neighbor a tribute which would have been more than sufficient so have provided him ample accommodations in the house of God.

Now we wish to lead all masters, and especially those who call themselves Christians, to a careful consideration of their obligations to their slaves in this respect. We regard it as a settled fact that the gospel of God is for all, in the extent of its provisions and its adaptation to the wants and peculiarities of man, under every possible variety of circumstances. No matter what his country, what his color; no matter under what laws or usages he has been reared; no matter at what shrine he has knelt; no matter what his civil or social position, the blood of the incarnate God has redeemed him; he is a man, he is immortal, and is invited to an heirship of hopes and consolations which point him to a home in a happy world where all is life, and purity and beauty. The negro is no exception to the far reaching extent of this glorious provision. It is for him, in his cabin, at his hoe or his plough. But it is not only wide enough to reach him: its provisions, its teachings, its reproofs, its threatenings, its persuasions, its promises, are exactly adapted to his character and his circumstances. It speaks to his heart, and the speech is intelligible to his untutored mind, because it is the speech of the God who made him; and though science never dawned upon his stupid soul, yet there is an invisible instructor who arrays his sins before him and reproves him for them, and he feels that it is God who hath spoken; and he weeps, and says, I am a great sinner; yet, oh! Father, forgive, for the sake of Jesus, who died for me! And God hears that prayer, and that same mysterious voice that first aroused him speaks again, and the mountain is gone from his heart and the cloud from his countenance. He is forgiven, and he knows it, and he is happy. New views of his relations possess him, and he is a man of prayer and humility, and honesty, and the fear of the Lord is ever before him; and he fears and loves and trusts God, and bears the fruits of self-denial and humility and faith. What though his skin is black! is he not a child of God? and does not that sable skin enshroud a heart washed and made clean by the blood of the Lamb? And he henceforth loves the sermon and the church and the prayer and class meetings, and is careful of his master's interests, and exemplifies in his relations the doctrines of our holy Christianity; and God rewards him with a peaceful life and a happy death; angels carry him to the paradise of God, and he takes his place with the harpers round the throne, to sing, in its fullest, sweetest melody, the holy song which he often imperfectly essayed on earth, "Glory to God in the highest!"

The above is no fancy sketch. There is scarcely one of us who has not frequently seen the original of the above portrait. Now if the gospel is suitable to the negro, if it can be embraced by him and make him better and happier, ought not masters to make every possible effort to bring the ministry of the word to bear upon him? And can they neglect to do it with impunity? Has not the providence of God thrown the two parties in such relations to each other on purpose that the inferior race should be led to the cross of Christ for pardon and salvation? Christian masters, consider this subject very seriously, and prayerfully ponder it well, in view of the inevitable and solemn decisions of that God who is your master, in Heaven! It is very possible that you may refuse to think of it with anything like proper care and seriousness. You have, perhaps, lived long without a moment's thought as to your responsibilities in this respect. Possibly you have regarded your slaves as only given to you to increase your wealth, and your principal inquiry has been, how can I make them yield me the most money—how many bales of cotton can I make to the hand, or how much sugar or rice? I will suppose you feed them well and clothe them well and lodge them comfortably; and this is all very well. But this is not enough. Do you not bestow the same care on your mules? But have you forgotten that your negroes are men, and have immortal souls? Believe me, though you may ignore this fact, God will remember it; and if you neglect your duty in the premises, your remembrance of it in coming time will be bitter. You cannot—no, you cannot neglect your duty on this subject, and escape. God has a thousand ways even here to bring home the curse for disobedience to you, in your soul and body, in your habitation, in your children; and this curse has very often fallen upon the transgressors in this world. The chain of connection, it may be, has not been noticed; but the woe, the bitter curse, the ruin, has been patent to everybody. But even supposing no such curse to manifest itself here, the day that cometh shall reveal it. The careless master and the neglected slave shall meet and confront each other face to face, and the revelations of that day shall bring out your mutual delinquencies, with the motives, ends and aims which have actuated you in every instance. Thoughtless, prayerless, godless master, you will, you must meet this responsibility! I know that there are difficulties in the way and discouragements enough; and is not this true of every good enterprise? It, therefore, can be no valid objection to attempting its performance.

Some masters make some effort, and because success to the full extent is not immediately realized, they abandon the effort in disgust, and say nothing can be done. Some say we have made the provision for them which has been indicated, and yet many of them are no better than before. Possibly so. But how long did you persevere in the effort? And while you were making some effort in the right direction, did not selfishness or the love of money interpose counteracting influences, or has not the indulgence of a violent and uncurbed temper and tongue nullified the effect of your better efforts? And, furthermore, is it certain that no good has been effected among your servants? Have none of them been made better by your efforts? This, I think, can hardly be the case, if your effort has been honestly and faithfully made. Did you call a wise, faithful and holy man to instruct them, or was it a prime consideration to get one who would cost but little? These are questions of some moment, and deserve to be seriously pondered. But, finally, suppose you have tried for months, and years, and yet you see little or no profit; your negroes are still wicked, and you are getting discouraged. I have a question or two more before I give you up: How long did God strive with you before you were converted? How many years did the Holy Ghost labor with you, apparently in vain, before you yielded? And then look at your own children, the children of your own bowels, who may be supposed to have been better instructed than your slaves. How many of them are holy, devoted Christians? You say that your negroes are ungrateful, and those to whom you have been tender are but the more disobedient. Possibly this is true; but know you not some other examples of ingratitude? You yourself had a friend who took care of you in your infancy, who provided for you in after years; who made you prosperous and honorable, and who, in fact, gave you all you possess. And yet, for many years of your life, you hated him, and did all in your power to insult him and show your independence of him; and now, even since he has forgiven you, and you are friends, how often, when he has asked you to furnish a little of the money which he has loaned you, that he might appropriate it to some of his poor friends, you have utterly refused, perhaps with the language of insult, or else you have given it as though your heart's blood went with it? Do you know how to make the application?

COLLEGE MATTERS.

The "Southern University" is to be a grand affair! Who doubts it? With such men as it has in the van of the enterprise, and with a capital to begin with of nearly $200,000, who does not see its walls rising according to the finest principles of architectural science, and its chairs filled with learned and energetic professors?

Of course, when the time comes to furnish the University, the managers of it will never obtain a second rate article of apparatus of any kind, nor permit any department of science to languish or limp for the want of the most perfect facilities that money can supply, both for illustration and original investigation. Accordingly, they will not allow Cambridge or Pulkova to have a better telescope or a more approved observatory. It may as well be suggested, too, that Middle Alabama, both on account of its position and its meteorological habitudes, is peculiarly adapted to the location of a great observatory.

With such prospects opening before our young men, they may well be excused for indulging in ambitions dreams of future scientific accomplishments.

But, in the meantime, what is to become of our young women?

Some one writing for the Advocate, over the signature of "Mentor," about the time of the session of the Alabama Conference, asked this question and undertook to gain a hearing upon it; but his voice was drowned in the excitement of the male college question. Now that that excitement is past, and the Southern University looms up in the future well-defined and majestic, why does he not again bring forward his "facts" and his arguments?

It is a painful truth, that not one of all our boasted female colleges(!) is worthy of the name. The one at Summerfield probably approaches nearer to the college idea than any other; but even that ought never to have been made to appear ridiculous by styling it a college!

I have seen something of the operation of own country; and when I hear one designated by a title so suggestive of classic lore and scientific learning, and then enter its halls and witness its infantile performances, I am reminded of the sham fights I used to see at militia musters, or the moot courts in which I have participated in the law school. Yet some of them are excellent institutions—capital schools of their grade; but they are no more colleges, in the proper sense of the term, than a sham fight is a real pitched battle, or a moot court a solemn tribunal of justice.

Well, what of it? Precisely this: that it is high time to establish a female college! Society has fed long enough upon an empty sound; let it regale itself, at last, upon the substance!

One of the most lamentable facts of our day is, that our daughters marry long before they are matured either in body or in mind. Physiology, philosophy and common sense all revolt at this spectacle. But they must endure it while female education keeps at its present notch. There is no cure for it so long as the best institutions propose to graduate young ladies at fifteen or sixteen years of age, accomplished! A little arithmetic, less algebra, and least geometry; a sprinkling of rhetoric, a smattering of mental and moral philosophy, a very diluted sip at the natural sciences; enough of English to misspell it, enough of French to mispronounce it, enough of music to execute a piece or two, (and the listeners besides,) and enough of drawing to bring home several specimens of their instructor's ingenuity!—these, with a few more of the same sort, generally make up the sum total of a lady's polish. Oh, let us pull down this shanty! Let us scrape away the earth and lay the foundation anew!

The schools of the present day should be regarded as mere seminaries, or preparatory schools; and in them the fundamental branches should be taught thoroughly and extensively. But a female "college" must be something new—a place where our daughters can go and be genuinely and truly educated. Such a college cannot be established without an endowment similar to that proposed for the Southern University.

Objections are sometimes made to the extensive education of ladies; but they always come from those who do not know the influence which true education has upon the mind and heart. Let us have a Southern College for young ladies, as well as a Southern University for young men. The two ought by no means to be in the same place. Summerfield has started the idea; let us all "turn to" and aid her in its fullest realization.

SUGGESTION.

SOUTH AMERICA.—Rev. H. R. Nicholson is to go forward to Buenos Ayres immediately after the rising of the Baltimore Conference.

CHRISTIAN MISSIONS IN INDIA.

Dr. Allen, formerly a missionary in India, has written a work on that country, recently published, from which the editor of Zion's Herald gives extracts, showing the manner in which the subject of polygamy is now being treated by the Christian missionaries there. The author of the book says: "The Calcutta Missionary Conference, consisting of the missionaries of different societies that have missionaries in that vicinity, after frequent consultations and much consideration on the subject of polygamy as it exists in India, were unanimous in the following opinion, that a native convert who, before his conversion, has married more wives than one, in accordance with the practice of the Jewish and primitive Christian Churches, he shall be permitted to keep them all; but such person is not eligible to hold any office in the Church."

The above statement would appear to embody the opinion of the missionaries of all the evangelical denominations there. In this opinion Dr. Allen concurs. He holds on the subject the following language: "Now what shall be done in respect to such persons, (polygamists,) when they give credible evidence of personal piety, and seek admission into the Christian Church? No case of this kind occurred in my missionary experience, but some cases of the kind have occurred in numerous instances in the progress of the gospel. The subject will also have the consideration and decision of the highest authority, ecclesiastical and judiciary, in India and England. My opinion is, that the general practice in missions in respect to such cases, will be as follows: When any man, who has more than one wife to whom he has been legally married, wishes to be admitted into the Christian Church, he will be required to make a free and full statement of his domestic relations. He will be permitted to retain his marital connections with all his wives, and his parental relation to all his children, subject to the decision of the Church, for the proper government of his household. Whether he may or may not cohabit with his different wives, will be left, I believe, entirely to him and to them to act according to their views of duty. At the same time, the nature of the married relation, according to the Christian dispensation and the usage of the Church, and the reason why such cases are for a while tolerated, will be fully explained. No man thus admitted while a polygamist can be ordained a Christian teacher. In this way polygamy will have the testimony of the Church against it, and as no Christian man can ever become a polygamist, all such cases will cease with the lives of those thus admitted."

According to the decision of the Missionary Conference, no man, after being admitted into the Church, if married, could be permitted to add to his wives, or if unmarried, to take more than one wife. They thus provide for the extinction of the system of polygamy after the first generation.

The editor of Zion's Herald strongly demurs to the decision. He thinks polygamy should be treated by the missionary as adultery, and a church relation refused until it be renounced. He expresses the hope that the missionaries of the M. E. Church, which it is expected will shortly be sent to that country, may be instructed by the missionary Board to act upon this principle.

Peace is the pillow of the just.

PREACHING THAT IS PREACHING.

We cannot but think the welfare of the Church bound up with the prevalence of such sentiments as are here put forth by the Puritan Recorder. We have eliminated a few sentences. Are not these sayings true? Will preachers and people accept them? May they!

"An understanding of the mysteries of Christ is not only a result of the spiritual illumination given to all Christians, but it necessarily forms a part of those gifts by which the Spirit furnishes the minds of ministers for their calling. A true conception of the scheme of salvation, enabling one to open the way of life, and show to men their true relations to their Redeemer and Sanctifier, is indispensable to an efficient ministry. Ministers who see men as trees walking, or who shun the humbling doctrines of grace by reason of their own dislike of them, may multiply converts in a certain way, but he that will truly convert men to Christ must know and preach the truth as it is in Jesus. We must first learn what we are to teach. And he who wavers or winces when called to bring forth doctrines, is a cripple as to the right arm of his ministry. The human body could not serve as a body without bones; yet bare bones would make but an indifferent body. Nor should the gospel frame be presented as bare bones, by confining the preaching of it to its cardinal doctrines. The particular condition of a people may require the doctrines to be preached in a series now and then; and, more rarely, there may be a demand for the polemic defence of them. But, in the ordinary course of the ministry, these bones should be covered with sinews and flesh, and flushed with life. All practical and hortatory preaching should have some evangelical fact, in other words, some doctrine for its basis and main material. A striking illustration of a doctrine in a single paragraph, followed by an application of it to its practical results, will generally leave the best impression.

But the doctrines presenting the substantive facts of Christianity should form the warp and woof of all our preaching. Much false doctrine, or tendencies to indulge in speculations which blunt the edge of truth. However much the cause for alarm in this direction, we are more alarmed at the no doctrine, than at the false doctrine. It is much easier to shut out Christianity by omission and silence, than by direct opposition. The demand for popular preaching has, as far as it has prevailed, tended to exclude those doctrines which never can be made popular to unconverted men. As long as Christ crucified is to the Jew a stumbling block, and foolishness to the Greek, the popularity-seeking minister will not enlarge much upon that theme. He will choose subjects that invite to a display of rhetorical eloquence or poetical prettyness, or soft sentimentalism. But however much he may kindle and glow, it will not be with fire from the altar of God. The great matter of man's ruin and redemption, the new creation in Christ, the conflicts with in-dwelling sin, will have small place in his discourse.

For example, he will take, perhaps, as a text, "We all do fade as a leaf;" and from it he will paint a beautiful picture of autumn in her gorgeous dress of many tinted leaves, and draw a fine parallel between the fading leaf and the frail, fading life of man, till he has regaled the fancy with a splendid poem, while he has not begun to reach the conscience or the heart. He has exhibited nothing of Christ, nothing of sin, nothing of redemption, nothing of that eternity that receives the falling leaf upon its bosom.

Sometimes we hear sermons that have scarcely a shred of Christianity in their texture, next to nothing that might not have been found in the writings of the heathen moralists. It is only by courtesy that a ministry that has so far excluded Christian doctrine is called a Christian ministry."

A SOFT PILLOW.—Whitefield and a pious companion were much annoyed one night, at a public house, by a set of gamblers in the room adjoining where they slept. The noisy clamor and horrid blasphemy so excited Whitefield's abhorrence and pious sympathy, that he could not rest. "I will go to them, and reprove their wickedness," he said. His companion remonstrated in vain. He went. His words of reproof fell apparently powerless upon them. Returning, he laid down to sleep. His companion asked him rather abruptly, "What did you gain by it?" "A soft pillow," he said, patiently, and soon fell asleep.

BIBLE SOCIETY RECORD.—The American Bible Society have commenced, with the present year, the issue of their monthly Record, in an enlarged form, intending to make it of permanent value for preservation. LATER FROM CALIFORNIA
And the Isthmus.

ARRIVAL OF THE STEAMSHIP DANIEL WEBSTER.

The steamship Daniel Webster, Capt. Patterson, arrived at the Balize at 2 o'clock Sunday morning, making the unusually quick time of four days and ten hours from San Juan. She brings one hundred passengers from California and several from Nicaragua, all in good health.

The Webster left New Orleans on the 12th, and made quicker time to San Juan than any other vessel, five days and twelve hours from levee to anchorage.

It is reported that the Chagres fever rages in Aspinwall. Nicaragua is glutted with goods of all descriptions from the Atlantic States, more than $200,000 worth having recently been received in that country.

By the Star of the West six hundred and eighty passengers arrived on the Isthmus for Nicaragua and California.

An alliance, it is stated, has been formed between the governments of San Salvador, Honduras, Guatemala and Costa Rica. Nicaragua, heretofore one of the Central American Confederacy, not included, says if this alliance is a threat, while Nicaragua will preserve peace they shall not find her unprepared for war. Among other interesting items on the position of these Governments, it is announced that General Cellamos is in San Salvador, hitherto especially friendly towards Nicaragua, and that he has incited the organization of an armed force, to make a descent by the way of Realijo and Leon, for the purpose of destroying Gen. Walker and the Americans; but the department of Leon is quiet as yet; nor is there so much fear as to prevent the dishandment of four hundred native troops at Leon, which was superintended by Vallie, by the direction of President Rivas and the advice of all the native officers in Walker's army.

One hundred Americans had just arrived at Leon, making the garrison three hundred Americans, besides the forty natives retained. Eleven hundred American soldiers are now posted at the most central points. They are generally healthy, and Walker's government seems to be a fixed fact which all parties enjoy; and planters are preparing to increase their business, because it has brought the hope of permanent peace. Everywhere the strictest discipline is enforced. An embassy of peace sent to San Jose, the capital of Costa Rica, reports from Guana Caste, a city en route in disputed territory, a favorable reception from its inhabitants.

Col. Kinney took his departure for Granado on the 8th inst., from Greytown. The object of his visit was an alliance with Gen. Walker. The result of his visit could not be ascertained, as the Daniel Webster weighed anchor shortly after Col. Kinney's arrival at Greytown.

We have California papers to the 5th inst. We copy from the summary of the Alta California:

More rain has fallen throughout the mining region of California during the past two weeks than in any similar period the present winter. From every portion of the mines we now hear good accounts of the miners, and the receipts of gold have largely increased at San Francisco. The farmers throughout the agricultural districts have also taken advantage of the rains to commence putting in their winter crops. More attention is now given to this branch of business than ever before, and we shall undoubtedly grow a large surplus of wheat, barley, etc., this season.

Governor Johnson was nominated in Sacramento by the Know Nothings, but the Senate refused to go into joint convention by a vote of 17 to 14. It is believed that this position of affairs cannot be changed, and therefore there is but little probability of the election of a Senator by the present Legislature.

The Legislature has now pending a proposition which it is believed will result in obtaining the payment of the California Indian War Bonds.

The Supreme Court of California have made a decision by which the assets of the late firm of Adams & Co. are to be divided pro rata amongst all the creditors of that concern.

The Lunatcur claim to the land upon which nearly one-third of San Francisco is located, has been confirmed by the U. S. Commissioners. Preparations are now being made to take the case to a higher Court, where, it is believed, this decision will be reversed; hence there is but little excitement in San Francisco in respect to the confirmation. This claim is assessed at $5,000,000, and is considered too great a fortune for one man, even in California.

The San Francisco papers have received news to the latest dates from the Sandwich Islands and China, but we find nothing of interest.

FROM TEXAS—More Lipan Outrages.—The Matagorda Chronicle of the 18th says of the practice of firing the prairies:

Almost daily dark clouds of smoke fill the atmosphere, and almost every night the lurid glare of the devouring element is seen in some direction. A continuance of this practice will, in a few years, make these beautiful pastures a desert waste. The consequences are inevitable, if persisted in much longer; the roots of the grass and herbage are parched up, and the seeds burnt up in a mere wantonness. Large numbers of cattle, horses, etc., have died of starvation during the long continued cold weather of the last month, and many more must die before the new grass can become sustenance for our herds, which otherwise might have been able to survive the rigors of a severe season.

The same paper says:

We regret to state that much of the stubble and seed cane has been seriously injured by the late freezes, so that scarcely a two-third crop can be expected, under the most favorable circumstances, next season.

The Columbia Democrat of the 19th has the following paragraph:

We learn by the mail carrier from Velasco, that on Monday, the 11th inst., Mr. W. C. C. Lynch, of this county, with his wife, started for Galveston in a skiff from the Bernard river. After passing the bar at the mouth of that river, they were struck by a north wind, which carried them out to sea. They were watched by some one upon the beach until they passed entirely out of sight. Since that they have not been seen, and it is supposed that they are lost. It was the intention of Mr. Lynch to come in at the mouth of Brazos, and go to Galveston by way of the canal.

Under date of the 21st ult., a correspondent of the Nueces Valley Advertiser writes a letter from Laredo. We extract the following paragraphs:

Since my last, the Lipans have been down in full force, during the last week there were some sixteen or seventeen of them in the little town on the opposite side of the river. They say that they are at peace with Mexico; but the truth is, they rob and murder their friends as well as us, although perhaps not so openly. The writer, in company with others of our citizens, visited them for the purpose of seeing and talking with their Chiefs. We conversed with Chiquito and Comanchito, the two principal chiefs of the party above referred to. They expressed a desire to have peace with the Americans, but declared that they now considered themselves hostile. They said that while they lived on this side of the river, they were always blamed for horse-stealing, etc., whether guilty or not; but that now they would give the Americans real cause to blame them. Such talk was not very gratifying to us, as you may imagine; but, having the "tri-color" of the magnanimous Republic floating above us, we, of course, through the superabundance of our respect for the neutrality laws of the United States, had nothing to say in answer to the gentlemen.

As an indication that their threats were not to be in vain, they have, since our visit, swept the ranches on the river, above and below us—taking off near fifty horses within five or six days, and killed a Mexican named Filipe Flores. It is now really dangerous to travel three miles from town, unless in company with an armed party. The events of last summer are about to be re-enacted in our unfortunate county.

As an instance of the (under the present circumstances of this frontier) absurd stringency of the orders binding them, I give you the following, which is of quite common occurrence:

There is a report of Indians—the commanding officer of the Fort forthwith orders out a party of men to follow them—the Indians are in full speed down the country, robbing and murdering; having their spies out, they know pretty well how far their pursuers are behind them, and when the latter begin to press too closely, they make for the river, (which they are smart enough to keep pretty close to,) and, if the troops get near enough to see them, it will probably be when they are climbing the opposite bank, with hundreds of dollars worth of property; from that moment irretrievably lost to the owners, as the troops are not permitted to cross the river in pursuit.

Foreign News by the Canada.

The Canada arrived at Halifax on the 18th. From the telegraphic dispatches of her news we clip the following:

Asia.

Kars was occupied by two Russian battalions, while a third occupied the camp formerly held by General Mouravieff's army. The captured guns and munitions of war have been removed to Alexandropol. Letters from Erzeroum predict a scarcity of food there. Ismail Pacha was seriously wounded on the 23d of December.

England.

The Queen opened Parliament on the 31st. In the House of Lords, Earl Gosford moved the address to the Queen. The Earl Abingdon seconded the motion. Lord Derby did not oppose, but said he considered the speech bare, cold and meagre. He thought it ought to refer to the state of affairs with America, to India and the colonies, and to the fall of Kars. He conceived that the Government, in the enlistment scheme, had evaded the spirit of the municipal law of the United States, and he hoped the apology offered would be received.

He regretted, however, that there was not a conciliatory paragraph introduced into the speech referring to the subject. The whole speech, he said, was redolent with water gruel.

The Earl of Clarendon replied. Referring to the present relations with the United States, he said: "In my opinion there can be no doubt as to the commonsense view of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty; and yet it is upon the interpretation of that treaty that the difference of opinion has arisen. In such a case correspondence is useless, and I have lost no time in offering to refer the whole question to the arbitration of a third Power, both sides agreeing to the decision. That offer has not yet been accepted. It has been renewed; and I hope, upon further consideration, the U. S. Government will acquiesce. In regard to the recruiting difficulty, it would not add a friendly solution to allude to it from the throne. Inasmuch as the correspondence on the subject still continues. The most recent demands of the United States arrived only two days ago and are not in a state to be made public. The origin of the trouble was this: At the beginning of the war numerous foreigners from the United States applied to the British Government for permission to join the army of the East. In consequence, instructions were sent to the Government of Nova Scotia, to consider whether persons from the United States could be received at Halifax. The instructions were notified to Mr. Crampton, who was at the same time notified that, anxious as England was for recruits, she was still more anxious that there should be no violation of the municipal laws of the States. An agency office was opened, and, upon complaint being made, Mr. Crampton denied that it might be made public that the British government did not recruit soldiers in the United States; and he made known his instructions to Mr. Marcy, who expressed his satisfaction."

After further explanations he stated that correspondence of a not very amicable nature had since taken place between the two governments. But the transactions to which it refers are by-gone transactions; and from the commencement the British government has disclaimed all infringement of the laws of the United States. With the conduct of Mr Crampton, his government was perfectly satisfied, being convinced that he neither intentionally or accidentally violated the municipal laws of the United States. The difficulty was susceptible of a peaceful solution—no slight was meant by not mentioning America in the Queen's speech.

In the House of Commons, Admiral Napier, immediately on taking his seat, moved for the production of the papers relating to his Baltic expedition.

Mr. Baillie gave notice of a resolution to the effect that enlistments in foreign countries lowers the dignity of Great Britain, and is calculated to endanger relations with other States.

France.

Much satisfaction was expressed that Paris had been selected for the meeting of the Peace Congress. The Moniteur publishes a decree fixing the import duty on cotton brought from entrepots by French vessels at 25 francs per hundred kilogrammes, being a reduction of 5 francs on the former rates.

IMPORTANT FROM MEXICO.

ARRIVAL OF THE STEAMSHIP TEXAS.

Mr. DaCosta, purser of the steamship Texas, which arrived last evening from Vera Cruz, has furnished us with the following memoranda: The Texas arrived at Vera Cruz on the 20th, and left on the 22d. Reports that the Castle of San Juan de Ulloa pronounced in favor of Huro Y. Tamures on the night of the 12th, and on the 13th notified the city that if they did not surrender by 12 o'clock, M., it would be bombarded. At half-past twelve the Castle opened on the city, continuing it for an hour. Two persons were wounded and some damage done to the houses. On the 14th, the French frigate Penelope came up from Sacrificios and anchored between the Castle and the city. Nothing further occurred until the 19th. The war steamer Guerrero came in to tow out the national ship Guadalupe, when the Castle fired into her for 15 minutes, five shots taking effect, killing the first lieutenant and four men, and wounding seven. In the meantime a bomb from Fort St. Iago fell on the Castle, blowing up an ammunition chest and killing and wounding 16 men. On the 20th, at half past five, P. M., the Castle surrendered to the city.

Before the commencement of the firing, the shipping took refuge at Sacrificios, returning to their anchorage on the 21st. The national vessel Guadalupe and steamship Ben Franklin remained at their moorings. Most of the families left for the neighboring villages during the difficulty.

The only papers we have received by this arrival, a file of El Veracruzano, state that this movement was headed by a prisoner named Salcedo, "well known for his conduct in 1852," and that the number of men engaged in it did not exceed 150. The same paper intimates that summary punishment will be inflicted upon these insurgents, who are in prison.

We have received no papers from the city of Mexico, probably in consequence of trouble in the interior.

The city of Puebla was still, at last accounts, in possession of the revolutionists.

On the 30th of January the revolutionists, under command of Tiso Jauregui, who held the town of Ozolinama, were attacked by troops sent against them by the Governor of Tamaulipas and defeated. They were completely dispersed, and Jauregui was taken prisoner. On the same day a small detachment of the National Guards encountered and defeated a force of the pronunciados of Tantoyuca under Antonio Mora.

A recent letter from Senor Vidaurri states that in case it becomes necessary, he stands ready to march from San Luis Potosi upon the city of Mexico with 4000 men of all arms in defence of the present government.

FROM TEXAS.—By the arrival yesterday afternoon of the steamship Perseverance, we received papers from Galveston to Saturday last. The News has the following paragraphs:

We have what we believe to be reliable information that the Brazos is again up and navigable. We also hear a vague report that the Trinity is out of its banks in places; but this is not to be depended on, as a gentleman who left Cairo on the 18th inst., reports that there was no perceptible rise when he left.

TEXAS WESTERN RAILROAD.—The assurances promulgated by the parties interested in this road, are as strong as ever, but, inasmuch as previous promises have not been carried out, a lack of public confidence necessarily resulted. However, we have already noticed a revival of confidence in that road, and we now see that the Dallas Herald has information from Marshall, that two or three thousand hands will be put upon the road the coming spring, and that negotiations have already been commenced between the road and the State line. The route of the road is already designated for the Pacific Railroad, and it is stated that a contract for the construction of one hundred miles has been let to responsible parties.

On Friday night, Miss Ada Bromough, a lady of seventeen, step-daughter of Dr. Stone, committed suicide in Galveston by taking strychnine.

ROGERS, THE POET.—Mr. Rogers mentioned that the best note he ever received was from an American lady, who, being asked to breakfast with him, wrote—"Won't I!" Certainly it was expressive brevity.—[Correspondence of the Crayon.

On the 15th a railroad passenger car, weighing eight tons, left Washington for Alexandria on the ice, drawn by five horses. When last heard from, it was moving safely and was more than half way across.

NEW ORLEANS:

SATURDAY, MARCH 1, 1856.

...Missionary reports of last week only reached $1. The city is now crowded, both in business, and never more healthy.

...LACE is now on ... River of H. D. Mo... Through the same ... and readable books, of ... elsewhere appears.

... Seminary.—Our ... Magazine street, whose ... were such a favorite ... informs us that he has the seed for sale, and how is the time to buy.

... Answers Answers.—The Bishop begins in ... this week which we trust he will soon begin to unfold to a full discussion of the subject. Christian masters, read ... Potter sermon of this week. It may give you a soft pillow in a dying hour. It is enough to rile the soul of any man that has a soul. Many masters would like to do their duty in the religious instruction of their slaves, but know not how. Others know it, but will not do it. And others have not thought on the subject.

Contributions for Education.—The Female seminary at Marion, Ala., under charge of that very diligent and competent instructor, Rev. Jos. K. Armstrong, still holds on its way prosperously. The Tuskegee College opens under the happiest auspices. The advertisements of both in our columns will ... those who have daughters to be educated, much to their advantage. They may ... further, but will not fare better.

Southern University.—A letter of the 22d ult., from Rev. T. M. Grace, says:

"I have just heard from the agent of our College. He has been in Sumpter county, which, you know, is a good distance from Greensboro', and raised a subscription of more than $6,000; nor is his work yet completed."

Nicaragua.—The government of Gen. Walker is being rapidly strengthened by United States bone and muscle. They have ... publicly advertised, on ... Wednesday morning for San Juan with 300 adventurers—some for Kinney's settlement, but most for Walker's. The ... gave a unique lecture on Nicaragua, on Monday night, a report of which we give elsewhere. Snake doctors were very common among the Professors, and ... scarce. ... on Wednesday morning, reminded us ... of early California emigration. Crowds waived their hats and bade their friends good luck. One such event is more significant on the Central American question, than a long talk between Clarendon and Buchanan, at St. James.

Report of State Superintendent of Public Education.—We are indebted to Dr. Samuel Boyd for the interesting report of J. N. Carrigan, late Superintendent of Public Education. Judge Carrigan urges upon the ... Legislature again the suggestions made by him last year relative to the 16th section, and ... condemns the system of appointing parish treasurers as the depositaries of the school funds, and concludes by stating that, New Orleans excepted, the condition of the Free Public Schools throughout the State is very unsatisfactory, and the results not at all commensurate with the vast amount of ... appropriated for their support.

A Successful Mission.—Some nine years ago a mission, under the auspices of the ... Board, was begun at Aintab, in Syria. At first the ground was held with difficulty, owing to severe persecutions. Wesley Casting Lots,

TO DECIDE BETWEEN CALVINISM AND ARMINIANISM.

Rev. Dr. Scott, a Presbyterian preacher of this city, but now in San Francisco, in a published lecture, "Wedge of Gold," perpetrated this invidious passage:

"It is said that the great Mr. John Wesley was so perplexed between Arminianism and Calvinism, as theological systems, that he cast up an English shilling to decide whether he should be a Calvinist or an Arminian."

We have heard of this saying before from the Rev. Doctor. It was a sugar-stick of his in the old States, and we are not surprised that he is at it in California. But several "Arminians" there, thinking "it is said" not the best authority for so grave a charge, to say nothing of the style, "the great Mr. John Wesley," addressed a card through the "Pacific," in which they say to Dr. Scott that, as he has embodied the passage in a book—

"And as he has been very careful to give his authority for many quotations of far less importance than the above, it would be gratifying to a large class of his readers, who were taught to regard the 'great Mr. John Wesley' as a man not likely to adopt any 'system of theology' on the toss of an 'English shilling,' much less one in the defence of which he has 'written so zealously, to know who says it, and on what authority?'

Thus put upon his authority for a slander, which perhaps has been allowed to go too long unchallenged, Dr. Scott, instead of retracting or confessing to mistake, quotes Whitefield's letter to Wesley, written from Bethesda, Ga., and published in 1778, and claims to be sustained by it! All to the point that can be made out of the letter, is a charge—perhaps upon rumor and groundless, perhaps true—that Mr. Wesley drew a lot as to whether he should preach and print a sermon on free grace!

Does this touch the two great theological systems of Calvinism and Arminianism? Dr. Scott has misstated the subject both in form and matter, and we hope this is the last of his "it is said." This is just the difference there is between him and his authority: One says Mr. Wesley tossed up a shilling to decide between Calvinism and Arminianism, and the other that he cast a lot to see if he should preach and print a particular doctrinal sermon. That there is a great difference between holding a creed and preaching it out at every time and place, there can be no better witnesses than our Calvinistic brethren, who, however strong in the faith, sometimes doubt the expediency of preaching on the predestination from all eternity of a certain number to hell, do what they can, and the election from all eternity of a certain number to everlasting life, do what they may.

Missionary Success.—During the past year the number of ordained missionaries in the service of the American Board was 165, the number of members added to the Church 1,487; making an average of a little more than nine members to each missionary. The Christian Intelligencer says: "We have examined the last report of two classes, taken at random in our church, and find that in both cases the average of additions on confession of faith is less than this. Surely the friends of missions among the heathen have reason to be encouraged.

Rev. Wm. Arthur.—This gentleman, we learn from Zion's Herald, sailed from New York to England on the 18th ult. During his visit he has been quite successful in raising funds for Ireland. In Boston and vicinity he raised nearly $6,000, Baltimore raised $4,000, Philadelphia pledged $10,000, New York raised about $17,000. Altogether, nearly $45,000 have been secured. Mr. Scott will continue to visit the churches until the sum of $100,000 is secured.

A Cincinnati paper, edited and published by a man who, we are told, is a Roman Catholic, made the statement, two weeks since, that charges of seduction against Bishop Hamline had been in process of investigation, &c. No charges have been preferred against Bishop Hamline. L. D. Harlan, a member of the Cincinnati Conference, for making statements in regard to the Bishop's character, was brought before his Conference, his statements proved false, and he himself expelled from the Methodist Epis. Church and ministry by the large and intelligent Cincinnati Conference, after a trial of three days. Only two members of the Conference, out of nearly two hundred, voted in the negative, because they thought the punishment too severe for the falsehood proved against Mr. Harlan. We cannot withhold our surprise that a statement so utterly false should have been manufactured out of the facts in the case. Will the members of the press who have given currency to the slander please publish the foregoing.

American Episcopal Mission in China.—Our Episcopal brethren report twenty communicants in their mission at China. They report a good degree of prosperity, notwithstanding the political commotions of the Celestials. A reinforcement is asked for by Bishop Boone. "The field around us, he writes, is enlarging every day. We shall soon have missionaries residing in all the surrounding country; and a more glorious field for missionary work does not exist on earth. It is the richest valley in the world, inhabited by a thousand men to a square ..."

TOBACCONISING.

NUMBER III.

6. Effect of Ministerial Tobacconizing on the Rising Generation.—That the education of the male youth of their country is greatly and very deleteriously affected by the smoking and chewing of ministers, is notorious. A minister that does not carry a moral influence around him of a very lively and moving character, and cause, in a good degree, the habits and education of youth to conform to his habits and practices, ought no longer to remain a minister. A minister whose conduct does not carry a weighty influence around and with it, is no minister at all. The sooner he quits the better.

I never knew a smoker or chewer, a man of any reflection, who did not himself despise the practice, and regret, deeply regret, his slavery to the habit; and as deeply regret the association and example that had fastened it upon himself. He throws back the blame on a mistaken father, a thoughtless, careless brother, or a man whose sacred profession and calling it was to "feed my lambs."

The boys who are growing up around us men, and who imbibe the same habit from the same source, will of course, I suppose, feel and speak and think in the same way.

A company of persons were sitting together, not long since, and a Methodist preacher was puff—puff—puffing, when a remark was made about the "fast" boys in the town. "Yes," said the preacher, "I never saw the like. You may frequently see the little rascals, ten, twelve or fourteen years old, with a cigar or a chew in his mouth, smoking and chewing. I never saw such a set of boys. What will they come to?"

Not long before the battle of Monterey, Gen. Taylor saw one of his captains who was not quite captain enough for him in the times he anticipated, and he said to another officer, "Take that captain out and drill him three hours a day for six days."

Thinks I to myself, on the occasion referred to, wish I was an ecclesiastical Taylor. I would have that minister drilled three hours a day for six days. If he had been a sober-thinking, rational-minded man, I would have asked him a few questions like the following:

Do you esteem it wrong for boys to smoke cigars and chew tobacco? If it is wrong in boys to do such things, what is the proper age for plone youths to commence? Does smoking and chewing by boys of the ages of ten to fifteen lead, or is it likely to lead, to idleness, drinking whisky, swearing, quarreling, and such like conduct? Is the present state of bad morals on the part of the boys to the habit of chewing and smoking? Is the habit in question, on the part of these boys, a source of great regret, mortification and sorrow on the part of all pious parents, and also of all other parents who think and act with any sort of moral correctness toward their children? When these boys grow to manhood, and become fully awake to the evil of a bad habit entailed upon them, will they be likely to bless or curse the minister who, in all likelihood, did much more to fasten the habit upon them than any other person? Considering the great power of example which the ministerial calling gives a man, is there a person in this town—are there any five persons in it—who have done so much to propagate the habit of smoking and chewing on the part of the boys as yourself?

I would have liked to ask that young minister—for he is a young man—these and some other similar questions, if I had not seen that his conduct in the premises gave evidence of a lack of capability on his part to properly appreciate them.

Boys of the age of ten or fifteen years are not presumed to have the discretion, forethought and judgment of grown-up men. They follow carelessly, and almost instinctively, such example as is set before them. A minister of the gospel has, by his profession and calling, attained a position in society as an exemplar of youth, that other men need not aspire to. Children that are piously and morally raised, are taught to look up to the preacher as an exemplar.

But, alas! alas! the truth forces the acknowledgement that this is sometimes very bad teaching!

It is by the law of the Methodist Church made the duty of ministers, in pastoral visitings, to "pay special attention to the children; speak to them personally and kindly," etc. But the law does not say whether he is to teach them to smoke or not, though it is oftentimes so construed.

In his lecture on the "Genius and tendency of Romanism," in Cincinnati, January 14th, Kirwan made this remark:

"Since 1810 four Popes have declared the reading of the Bible in the 'vulgar tongue' to be an undermining of religion. They are willing the Greek Testament should be circulated among the Irish, and the Irish Testament among the English, or that the Bible may be circulated among any people in a language they do not understand." He (the lecturer) went into a bookseller's shop, at Rome, to purchase a Bible, and the man never heard of such a book, nor could he find a solitary copy in that city. It was given in evidence before the British Parliament, that of the four hundred students in Maynooth College, in Ireland, not ten Bibles or Testaments could be found; and it was from thence those men came over here, with long coats and short brains, to teach Americans their duty."

THE WAR SPIRIT.

Dr. Bond, the accomplished editor of the Christian Advocate and Journal, has an able article under the above caption, which he concludes in the following language:

"Against the spirit of war we would affectionately warn our readers, especially those who name the name of Christ. We would entreat them not to surrender themselves to the pleasure arising from the accounts now so frequently arriving from the seat of the horrible contest going on in the Crimea. When they read of thousands killed, let them pause and consider what those few cold words mean; let them think of the purpose, the interests, the consequences of human life; let them follow the dead into eternity. When they read of thousands wounded, let them endeavor to imagine the frightful agonies of the battle field, the horrible tortures of the surgeons knife, the long, slow fever of the hospital, the mutilated forms of dismembered men, the helpless incumbrances of industrious life. When they read of the ferocity and recklessness and cruelty of an assault, let them consider whether men, made demons by war, are likely to be made good citizens by peace. If they will read of wars, let it be to learn what wars are, that they may cling closer to the gospel of peace, and be more earnest than heretofore in repressing at home the unchristian sentiments and inconsiderate folly and selfish ambition which are ever fomenting a spirit of strife, and driving us into the actual participation in the 'glories' of blood and crime, which constitute the familiar and interesting thing called war."

German Domestic.—Bishop Baker reports that he has appointed two brethren of our German work in the West to go forward to California, to assist in the work of preaching among their countrymen, for whose benefit brother Kellner is already engaged.

The Mexican Church.—The immense wealth of the Roman Catholic Church of Mexico is often spoken of on account of its influence in political affairs. While the annual income of the republic does not exceed $9,000,000, the revenues of the church will amount to $28,000,000. The product of the tithes, on an average, is estimated at $1,835,000 per annum, and, in addition to this, the clergy possess an immense capital in specie, the accumulation of three centuries, arising partly from bequests, and partly from surplus income. The ecclesiastical establishment consists of one archbishopric, (that of Mexico,) chiefly from that portion of the tithes intended for the subsistence of the clergy, and amounts to $400,000—the archbishop receiving $130,000.

RECENT PUBLICATIONS.

Life in Brazil, or A Journal of a Brief Visit to the Land of the Cocoa and the Palm. With an appendix, containing illustrations of ancient South America. By Thomas Ewbank. New York: Harper & Brothers.

It is singular, but not less true than strange, that notwithstanding our pushing and explorative disposition—nor not that of ourselves alone, but of the whole civilized world—we know infinitely more, so far as general information is concerned, with regard to the geography of the frozen region lying about the North Pole than we do of the fertile fields which are directly kissed by the sun, and in their tropical glory of a never dying summer, enjoy everlasting verdure and a sort of vegetarian immortality. There are impossibilities attending the exploration of the ice lands that prevent and excuse the failure to record all its wonders; but none in the latter which should deter a venturous spirit. This, Mr. Ewbank has demonstrated by a record of travel, which reads like a romance grounded upon a pile of statistics—conveying an immense amount of fresh, valuable and interesting information, that cannot be come at through other channels. His story is pleasantly written and copiously illustrated. It gives an account of the nature and capabilities of the land; the character of the people, from the priest to the street beggar; and gilds with the coleur d'oro that rich and fertile portion of this continent—sometime to be more fully developed and more valuable than its present inhabitants can conceive. The work is beautifully printed, in one octavo volume, and should make part of every library.

Parisian Sights and French Principles, Seen Through American Spectacles. By James Jackson Jarvis. Second series. New York: Harper & Brothers.

A previous volume, upon the same subject, by the same author, was so flatteringly received that the writer has been induced to continue his chronicles of life in the great metropolis of France and the world. Naturally enough, fashion is the most prominent matter; and engravings, with accompanying descriptions, are given of all the various styles of dress that has prevailed among the people of that city for a long time past, together with many moral and philosophical reflections hardly to be expected from such a Sartor Resartus and modern Teufelsdrock. The pictures are good; the chronicles interesting, and all who are fond of the quaint and out of the way manifestations of literature will be more than repaid for purchasing the book.

Harper's Picture Books, for the Nursery. "Learning to think." By Jacob Abbott. One hundred and twenty Engravings. New York: Harper & Brothers.

None of all our juvenile readers, excepting Peter Parley, now dead, have been so successful as the Abbots in writing for juveniles. They seem to possess an intuition of what will prove most gratifying and at the same time instructive to youth, as has been evinced in their "Rollo" and many other serial works. The latest is called "Learning to think." It is a very pleasant and attractive juvenile work and will make an agreeable present for the young.

Thirty-Fourth Congress—First Session.

Washington, Feb. 18, 1856.—Senate.—Mr. Wilson submitted a resolution calling on the President of the United States for information relative to the affairs of Kansas, and what measures have been taken by the Executive to prevent illegal interference with the rights of the people of said Territory, by persons not residing therein.

Mr. Sumner offered a resolution, which was adopted, directing the Committee on Commerce to consider the expediency of additional legislation to prevent the abuse of the documents known as "protections," now issued to seamen in the commercial marine of the United States.

After transacting some further business of an unimportant character, the Senate adjourned.

House of Representatives.—Fifteen thousand copies of the report of the Secretary of the Treasury on the condition of the finances; twenty thousand copies of the President's annual message and accompanying documents; ten thousand copies of the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, communicating the report of the Coast Survey; and sixty thousand copies of the mechanical portion of the report of the Commissioner of Patents, were ordered to be printed.

Mr. Lane, delegate from Oregon, introduced a bill enabling the people of that Territory to form a Constitution and State Government, preliminary to her admission into the Union. Referred to the Committee on Territories.

The House soon after adjourned.

The propeller Arctic, Capt. Hartstein, which was sent out in search of the Pacific, put into Halifax on the 19th under sail, having disabled her propeller.

THE LEVEE RAILROAD.

Among the proceedings of the meeting of the Board of Aldermen held on the 15th inst., was "the report and resolution of the special committee to whom was referred the consideration of a project for the building of a railroad on the levee, together with the specifications accompanying." These specifications, in their amended form, provide for "the sale of the privilege of constructing a double-track railroad on or along the levee, from the U. S. Barracks to the upper limit of the city," with a number of provisos and governing regulations, of which the following are the most notable:

The road is to be so constructed as to follow the base of the wharves along the route and for the distance alluded, and twenty-five feet in width of the levee shall be allowed for the construction. The lessee of the privilege shall bind himself to construct within two years from the approval of the sale, a double-track railroad, with grooved rails, to be of five feet gauge, in the best, most workmanlike and substantial manner. The materials shall be of the best quality. All injuries done to the streets by the laying of the track shall be repaired by the contractor at his own expense and to the Surveyor's satisfaction. The levels and grades shall be established by the Surveyor, in accordance with the wishes of the Committee on Streets and Landings; the lessee may construct switches for increased facility in loading or unloading of the cars, after having obtained permission of the Common Council and the lessees of the revenues of the port; the lessee shall bind himself to place a sufficient number of freight and passenger cars, to be drawn either by mules, horses or steam power, and provide everything needful for their maintenance and that of the road; and shall furthermore bind himself to make trips, up and down, at least every half-hour. He shall also bind himself to begin work within sixty days after the approval of the contract, and to complete it within two years. Should he fail in either respect, a right is reserved to the Council to pronounce the whole agreement null and void, without applying to a court of justice or indemnifying the lessee. The city reserves to itself the right, on the event of the batture extending, to sell front lots and compel the lessee, without indemnity from the city, to move his road to the front. Good and solvent security to the amount of fifty thousand dollars shall be given by the lessee, to guarantee the faithful performance of the contract.

The lease of the privilege under the specifications above mentioned, shall be sold to the person who offers to build the road and collect the revenues therefrom for the shortest term under thirty-five years, and who shall at the expiration of said term deliver to the city the said road, cars and all appurtenances connected with it; which will thus become the property of the city of New Orleans. The plan of the road and the style of the locomotives to be used shall be submitted to the two chairmen of the Committees on Streets and Landings and the two chairmen of the Committees on Finance, for their approval or rejection; the Common Council reserving the right to stop the use of steam power on the road, should it be judged by them injurious to public convenience and safety.

To these general regulations were added a resolution authorizing the Comptroller to sell to the bidder of the lowest term of years under thirty-five—which number is the maximum—after "sixty days' notice in the official journal," the privilege to run cars on, and the right of way for, a railroad on the levee front—or as may occur, under certain circumstances, in the street; the purchaser to construct the road at his or their own expense; to collect in his or their own right the revenues derivable therefrom, for the term of years bid and contracted for; to keep the same in complete repair; and to deliver in like good condition the said railroad, cars, furniture, apparatus, and all the appurtenances thereunto belonging, to the city of New Orleans—the said railroad to be constructed in accordance with plans and specifications on file in the Surveyor's office, and the sale to be subject to the approval or rejection of the Common Council." The specifications and resolution were adopted by the Board of Aldermen with one dissenting vote, and to-morrow night will come up for action in the Board of Assistant Aldermen.

best sources within our reach, it strikes us the measure is fraught with general advantage to the city, to the financial interests of the corporation—for the privilege proposed to be sold is a very valuable one and will command a corresponding price—and is destined, if carried through, to exercise a favorable influence in facilitating the operations of trade and commerce—in cheapening and expediting the transit of merchandise and produce from one extremity of the city to the other, and in enabling business men to reach either terminus of the city's front in a conveniently brief space of time.

One disadvantage, and a material one at that, under which the commerce of New Orleans labors, is to be found in the large space over which it is transacted. We have a levee front of six or seven miles in length; and the innumerable articles which cover our wharves during the business season have to be moved, very often, from the upper to the lower limit of the corporation. It may be said this is an extreme proposition, and does not apply to the great mass of produce and merchandise. Admit that such is the case, which it is not in a leading sense, and the argument in favor of a levee railway is not damaged by any important particular. The great fact still exists that the cost of drayage is enormous; that more of it is done in New Orleans than in any other city in the Union, calculating business and population; that the expenses attendant are larger; that the difficulty of removing goods from the wharves is frequently insurmountable, entailing large losses upon shippers, consignees or merchants; and that the burthen is too onerous for our already overburthened commerce to stand. These truths, which are known and felt by every merchant in town, by every trader and consignee, and by every shipper and steamboat captain of the West, constitute in themselves irrefutable arguments sustaining the proposed levee railway measure.

But there are other arguments which can be educed in support of the railroad project, which are much more important than the foregoing. We will refer to one or two of them and their disastrous incidents.

All of our readers recollect the terrible times on the levee about two months ago. Day after day it rained, and all was cold and mud and water, until it became almost impossible to reach the wharves. This put it out of the power of the draymen to take the produce off the levee as fast as it was landed, and so it accumulated, until for miles nothing could be seen but vast masses of miscellaneous merchandise piled up in all sorts of ways, exposed to the injurious influences of the worst of weather. Cotton bales were piled, one upon the other, until they resembled miniature mountains. Hogsheads of sugar and barrels of molasses, by the thousand, had to take their chances, as there were not enough tarpaulins to be had to cover them. Casks of bacon were headed up, one on the other, two or three tiers high. Thousands of barrels of flour, and twenties of thousands of sacks of corn, wheat, oats, bran, etc., remained for days, almost weeks, without the smallest protection. Bales and boxes of the most valuable merchandise were similarly exposed and damaged, as well as innumerable other descriptions of goods and produce we have not time to enumerate. We have no means of ascertaining the precise losses caused by this untoward state of affairs, but we know they must have been enormous. The owners, shippers, etc., must have suffered seriously.

Then, again, this condition of things operated detrimentally in other respects. The merchants, not being able to get their goods from the levee, were unable to fill their orders, and a partial stoppage of business ensued. Although the levee was groaning under the weight of the richest produce on earth, and although the demand for it was active, prices good, and money plenty, our merchants were like so many Tantaluses—they could look upon what ought to be yielding, a noble harvest, but could neither touch nor taste it. In the meantime the draymen were demanding and receiving enormous wages, which, however, they earned, as work done under such circumstances could not well have been paid for at too high a rate.

Had the proposed railroad been in operation, these losses, inconveniences, detentions and stoppages would not have occurred. There would have been no glut of produce on the levee; no difficulty in keeping it clear, from day to day, in accordance with the laws of the port; no trouble in transporting cotton, sugar, wheat, pork, bacon, etc., to the ships, which trouble caused many of them to wait two or three weeks for cargoes; steamboats would not have been detained one, two, five and ten days, to get an opportunity to discharge their freights; there would have been no difficulty in meeting the necessities of inward and outward bound commerce; and, in fine, the embarrassments and annoyances to which we have hastily adverted, would have all been obviated if the proposed levee railway had been in existence.

For these reasons, and many others which we could and would bring to bear if we deemed it necessary, we cordially favor the railway project, and trust it will receive the sanction of the Assistant Aldermen after they have bestowed careful and thorough consideration upon it.

Lecture on Nicaragua.

Dr. Alexander McLean delivered a lecture Monday evening at the Lyceum Hall, concerning the prospects, possibilities and probabilities of the future of Nicaragua: summing up its past, sketching its present, and anticipating its future.

The first position noticed was that of Nicaragua as an inter-oceanic channel and viaduct between the Atlantic and Pacific, following which the climate was introduced, and Nicaragua was stated to have every variety thereof, from the equatorial to the temperate, being suited to all purposes for which so comprehensive a temperature is calculated.

The diseases are various, but not greater nor more fatal than prevail elsewhere. For the tourist, few places present so many attractions. The old cities and castles, the volcanoes, lakes, islands and plains are numerous and abounding in interest. The city of Rivas, where Walker made his gallant stand, is in a plain as fertile and grassy as any in the world.

The mines of Central America, always a magnet to the minds of men, are rich and abundant, though not at present worked, owing to intestine troubles. The rough and crude method of working them, formerly, allowed but a small per cent. of their real wealth to be developed. The best returns now, however, are from the soil. Sugar, corn, cotton and many other cereal products can be readily obtained and of the best quality. Coffee grows wild, but as it needs culture it has not yet been largely exported. Cocoa also grows spontaneously. Indigo, tobacco, equal to that of Cuba; rice, wheat, corn, coffee, arrow-root, can be readily raised, though requiring labor to keep them free from weeds.

Settlers are divided into three classes—capitalists, men of moderate means, and those of no means at all. For the first class, sugar raising is doubtless the best, as Indian labor can be had at a dime a day. For the second class, Segovia is the best place, and cattle raising and farming is the best occupation. Segovia is also a very healthy place. Mechanics are now getting three dollars a day; but they had better attend to farming, as had professional men. Those without capital had better join the army, where the pay of twenty-five dollars a month, support, and a present of land at the end of the period of service, will give the soldier settler a good start in life. Yams, potatoes and all kinds of vegetables grow profusely and without labor. Pimento, palm oil and cochineal can be grown easily. Wild fowl are abundant. There are no dangerous animals, but many poisonous reptiles—and yet their bites are readily cured. A saw-mill would pay admirably, as the woods there are beautiful, close fibred and superior to all others for elegance and durability. The costume of the country consists of a coat—when it can be got—and always a straw or palm-leaf hat.

The changeable political history of Nicaragua, from its discovery to the conquest of Walker, has been such as to prevent its development. It is now launched on a course of civilization, approved by the priests and all intelligent citizens.

The country, thanks to the enterprise of Vanderbilt, can now be easily reached. The cost of travel is almost nothing. The Prometheus and Daniel Webster run from this city with regularity and great speed.

Thanking the audience for its attendance, the lecturer closed his interesting and instructive address, which, instead of satisfying those present, only created a stronger desire to know more concerning the garden region of this hemisphere and the modern land of promise.

Meeting of the Clay Monument Association.

The Clay Monument Association held a meeting last evening. Quite a large audience attended, a majority of whom were ladies.

Mr. Robert J. Ward took the chair, and stated the object of the meeting to be to present to the people of New Orleans the propriety of moving in the matter of erecting a monument to the memory of the immortal patriot and statesman, Henry Clay. The few remarks made by the chairman were exceedingly appropriate and eloquent.

The following resolutions were then offered and adopted:

Resolved, That a special committee of thirteen be appointed, of which the chairman of the Executive Committee shall be chairman, to select a suitable site for the proposed Monument to Henry Clay, and petition the City Council for the use of said site.

Resolved, That the same committee be authorized to make such arrangements as they may deem proper for laying the cornerstone of said monument on the 12th of April next, the anniversary of the birth day of Henry Clay.

Mr. Parmele, a member of the Executive Committee, stated that he perceived among the persons present one who had always taken a lively interest in the objects of this association—Judge Alexander Walker—and he presumed that the audience would be pleased to hear remarks from him upon the subject of the meeting.

The Judge stated that he came altogether unprepared to speak. He proceeded, however, to briefly recount the peculiar obligations which Louisianians owe to the public services of Henry Clay—who was one of the great triumvirate to whom the people of this State may attribute their chiefest blessings. His remarks elicited the warmest applause from the audience.

Mr. James Robb was loudly called for, and came forward. He stated that he had not expected to address the meeting. He should consider it a duty of the highest order to consecrate any means within his power to the object of perpetuating in bronze or marble the form and features of the great man to whom this country owes so much. He did not think this association should meet for the purpose of making eloquent speeches and passing resolutions, but for action. Three years ago, when the great statesman finished his labors, the whole country—men of every State of the Union—felt that they had sustained a common loss, and meetings were held everywhere and resolutions passed to erect monuments to his memory. It all amounted to nothing. He thought an association in the great emporium of the South-West should adopt a more vigorous course of action. He had formerly subscribed to the enterprise under a reservation, which he should now consider withdrawn, and authorized his name to be put down for a subscription of one thousand dollars.

Mr. Parmele then moved that an agent be appointed for each of the principal streets of the city to collect subscriptions to the Clay Monument, and a recess was agreed to for the purpose of arranging the matter, immediately after which the meeting adjourned.[Crescent.

Fire in St. Martinsville—Great Loss of Life and Property.—We find in the Franklin Banner of Thursday last, the following account of a terrible calamity in St. Martinsville:

On Sunday evening last a fire broke out in St. Martinsville, which not only laid waste the principal portion of the town, but was attended by a fearful loss of life. The circumstances, so far as we have learned them, are these: The fire originated in a stable in the rear of Mr. Fontanette's store, to which the flames quickly reached, and spreading themselves in their destructive progress, in a short time the entire square was a mass of flames. This square embraced the principal business houses of the town, some of them fine brick buildings containing a quantity of valuable merchandise. In one of these stores were forty kegs of gunpowder, which exploded with a tremendious report, blew down the walls, carried in the roof and buried in the ruins thirteen persons who were in the store at the time endeavoring to save what they could from the conflagration. All these persons are said to have been instantly killed. We have not been able to learn the names of the sufferers. The gentleman who furnishes the information was an eye-witness to this awful scene, and estimates the probable loss of property to be about $200,000. We cannot learn that any of this loss was covered by insurance.

Since the above was written we learn from another source that twenty-three persons are missed since the explosion occurred, and the supposition is that they are among the victims. A gentleman who arrived here last night by the mail boat states that when he left St. Martinsville seventeen bodies had been found among the ruins, and that a diligent search was then being made for others who are supposed to be there.

Exports of Cotton.—The clearances of cotton on Saturday last were 18,148 bales, viz: for Liverpool, 8,108; Barcelona, 904; Genoa, 1,263; Amsterdam, 2,222; for Queenstown and a market, 1,762; Boston, 1,723; New York, 926; Philadelphia, 565; Baltimore, 675 bales.

Prof. Gould's Second Lecture.

The lecture given by Prof. Gould last evening, at the Lyceum Hall, was in continuation of its predecessors. Summing up the results and deductions of the former lecture, the speaker announced a cursory survey of the developments of astronomy up to the first century as a preliminary necessary to be gone over in anticipation of the six which are intended to follow it. The history of astronomy was divided into four great periods, of which the introductory lecture had sketched a broad outline.

The age of the Roman empire gives no astronomical facts even equal to those of the old Hebrew shepherds; to the Chaldeans and Babylonians, among whom astronomy and astrology were enrolled as regular professions. The Chinese, however, two thousand three hundred years before Christ, knew and calculated great problems, and those who lived two thousand one hundred and seventy-five years before Christ chronicled future events, which have since occurred and which show the amount of their intelligence. The prediction of comets for three thousand seven hundred years in advance, was chronicled also, and have taken place. Their astronomers wrote treatises that have lived to this time, and even now hold true, and have renewed proof of their accuracy and the learning of their authors in our own days.

In Egypt and among the Chaldeans, where practical astronomy was cultivated with great care, it made rapid advance. In all these older nations astronomy was, however, only studied as a record of facts that had occurred and were to occur. Mythagoras and others sought to base a science upon these facts, but most of their works were empirical. In Rome the greatest advance was the improvement of their calendar, leaving it, however, no better than the Chinese had made it two thousand years before. The period succeeding was as a kind of resurrection of Egyptian creeds. The Siamese and others took the science from this point and added to it trigonometry. Then follows the great era of European astronomy, when Hegio Montanus flourished. His real name was different, but in accordance with those times he assumed a nomine du plume, and is now known chiefly by it. At that period astronomy had a sort of charlatanism and trickery about it which it has preserved to this day. Something of this was attributable to the priestly interference of the times, which sought to rule all sciences and regulate all beliefs, and which proscribed the Copernican theory. In order to avoid this censorship, Hegens wrapped up his discoveries in mysterious formulas and a strange style.

In 1507 Copernicus conceived the true idea of the universe: that the earth moves around the sun, instead of the sun around the earth. Until 1543 he concealed his discovery; pursued his studies sedulously among Egyptian chroniclers, who he found had advanced the same opinion, though not so clearly or strongly. When his great book was being published the arch tried to destroy the office, and printers set it up with a composing stick in one hand and a gun in the other. The influence of ignorance finally compelled the printers to give up the copy; but they cunningly said nothing of the type which contained it, and which shortly appeared with all the information contained in the copy.

Following Copernicus came Tycho Brahe, Kepler and Galileo, who, by the science of conic sections—known to the old Egyptians—carried the great science along, almost to its present point. The discovery of gravity, by Newton, supplied all that was wanting to former theories to make them perfect, and gave us the ground-work of modern astronomy, which Cicero had alluded to fifteen hundred years before, in saying that all arts and sciences are connected by indissoluble bonds.

The history of Galileo, shouting, concerning the earth, "But it does move," was alluded to in connection with the Catholic anathema against the doctrine, as giving a new start to the investigations which have blossomed into our present learning. Copernicus and Kepler had traveled toward the same end, and a work of the latter, published only thirty-nine years before Newton's discovery, proved that he had reached the threshold which his successor crossed.

After 1630, it only remained to verify Kepler's suppositions, concerning the attraction of heavenly bodies, in order to reach Newton's discovery. Newton had tried it before and failed; and only through ... reached the solution that has immortalized him.

The discovery of gravitation is the great discovery of astronomy, and although it abounds with many others that are immortal, this one stands to it as the Christian era does to theology—solitary and unapproachable. From this moment the study jumped forward; and under Bentley at Greenwich, and others, elsewhere, touched the position in which it has since been urged onward, making the eighteenth century famous for having joined practice to theory, and confirmed the latter by the former.

To astronomy proper, the queries whether there are mountains in the moon, or satellites around the planets, is only incidental. The movement of the heavenly bodies and the laws that guide them are the problems for its solution.

Such was astronomy at the commencement of the present century.

In the next lecture the methods used in astronomical investigation will be discussed.

The attendance, we were happy to observe, was larger than on the former evening, and those present listened with the greatest attention to the very interesting lecture. Our report embraces only the general outlines of what abounded in statistics and exact knowledge.

Kansas Affairs.—The Leavenworth Herald of the 9th says:

A pro-slavery meeting was held there on the 2d inst., at which it was determined to offset the influence of the free State agents sent abroad, by despatching George W. McLean to the Southern States to give the people the pro-slavery aspect of the case, and to urge emigrants to emigrate to the Territory, and aid in rescuing the control of affairs from the hands of the abolitionists of Lawrence—Robinson, Lane, Brown, etc.—who are doing everything possible to bring on a civil war. They apprehend that many free State men will refuse to follow them into rebellion against the federal authority and the laws of the Territory.

The Herald of Freedom says that Messrs. Robinson and Lane have adopted precautionary measures and organized a regiment; that the forts are guarded day and night, and that munitions of war were being collected in readiness for instant service, an attack being expected.

The Topeka Herald appeals to the friends of the North and East to hold themselves in readiness to march at a moment's notice. It says that the struggle begins to show itself in earnest, and invokes the people of Kansas to die in preference to surrendering.

Glorious Woman.—A Democratic friend, who holds a seat in the General Assembly of the State, delighted our ears and our heart by reading to us a short extract from a letter he had received from his wife, who happens to be one of those noble American matrons, of the stamp of 1776. She first indulges the emotions of a woman, whilst, in the next moment, her heart is burning with patriotic fire. "Come home," says she, "and contribute to the happiness of your family. By remaining where you are you can effect nothing but mischief. Mr. Hufty has been elected by the popular voice, been tried by a jury of his peers and a court of his country, and they have all decided in his favor—come home." It is true that we smiled when it was read to us, but our heart swelled with emotions that we cannot express. We were, on the instant, by the divine voice of this noble American matron, transported to the camp of Caius Marcus Coriolanus, where, at the solicitation of the women of Rome, Volumnia and Virginia, the mother and the wife, were pleading the cause of their country. They did not plead in vain.—[Baton Rouge Gazette, 22d.

The Buffalo Irish Convention.—On the 14th the Finance Committee of the Buffalo Irish Convention reported in favor of the formation of a joint stock company for the purpose of purchasing lands west of Canada and selling the same to Irish settlers and emigrants for not more than ten per cent. on the first cost of the land.—Adopted.

The committee on organization recommended the establishment of agencies at Boston, New York, Pittsburg, Buffalo, Chicago, St. Louis and such places in Canada as the delegates designate for the purpose of giving information and assistance to emigrants.—Adopted.

The Finance Committee reported forty-eight million dollars of Irish money in the Savings Banks of the United States.

A motion was made, and after a stormy debate withdrawn, ordering a correspondence with the Mexican Government about the prospects of colonization in Mexico.

An address was ordered to be prepared and sent to the Catholics of the United States and Canada, and a committee was appointed to draft it.

Boiler Explosion and Loss of Life.—A dispatch of the 17th from New York says:

A boiler exploded in London, (Canada West,) on Saturday, blowing the building in which it was situated to atoms, and burying under its ruins thirty men. Five men were killed and nine wounded.

DEATHS.

Died, in Green county, Ala., near Gainesville, of billious pneumonia, on the 30th of January, 1856, Anolphus J. Hitt, eldest son of Rev. John M. Hitt.

It has seldom been our lot to record the death of such an amiable and promising young men. Gifted with a high order of intellect, and ambitious of an honorable fame, he entered the University of Alabama in 1853, to mingle with the votaries of science and engage in the pleasing and elevating pursuits. But being of a frail constitution, he soon fell a victim to his zeal and application, and was forced to abandon his collegiate course. After a partial recuperation of his health, he commenced the study of medicine under Dr. Whitfield, in Gainesville, and so rapid was his progress, that within a few months he bid fair to be eminent in his profession. But traly there is but a step hotween us and death; for "what is your life but a vapor, that appeareth for a little time and then vanisheth away." "All flesh is as grass, and the glory of man as the flower of grass." Just as he was on the point of starting to Philadelphia to attend a course of lectures, for which he was well prepared, he was taken violently ill, and after a painful and protracted affliction of nearly five months he fell asleep in Jesus. But his relatives and friends may "not sorrow as others which have no hope." He was converted to God in the town of Gainesville during a revival of religion in 1848, attached himself to the M. E. Church, and "as seeing Him that is invisible" he endured unto the end, and we trust received the crown of life when the angel of death summoned him from the kingdom of grace to the kingdom of glory; from the vestibule of the temple of time to the inner court of the upper sanctuary. He possessed many excellent traits of character, and was respected and loved by all that knew him. His sun has set to rise in the cloudless splendor of immortality. His death was that of an eminent saint. May his surviving friends and relatives imitate his bright example, and meet him in the realms of light, to be forever united with the church of the first born, the spirits of just men made perfect, and with Jesus, the Mediator of the New Covenant.

T. P. Crymes.

Died, in Sumpter county, Ala., Jan. 29, 1856, of scarlet fever, Martha A., daughter of Thos. Hawkins, aged seven years and two months.

The death of this interesting child has clothed her father and house in mourning for the first time, though some of his children are grown. It was an affecting spectacle to witness parents and children and servants together weeping over the much loved and early dead. But they have this consolation, she was baptized in infancy, and as soon as able to lisp the name of the Redeemer, she was taught to pray, and the stated hours of prayer were remembered to the last by the little suffering one; and though the youngest but one, she is the first of the family gathered into the fold of God.

J. E. N.

Died, in Jackson, La., February 20, Mary Lowella, daughter of Samuel and Mary Decker:

A lovely flower of earthly bloom
An angel eye copies,
And through the portals of the tomb
He bears it to the skies.

There, in the garden spot above,
He plants the tender flower,
To bloom beneath the eye of love,
In Heaven's genial bower.

Governor Wise of Virginia, in view of the urgency of some of the pending business, and the necessity of providing resources to complete the four great leading lines of primary importance—the Covington and Ohio railroad, the Central, and the Southwestern railroad to the Tennessee line, and the James River and Kanawha Canal to Covington—recommends the two Houses of the Legislature to extend their session. He does this for the reason that if the great measures of public policy are left unprovided for by the present session, he will not take the responsibility of calling an extra meeting of the Legislature.

At a recent meeting of German citizens in Galena, Ill., resolutions were adopted, and signed by one hundred and fifty-seven persons, declaring that slavery is a curse, that the light against its propagation is the most urgent issue of the present time, and that they will support only such candidates for State officers as are opposed to the Kansas bill and to Know-Nothingism.

A dispatch from Cape Cod reports the recent storm and existing cold as of unexampled severity. Off Wellfleet there are two schooners and one steamer ice-bound and deserted. Off Chatham there are three schooners in the ice, and at other points there are more vessels in a similar predicament.

BY THE NATIONAL AND SOUTHERN LINES.

New York, Feb. 24.—The Atlantic, with one week's later advices, has arrived off Sandy Hook.

Brown, Shipley & Co. quote cotton as steady at unchanged prices; sales of the week 28,000 bales, of which speculators took 4,000 and exporters 4,000. Breadstuffs have considerably declined. Flour dull. Corn opened heavy, but improved at the close; prices are unchanged. Beef quiet. In pork we notice an improved demand. Lard quiet.

Consols have declined to 90¼ a 98⅛.

Prospects of War between the United States and England.

Peace prospects are progressing favorably, but there is much excitement respecting war with the United States.

Our latest advices state that Lord Palmerston has promised to lay part of the Central American correspondence before Parliament.

It is reported that Mr. Buchanan has demanded his passports. The story of his having had high words with Lord Clarendon is supposed to have been the cause of his non-appearance at Lord Palmerston's soiree.

The general tone of the government press is very insulting towards the United States, but the feelings of the people are friendly. The Chamber of Commerce in Liverpool deprecate the idea of a war with the United States. Matters are now at a crisis.

The English papers are silent on the difficulty between Mr. Buchanan and Lord Clarendon. The latter is reported to have spoken in a very imperious manner, which Mr. Buchanan promptly checked by closing the interview.

It is said that the Derby party intend being forward on the motion to be brought before Parliament on the subject of the omission of all allusion to American affairs in the Queen's speech.

Funds are depressed in consequence of the threatening aspect of affairs.

Peace preliminaries have been signed at Vienna, by representatives of France, England, Turkey, Russia and Austria, agreeing upon a conference, to be held in Paris within three weeks.

There is a report in circulation that the Emperors of Russia and Austria will visit Paris during the conference.

An armistice has been agreed upon, to end in March.

It is reported that France and England will each send an envoy to Brazil for the purpose of having that government use its influence in settling the Central American question.

Paskiewitch, the Russian general, is dead.

There is nothing of interest from the Crimea or Asia. The last of the docks at Sebastopol has been destroyed by the Allies. The armistice agreed upon is said to be on land only.

Further Proceedings of the American Convention.

Philadelphia, Feb. 23.—The motion to postpone the convention, to convene here again on the 3d of July, was discussed nearly the whole day, and was tabled by a vote of 128 to 73. The convention then adjourned over till Monday.

Proceedings of the Black Republican Party.

Pittsburg, Feb. 23.—The convention, after adopting a resolution to hold a nominating convention in Philadelphia, on the 17th of June, adjourned.

Philadelphia, Feb. 23.—A resolution declaring that the National Council has no right to prescribe a platform in opposition to the nomination of any candidate got in favor of the restoration of the Missouri Compromise, was lost by a large majority.

The Convention then resolved to proceed to the nomination of a candidate for the Presidency.

Millard Fillmore is said to be in the ascendancy.

Philadelphia, Feb. 26.—Fillmore was nominated on the second ballot, the vote standing as follows: Fillmore, 175; Law, 21; Rayner, 14; McLean, 13. The nomination was made unanimous, and the Convention adjourned.

Andrew Jackson Donelson was nominated for Vice-President; the vote stood, Donelson, 81; Rayner, 12; Smith, of Alabama, 8; scattering, 9.

From Washington.

Washington, Feb. 25.—The Senate adopted a resolution calling on the President for all correspondence on the enlistment question. Jones spoke on Kansas affairs.

New York Market.

New York, Feb. 25.—Our Cotton market is easier, but not quotably lower.

Louisiana Legislature.

Baton Rouge, Feb. 25.—Senate.—An act relative to the promulgation of official reports and documents passed. The bill specifies that such documents shall only be published in a four sheet form, in French and English, and not in the official paper.

Mr. Mendy, in adverting to the bill, said that this course would save the State twenty thousand dollars per annum.

A substitute to the joint resolution recommending that certain fortifications be made at the mouth of the Mississippi river, was reported from the Committee on Federal Relations, asking Congress to place the whole Gulf Coast in a better state of defence.

The resolution has reference to the critical relations with England in regard to Central America. The resolution was adopted.

House.—A letter was read from Auditor Marks, in reply to a resolution of the 21st, asking an explanation of certain accounts audited by him for printing. He did so under the belief that the revised statutes formed a part of the public printing of the State, and that the appropriation for them was intended to increase that fund to an amount sufficient to meet all demands upon it.

The letter was referred to the Committee on Finance.

An act to incorporate the Red River Navigation Company, and one to amend the seventh section of the act incorporating the Great Northern Railroad Company, were reported on favorably by the Judiciary Committee.

Sundry letters from Mr. Rohl, on internal improvements, were introduced by request of the Governor and referred to the appropriate committee.

Mr. Phillips, from the Committee on Federal Relations, introduced strong Southern Rights resolutions as a substitute, which were made the special order for Friday.

Amendments to the act providing for the State printing, from the House, were referred to the Finance Committee. The bill, as amended, cuts down the prices materially.

An act for the payment to Judges of certain District Courts the sum of five hundred dollars for mileage, etc., was laid upon the table subject to call.

An act providing for a registry law came up and was referred to a special committee, of which Mr. Hyams is the chairman.

Mr. Munday introduced an amendment to an act for the punishing the crime of arson. He called attention to the glowing discrepancy in the French and English texts, and said that article forty-eight in the English specified ten years' imprisonment as the punishment, while the French specified ten days.

Adjourned.

Louisiana Legislature.

Baton Rouge, Feb. 26.—Senate.—An act emancipating Hurriet P. Woods, of New Orleans, was passed.

Notice was given of a bill to close the mouth of Bayou Plaquemine.

A Joint resolution was passed empowering the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House to issue warrants compelling attendance of absent members.

An act reorganizing the public schools came up, and the fourth section was amended by making the rate of interest on the proceeds of the sale of the school lands eight per cent. instead of six. The bill was then laid upon the table subject to call.

A joint resolution was passed removing the Surveyor General's office from Donaldsonville to Baton Rouge.

An act to amend Article 211 of the Code of practice passed.

House.—An act to regulate and limit taxation in the city of New Orleans passed. Nothing else of importance done.

River Intelligence.

Louisville, Feb. 25.—The river is rising, with six and a half feet of water in the canal.

The ice commenced running yesterday, and is doing much damage to boats. Several have been sunk at Cincinnati.

Cincinnati, Feb. 25.—The river is breaking up, causing great loss of boats. The stern-wheel steamer Albeguine, Flag, Bridge City, Grape Shot, Madoua, Salem and Yorktown were sunk and are a total loss. Several others, besides flatboats and barges were sunk. The loss is estimated at $200,000. The river has risen eight feet in twelve hours, and is still rising, though gorged with ice above and below.

Vicksburg, Feb. 25.—The Southern Belle and Lucy Robinson passed this port at eleven o'clock this morning, and the Fanny Bullitt at two o'clock this afternoon, bound for New Orleans.

A dispatch of the 16th from Washington says: Governor Shannon will leave there this afternoon direct for St. Louis, thence to proceed to Kansas. He will immediately remove his office from Shawnee Mission to Lecompton, the centre of the prevailing difficulties. Orders will be issued from the War Department this afternoon, and possibly be conveyed to Col. Sumner by Governor Shannon. No doubt they will be in accordance with the President's views expressed in his special Kansas message and recent proclamation, with the design firmly to enforce them. There are 800 troops at Fort Leavenworth, and 400 at Fort Riley, to be called out if circumstances demand.

Capt. Pemberton has been ordered to the command of the new United States steamer Merrimac, vice Capt. Gregory, relieved at his own request. If the vessel is found to work as well as is anticipated, the trial trip will be continued to Europe.

Under date of the 10th, the Washington correspondent of the Baltimore Sun writes:

The Pacific is expected to bring out the dispatches from Mr. Buchanan in relation to the reception by the British government of our ultimate demands for specific redress and satisfaction on account of the violation by her minister and agents of our neutrality laws. This answer of the British government, when received, will probably be communicated to Congress.

The navy committee of the senate will not be ready to report upon the subject of the memorials in relation to the action of the Naval Retiring Board, so soon as they expected. They will probably first report upon the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy to build twelve steam sloops-of-war.

The navy is not so very popular at this moment as to afford much aid to the Secretary in the adoption of this very proper measure. It would be well, therefore, to attempt to pass the twelve steamer sloop bill before the action of the Retiring Board shall be brought up for discussion.

Gilbert Stuart.

The Yankees have become notorious for their question-asking propensity, yet sometimes John Bull exhibits so remarkable a development of this trait, we must conclude that Jonathan and John are at least cousins. A good anecdote is related of Gilbert Stuart, a celebrated American portrait painter, whose replies puzzled the inquisitiveness of his English traveling companions in their attempts to find out his calling.

On the occasion, Stuart was traveling in a stage-coach, in England, with some gentlemen who were strangers to him, but all of whom were sociable and full of animation. His brilliant conversational powers attracted much attention, and his companions became desirous to know who and what he was. They asked many roundabout questions to find out his calling or profession. Mr. Stuart answered, with a grave face and serious tone, that he sometimes dressed gentlemen's and ladies' hair.

"You are a hair-dresser, then," remarked one of his companions, inquiringly.

"What!" said he, "do you take me for a barber?"

"I beg your pardon, sir, but I inferred it from what you said. If I mistook you, may I take the liberty to ask what you are then?"

"Why, I sometimes brush a gentleman's coat or hat, and sometimes adjust a cravat."

"Oh, you are a valet then, to some noble man."

"A valet! Indeed, sir, I am not. I am not a servant. To be sure I make coats and waistcoats for gentlemen."

"Oh, you are a tailor?"

"Tailor! Do I look like a tailor? I assure you I never handled a goose, other than a roasted one."

By this time the passengers were all in a roar, and one of them exclaimed, "What are you, then?"

"I tell you," said Stuart. "I be assured all I have said is literally true. I dress hair, brush hats and coats, adjust a cravat, and make coats, waistcoats and breeches, and likewise boots and shoes, at your service."

"Oh! a boot and shoemaker, after all."

"Guess again, gentlemen. I never handled boot or shoe but for my own feet and legs; yet all I have told you is true."

"We may as well give up guessing, then," remarked one of the party.

After checking his laughter, he said to them very gravely, "Now, gentlemen, I will not play the fool with you, but will tell you, upon my honor as a gentleman, bona fide, my profession—I get my bread by making faces." He then screwed his countenance, and twisted the linaments of his visage in a manner such as Samuel Foote or Charles Mathews might have envied.

When his companions, after loud peals of laughter, had composed themselves, each took credit to himself for having all the while suspected that the gentleman belonged to the theater, and now they all knew that he must be a comedian by profession. But, to their utter astonishment, he assured them that he never was on the stage, and very rarely saw the inside of any theater. His companions now looked at him and at each other with astonishment.

Before parting, Stuart said to his companions, "Gentlemen, you will find that all I have said of my various employments is comprised in these few words—I am a portrait painter. If you will call at John Palmer's, York Buildings, London, I shall be ready and willing to brush your coat or hat, dress your hair a la mode, supply you, if in need, with a wig of any fashion or dimensions, accommodate you with boots or shoes, give you ruffles or cravats, and make faces for you."

On parting with him at the inn, they begged leave to inquire in what part of England he was born. He replied, "I was not born in England, Wales, Ireland or Scotland." Here was another puzzle for them; "where then?" was their eager inquiry.

"I was born at Narragansett," was his reply.

"Where's that?"

"Six miles from Pottawoone, and ten miles from Pappoosquash, and about four miles west of Connecticut, and not far from the spot where the famous battle with the Pequots was fought."

"In what part of the East Indies is that, sir?" was the response.

"East Indies, my dear sir! It is in the State of Rhode Island, between Massachusetts and the Connecticut river."

This was all Greek to his companions, and he left them to study a new lesson in geography, affording another instance of the ignorance respecting men of genius, whose vernacular tongue is the same as that of Bacon, Newton, Locke, Shakspeare, Milton and Pope.

Sharp Correspondence.—One of the Peter Funk "Gift Enterprise" firms in a large city, sent a package of tickets to a postmaster in Maine, the postage upon which was fifteen cents unpaid. He got the following hard rap over the knuckles from the indignant official:

"I herewith return your tickets. You must be fools as well as knaves, to suppose that I will aid you in swindling my neighbors, and pay all the expense myself!"

To which he, in a few days, received the annexed "settler:"

"Sir: We perhaps owe you an apology for sending the parcel, postage unpaid.

"As we infer from the phraseology of your note, that you are willing to swindle your neighbors if we will pay all the expenses, please give us your lowest terms on which you will act as our agent.

"P. S.—All communications shall be strictly confidential."

This note was promptly returned, with the following endorsement across its face, by the postmaster.

"It seems you are not only fools and knaves, but blackguards, also. Ask my neighbors if they think I would "swindle" them either at my own expense or that of any one else."

To which this answer came back by next mail:

"We have inquired of your neighbors long ago, and that's the reason we applied to you in the first instance."

Here follows the postmaster's final reply:

"I acknowledge the corn. Send us your street and number, so that I can call on you when I come to the city, and I may conclude to add your "Enterprise."

But that was the last thing that the "Gift" gentlemen could think of doing. In fact, secrecy as to his locality was quite essential in keeping out of the clutches of the police.

THE CURRENT WEEK.

Monday, Feb. 25.—A Saxon saint and daughter of royalty—St. Walburg, daughter of Richard, King of the West Saxons, whom England was Saxon rather than Normanic has in our calendar the religious honors of the 25th.

In England the purple spring crocus begins to bloom, and spreads its varying colors, with a beautiful diversity of shade and tint, over the plains. Whatever birth and battles, great songs or great deeds may have commemorated the day, they have found no historian to sing their praises or record their occurrence. The day has no regal honors—is without the purple and scarlet of imperialty.

Tuesday, Feb. 26.—An old Alexandrian saint, bearing the name of his diocese—St. Alexander—famous in ecclesiastical history for having, in conjunction with St. Athanasius and Marcellus, approved the doctrine of Arius, a schismatic of great genius, great learning and freedom of opinion in his teachings, patronizes this day. In 420 St. Athanasius succeeded St. Alexander in the patriarchal chair.

Wednesday, Feb. 27.—Those who are born upon this day should consider themselves as more than triply armed against "the world, the flesh and the devil," inasmuch as the number of saints who have charge and command over its destinies—if old Chrysostom's proportions of one saint to ten thousand devils, are correct—to whelm the right flank of Beelzebub's force, without calling on the reserve, which being accomplished, a regular Austerlitz must occur to the diabolicals. St. Leander, St. Julien, St. Chronion, St. Hesus, St. Thallheus, St. Galmier or Baldomerus, St. Nestor and St. Alneih—all before 600—have it in charge and keeping, wearing, as Flora's banner, the lungwort, or pulmonaria officinalis.

Thursday, Feb. 28.—The thousands of martyrs to the great pestilence which swept Alexandria, Egypt, as with the besom of destruction, in 261, are prayed for by all Catholic souls on this day—that their spirits may have rest evermore; and the beautiful purple crocus is the emblem of Flora which typifies and illustrates it.

In the regular calendar this day is the last of the month; but, every leap year, an additional day lengthens its life and crowns it with fresh honors. The old monthly memorandum recites the fact in quaint style:

Thirty days hath September,
April, June and November;
All the rest have thirty one,
Except February, which hath twenty eight alone,
The last line being a thorough Alexandrine in measure.

Friday, Feb. 29.—Once in every four years, an additional day is given to the month of February, increasing its size and putting it nearly upon an equality with the other months; although, even then, a whole head shorter than the months that surround it. The additional day is, strictly speaking, a mathematical one. It was found that the old Calendar, the Copernican, was incorrect, and a means was wanted to divide the year so that, in his annual travels, the Sun should be accompanied with a look of travels, which explained correctly the hours of his rising and going down. Mathematics stepped forward and aided Astronomy. Together they created the day which make Leap-year, in which the chief privilege is for the ladies to pop the question and woo for themselves. Voracious old chroniclers state that any one who refuses their proposals shall be excommunicated. It is generally noticed here with parties and festivals.

Saturday, March 1.—The month of March, which was, by the ancients, so named from Mars, the god of war, had a very different character in different places. Mr. Leigh Hunt observes that "March has nothing to do with the Deity's nature; for, though it affects to be rough, it is one of the best natured months in the year; drying up the super-abundant moisture of winter with its fierce winds, and thus restoring us our paths through the fields, and piping before the flowers like a bacchanal. The oftener you meet him firmly the less he will shake you; and the more smiles you will have from the fair month that follows."

An old chronicler says that our Saxon ancestors did call "the month of March Lenet-moneth, because the days did then first begin in length to exceed the nights. And they called this chief season of fasting Lenet, because of the Lenet-mynat, wherein the most part of fasting fell; whence we call it now Lent; the word meaning Spring. The Saxons called it Rhedmoneth, either from one of their divinities—Rheda, or from raed, the Saxon word for council; this being the month wherein wars or expeditions were usually undertaken by Gothic tribes. It was also called hyldmonath, meaning stormy; and well deserves its character. Mr. Leigh Hunt, in his essay on the month, says: "the animal tribes now begin to exhibit signs of activity, the farmer extends the exercise of his plow and begins sowing." The crown-imperial, dogstooth violets, hyacinth and narcissus; scarlet ranunculurs, tulips—which even inspired and crazed Dutch gardners—come into blossom. Winter, dispossessed of storms;

"Lingering on the verge of Spring,
Retires reluctant; and from time to time,
Looks back, while, at his keen and chilly breath,
Fair Flora sickens."

St. Dardil, the tutelar divinity of Wales, is all-powerful on this day. He resided, on the Isle of Wight. Ate bread and drank water, only, and founded twelve monasteries. He died in 544. If the veracious chroniclers of those times are to be believed, he restored a child to life. His diocese was exposed to the Orkneyan filibusters, who, in their wherries every summer committed depredations beyond the Saint's power to check; but a wonderful prayer of his called into being a cordon sanitaire they could not cross, and hurishly but effectually hocked them out.

A custom prevailed of wearing the leek on St. David's day, because he caused the Britons under King Cadwallader to defeat the Saxons. Shakspeare chronicles the fact, as most of our readers will recall, in "King Henry V."

In London St. David's day is the anniversary of the "Most Honorable and Loyal Society of Ancient Britains," established in 714. The day is thee sacred to St. David, and has the leek for an emblem.

On this day, 1809, non-intercourse with Great Britain was established by Congress. In 1845 President Tyler signed a joint resolution of Congress for the annexation of Texas to the United States.

Sunday, March 2d.—St. Chad, A. D. 673, has the honors of the day. The dwarf Cerasthus is the floral emblem dedicated to St. Chad.

The want of great events recorded upon this day, in Europe, is partially compensated by one of interest in America. In 1770 a quarrel occurred at Gray's Rope Walk, in Boston, between a soldier of his Majesty's forces and a man employed in a rope-walk. The provocation was given by the citizen, and a scuffle ensued, in which the soldier was beaten. Out of this grew the troubles of the 5th, which was celebrated in Boston—until, and which led to, the revolution—by the accounts of British oppressions recited by the orators. In 1776, a council of war was held at Boston, when the American insurgents resolved to fortify Dorchester Heights, and did so, thereby leading to the battle of Bunker's Hill.

The American army, in 1847, landed at the Isle of Lobos, off Vera Cruz, and made preparations for the attack. The force consisted of 13,000 men, partly detached from the forces of Generals Taylor and Wool.

The investment was not completed until the 13th. Thus it will be seen that the week is celebrated in our calendar, as a week freighted with very many rich remembrances and well deserving of note. It takes us a degree farther from the poles, consequently a degree nearer to the Equator; and, in our political almanac, leaves us at the gate and doorway of that great, electoral anniversary, the fourth of March.

We trust it may be freighted with much pleasure and profit to the readers of the Crescent, and that in its columns they may find more than an ordinary amount of valuable intelligence and amusement.

Fatal Effects of the Cold.—A correspondent of the Petersburg Express, writing from King and Queen county, Va., gives a sad account of the effects of the cold in that vicinity. He says:

"It has been difficult with many to procure the necessaries of life. Many have lost valuable cattle and other live stock; and, still more melancholy, several of our citizens and a number of slaves in this section have been frozen to death and found dead in the fields.

Mr. Archer and Mr. Carlton, both of King and Queen, were found near their own houses frozen—one of them leaning against the draw-bars, which he had evidently attempted in vain to get over; the other had dismounted from his horse and opened his gate, which his horse got away from him, and he wandered a short distance in the snow, laid down and died.

A stout negro man was seen standing erect in a field, not far from a house, so long as to excite curiosity, and it was found on examination that he, too, was frozen to death.

AQUATIC GRIEVANCES.

The residents of Lake Julia, or that part of Julia street which lies between Baronne and Rampart streets, held a meeting during the forenoon of Wednesday last, while water-bound in their respective dwellings, the object of which was to consider ways and means of abating the nuisance that every heavy rain inflicts upon them. There being no dry spot on which to meet, and all neighborly communication being washed away with the muddiest of water, the meeting was connected by sympathetic telegraph; the writer of this, who resides opposite the deepest part of the lake, being the medium. Col. Hardhead was called to the chair, and Capt. Thickfingers appointed Secretary.

Mr. Drybones, having appointed himself a special committee of one to draft resolutions, submitted the following: "Resolved, as the rain will rain and the city won't drain, that we do hereby emigrate and ne'er come back again."

Mr. Cheerful objected. We have resided here so long, said he, that the rest of the town consider us a waterproof, or semi-aquatic race, and respect us accordingly. To desert our old homes at such a juncture would, therefore, destroy our flattering status, and expose us to public ridicule, as only a lot of ordinary human humbugs after all. I am flatly opposed to emigration, but ready to subscribe to any other method of ameliorating our condition.

Mr. Jolly heartily approved Mr. Cheerful's remarks, and offered the following as a substitute for Mr. Drybones' resolution: "Resolved, as the rain will rain, and the city can't drain, that we buy India-rubber boots, and future floods abolish."

Mr. Highheels said he could never sanction such a resolution as that. If by buying India-rubber boots and abolishing future floods, the gentleman meant wading, he should move to lay the resolution on the table, or toss it into the lake. Wading might be a suitable expedient for small-boys, niggers, and Biddies; but would be unbecoming and ridiculous for gentlemen.

Mr. Coal was of the same opinion, and, after making some well-timed and sensible remarks, offered the following: "Resolved: As the rain will rain, and the city can't drain, that we procure a ferry-boat and its expense maintain."

Mr. Thoughtful said he would vote for the last resolution but for its impracticability. It is true, said he, that there is plenty of water to float such a craft, and plenty of people to patronize it; but the city would never permit such an enterprise to go into private hands without selling the house of the street or the lake, and imposing such specifications as would render it a losing undertaking to the contractors. He hoped there were other propositions to come before the meeting.

Mr. Crackjoke thereupon presented the following: "Resolved, As the rain will rain, and the city can't drain, that a plank road o'er our house-tops would save all further pain."

Mr. Highheels wished to know if the gentleman offered that resolution in earnest. Mr. Crackjoke replied affirmatively. Mr. H. then moved that the resolution be laid on the table. Such an idea, he said, was preposterous. He would never consent to have the tenants of the little shingle-roofed cottages in the vicinity trotting over the slates of his two-story brick. Aside from the insane appearance of the thing, it would certainly have the effect of polluting everybody's cistern water, and encouraging the vulgar habit of hooking down everybody's chimney.

Mr. Sensible said he regretted to see gentlemen wasting their time in such nonsense. He had a resolution to offer, which he hoped would meet the unanimous approval of the meeting. It read as follows: "Resolved, as the rain will rain, and the city can't drain, that we do grin and bear the thing, and from all fuss refrain."

The resolution was put to vote and unanimously adopted; and Mr. Sensible, being called upon for a speech, rose and addressed the meeting as follows:

"Gentlemen and neighbors—my resolution has been adopted. It speaks for itself. I have nothing more to say. I thank you."

This speech was enthusiastically applauded, and, on motion of Mr. Crackjoke, the speaker was requested to prepare a copy of it for publication. Upon the question as to what paper the speech should be published in, quite a rigorous and interesting discussion arose.

Mr. Gassy contended that it should be published in the paper whose circulation is proven to be the largest, by reason of its official publication of the letter-list.

Mr. Bitters was of opinion that it should be published in that other paper, whose circulation was proven to be just twice as large, by reason of its ability to publish the letter-list free-gratis-for-nothing. Various gentlemen agreed with Mr. Bitters, whilst others sided with Mr. Gassy; Mr. Crackjoke coinciding with both, and Mr. Highheels taking no part in the discussion.

Mr. Sensible thought that this contention about big circulation, the letter-list, etc., was, more or less, clap-trap. Suppose the papers alluded to actually had, as they contended, each a larger circulation than the other? What would that signify, the character and limits of those circulations being considered? Which (asked Mr. S.) is most effective—the fire or ten thousand raw recruits, or that of one thousand trained sharp-shooters, into the ranks of an enemy. Common sense could answer the question. Without wishing to appear egotistical, he would suggest that his speech be published in that paper whose every sheet went to a respectable and responsible source; and not in either of those papers whose sheets went forth like dead leaves in an autumn wind, to be ignominiously used at last, perhaps, by barbers, grocers and trunk-makers. Is it necessary for me, asked Mr. S., to name the paper I am in favor of?

"No! no! not at all!" was heard from all parts of the meeting; "the gentleman is perfectly well understood!" And, on motion of Mr. Thoughtful, it was ordered that the speech be published in the paper alluded to by Mr. Sensible.

Mr. Windy begged leave to offer a few remarks upon the subject for which the meeting was convened. Said he, "We, the residents of Lake Julia, have but to glance back through the telescope of the past, to discover that, in respect to inundations and cuid, we lead a comparatively elysian life. There were the ancient Egyptians; thousands of whom, by the annual overflowings of the Nile, were led to esteem mud as one of the greatest blessings of life, and lived and died a regular nation of stick-in-the-muds. In classic Veelee, whole generations passed away, ie the belief that a dry street was a waste of ground, intended more for ornament than use. Upon the rivers of China, millions of people have popped into being and popped out without looking upon dry land as anything better than a sort of last resort for those poor beggars who were not able to own boats. And in our own country, at the present time, what do we see? The farmers of the Ohio and Mississippi river bottoms, annually rebuilding their fences and corn-cribs with rails and logs which the winter "fresh" never fails to carry away, and deposit in a pickle of mud and other trash in the forests below. Why, gentlemen, if you will only consider"——

The speaker was interrupted by the entrance of a messenger, who announced that the lake had mizzled, and that the Biddies were scrubbing the mud from the banquettes; also, that the sun contemplated a shine.

Thereupon, Mr. Crackjoke offered the following resolution:

"Resolved, As the rain doesn't rain, and the city needn't drain, that we're a pack of fools, and shouldn't meet again."

It was adopted unanimously, and then the meeting adjourned.—[Crescent.

On the 21st, Mr. James offered a resolution in the House of Representatives, State Legislature, to appropriate $500 for the purchase of a stand of colors for the New Orleans Continentals. Referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The experiment of blasting the ice in front of St. Louis has turned out a failure, so far as any practical result was concerned.

Several days ago the ice in the Missouri river near Boonville, was ascertained to be eighteen inches thick in the channel, and in some places near the shore three feet thick.

Jackson Bradley, under sentence of death, made his escape from the jail of Kershaw, S. C., a few days ago. A reward of $300 is offered for his capture.

On the 17th, Mr. H. R. Hemmingway was robbed of $4,500 on a railroad train between Schenectady and Albany. He carried his money in a carpet bag and took a cap with it by his side.

A Remarkable Witness.—Those who have only casually observed and reflected on the mighty revolution accomplished by steam, in nearly all departments of human industry and enterprise, and especially in the navigation of the world's waters, and the operations of travel and commerce, can have, remarks a contemporary, scarcely an adequate conception of the gigantic triumph of this subtle element in less than half a century. But there was a man among the festival party, gathered in honor of the splendid Cunard steamer Persia (390 feet in length and of 3,300 tons burden) at Glasgow, who could feel all the greatness of this triumph. That man was the Dean of Ripon, England, who, being toasted, stated that forty-eight years ago he accompanied Robert Fulton on his first steamer trial trip on the Hudson river—that being the first successful trial ever made. He thanked God that he had been spared to witness this perfected steamer, the Persia, the most magnificent vessel afloat, and that, coupled with the long succession of triumphs of steam, which he had carefully observed, whether on the sea or on the land, the triumphs of peace, intelligence, and a broader brotherhood had gone hand in hand. He trusted and prayed that this would continue to be the history of steam—the most potent of all the agencies of enterprise and civilization.

A LECTURE,

Delivered by Col. THORINGTON before the Literary Club of Montgomery, Ala., at its winter session of 1855-'56
Subject:

MONEY—ITS USES AND ABUSES.

To the four elements which have existed in nature since the foundation of the world, Civilization has added another, almost as indispensable, ocextensive, and necessary to to life, viz., money. Money is eo identified with the various transactions of life, that we have no conception of object or labor that is not more or less connected with it. It is a talisman that speaks all languages, and we never hear of a guinea or a dollar, in whatever latitude, requiring an interpretsr. It ontere the palace of the king, the oustle of the rich, and the hut of the peasant—although its visits to the latter, liko the angels', are but few and far between. It is a golden koy that turns all locks, and is, in a word, the "open sesame" of the world. It is a chain that reaches to the limits of the four cardinal points; a pnir of golden scales, so contractile, and yet so expansive, as to weigh all substances; and a vessel so elastio as to measure all liquids. It ie the standard of all value and the reward of all labor. This fifth element, so potential and universal in its charnoter, we mny profitably contemplate. If knowledge is said to be power, money may be truly called its ngent, if not its master. In times of conflict hstwesn nations, it is called the "sinews of war;" and if in war sinows, in tims of peaos it might as properly bo called, the "circulation of the blood." As it is the representative of all things, it is, in effect, the possession of sll tbings. If we compare it with knowledgo, it is as stsam to the engine—the motive power.

Behold that ship headmed in the midst of ocesn. With all its beauty and devioe of architecture, it lios at the mercy of the waves; its needlo and oompase are still on board, but they advnnco her not. What weits she for? The motivs power is not there. But now it arises in the wind; her sails nre filled; and, like a thing of life, she advences along the expanse of waters, until she safely enters the destined port.

Ths organ, with all its grandeur, its pipes of music nnd power of henvenly sounds, is mute as the grave, and has neither voico nor speech until the lungs are moved into notion by the power which gives them motion.

Knowledgo nnd money united make a mighty firm, whioh, like two partners, conduct tho business of the world. Tho man that does not comprehend and respect the value and importance of money, is so much the less usseful to himself and sooisty, and eed not boast of his disinteresteduess, or console himesIf with the reflection that he is to that extent better than other msn. We oensure no man for regarding the acquisition of monsy ss one of the most important duties of life. It requires not tho embelishment of oratory or poetry to depict the depth of misery and misfortune that have in so many instanoss followed the idle neglect or misuso of money. The noglooted orphan, the poverty stricken widow, genteel in the midst of desolation, who has given no voice to her grief; and that poor, forsaken old man, expiring in the last cold embrace of poverty, the emblem of despair, silently, but too surely toll the tels.

The improvsment of oarly opportunities may be compsrsd to gathering prsoious seed for a coming harvest, to whioh mnst bs added industry, and the intslligence whsn, where, and how to plant, and the patience to wait for "the sarly and the lattor rain."

The planter or farmer who, in ths spring time, we should sso throwing away his seed, or oasting it upon waste places, when he had within his reach the most productive ground ready to rooeive it, we should despise rather than compassionate, whon, upon the failure of the orop, he charged the ssasons with his folly. So it is with that young man whose days and hours have passed hy neglected, his small means squandered, the tide of fortuno innotiosd, as it rushed by him; and then, with dojsoted air and folded arms, complaise of ill-luck or the blindness of fortune. Fortune is too great a helle, and constantly surrounded by too many more ardent admirors, to be won hy so distant a lover.

Man is ths architeot of his own fortune; and if he would raise a superstructure of such solid material as to afford protection to himself and family, or of suoh stylo and proportions as to give eclat and distinotion to his name, he must he content in the enrly part of the day to dig down to a snre foundation, to uss his own hands as wsll as another's, to take hnld himssIf of the surrounding rubbish, rsmove all obstnoles, and then, when the odifice has been thoroughly bogun, to daily and hourly watch its upward progress.

It is a oommon thing to speak lightly of men who have hy their own industry and economy acquirsd wealth, and in some instanoss they are amenahle to the sevsrest criticism; but if without prejndios we contemplate those who have made large fortunes, we shall find they have been rsmarkahle for some peculiar talent, possessing frequontly great powers of oombination, and an industry by which time, in their hands, as hy the magio of nlchymy, is speodily turned into money. Labor is snid to he wealth; and if it is, ho is the best mathematioian who can truly calculate the value of time, and apply it to the wisest purpose; and thors is an accumulativo power in progresslon that the idler can nsver know.

In the present rapidity of the world's progress there is no time nor place for idleness or folly; and although we do not wish to make men of boys, hoforo nature has, we say lot youth learn the uss and valuo of money, as well as of books. The world is not only changing and varying in its neossities and artioles of trndo, but is constantly inoreasing in its intslligonoo, power and skill to do and perform. The broker of Wall street of twenty years ago, were he now to return to that renowned locality, would find himself as much of nn antiquarian, nnd far more surprised at beholding the Yunkees of the present day, than Rip Van Winkle was nt their progenitors, after his twenty year's sleep. Sinco the world began, men never looked so far, nor beheld so mnny things at a glanoo, as now; and if our broker wns to be blessed with the second sight of a Scotchman, he oculd na langer ken iho ways o' the bulls nnd bears o' the nuld spot. He would have to commence the study of a new alphabet, and might take his first lessons in envelops, three-cent post office stamps, the various express lines, and the telegraphic wirss stretching for thousands of miles over the continent. The incessant messages by lightning continunlly passing around his hewidened head, he would very naturally suspect as coming from invisihle agents in the other world, or as a kind of inaudihle whispering from the presiding genius of all stock brokers, suspected by the knowing ones to he a certain eldsrly gentleman, dressed in black, nnd whose standing has been affectsd somewhat by the reputation of a cloven foot.

We have had various reforms, political and moral, and the occasional revolution of a nation, but none of these can accomplish so great a change in this moral happiness and prosperity of a people as would ths judioious, wise, nnd conscientious use of money. It has become a part of our very nature that we never know some men, oftentimes our most intimate acquaintances, until we have had some money trnnsaction with them; and then, as by the aid of sems powerful reflector, traits of character have been developed that we never saw hefors.

GEORGIA CORRESPONDENCE.

The Late Conference in LaGrange—Methodist Preachers' "Big Sunday."—Bishop Early—The Missionary Anniversary—Speakers—Conference Statistics, &c.

It is a great provision of society that all classes shall have recreation. May day, in London, is the chimney sweepers' holiday, in which they rosm the streets in fantnstics. New Year relieves the vexed brain and the taxed sinews of Yankeedom, and Christmas sets all our Southern negroes free; so that Conference is the Methodist preachers' big Sunday.

See them as they pour from the cars, carpet bags, valises, trunks, form a pyramid near; with what perfect assurance of finding a good hom: do they gather around the man with a book, and ask, fifty at once, "where do I go?" See thsm now, in the hearty, honest grootings! In that joyous welcome, in that fervent grasp, his brethren give him, all the trials of last year are forgot. The croakers of his circuit nre drowned by the joyous accents of a friend, the frowns of the dissatisfisd are lost in the smiles of these who love him. His discouraged heart is resnimated. his faith grows strong, and soon his zesl enters another field, in which the ripened corn mhy most his sickle with a richer harvest. What a hond of union is formed nmong itinerant preachers! They go into the world feeling of each other that > "Their words are honds, their oaths are oracles;

> Their love sincere, their thoughts immaculate;
> Their tears pure messengers, sent from the heart;
> Their hearts far from fraud as heaven from earth."

Their sooial intercourse is a "perpetnal feast of noctared sweets, where no orude surfeit reigns." And then, when they meet in church for religions worship, how they sing and pray and preach. You soon feel as if the earth is raised so near to heaven that there is hardly a Sabbath day's journey hotween you and the blessed city. At least so it ssemed at our last Conference in LaGrange.

The business of ths Confsrsnco was preoeded by a prayer meeting, usually led by Bishop Early, in all ths zeal of a young preacher on his first appointment. In his appearance spring and wintor meet—unusually white hair forms ths hackground of ngs, ngainst which a remarkably florid complexion throws the rslief of youth. And well may we say that age is in the background with Bishop Early. His tall form is oreot; he moves quickly and perfootly upright, except a signifioant stoop, denoting a sharp lookout on every sido for information. His preaching is unique, and, as far as I know, without modol and without method. But you listen with interest, and soon feel the tears rolling off your cheeks with at the conclusion of some happily told incident. Before he closes his own heart warms with the truth, and the fervor of his exhortntion kindles all around, and shouts and hallelujahs fill ths church. The effect is good, no matter what the style. In the Conference room he is always in time, always prompt and decided. Ago has made no impression on his ensrgies. May he long livo to sorvo the church.

The Georgia Conference is a very large body, and smbraces many interests. There are ten distriots and twonty-three stations among the whites, fourteen missions to the whites, twenty-six to the oolored people, and sixty-two circuits. This ysar ons hundrod and sixty-four preachers have been appointed to work, hesides eight in colleges, three in agenoies, and twenty-two superannuated—making in all one hundred and ninety-seven connected with ths Confersnco. The statistics show 71,174 members of the Church, and nearly $19,000 raised for missions.

The nnniversary was one of more than ordinary interest. The rain was pouring very henvily, and the streets very much like a clay hole worked for brick, but the house was filled to overflowing, and the spirit of the meeting good. Dr. Taylor gave us a pleasant talk about China. He is improving as a public speaker, but still needs composure and ease, united with fire in the right place. The direction I heard given to a young preacher would do him good, "Begin low, proceed slow, rise higher, take fire."

Dr. Sehon followed Dr. Taylor, in a speech of rich and varied interest. All were delighted with the speech; it nhonnded in the suaviter in modo, but had nothing to spare in the fortiter in re. I hear many missionary addresses, but very few take hold of me with convincing argument, or those gospel appeals to the truth that I need. They galvanize me into anniversary enthusiasm, but don't send me out feeling that "the zeal of the Lord's house has eaten me up."

Brother Myers, of the Southern Advocate, gave us some strong appeals in behalf of the work in Georgia, and they told happily for the object in view.

The collection of the missionary anniversary was over $2,000. They have set the sum of 30,000 dollars as their mark for the present year. They don't expect to accomplish this in a few extra efforts, but by systematic work. The motto for this year is not "striko while the iron's hot," but it is Cromwell's maxim, "keep striking until it is hot." Come over next winter, Mr. Editor, and see whether it turns out a song, or whether it proves a sermon.

*The Conference has done well in the tract cause; $5,793 have been raised, and the interest generally encouraging. In education interests this Conference holds deservedly a high position. One college and two institutions of high academic character are now in successful operation, training our sons; five female colleges have the care of our daughters. By the way, have you seen the college slaughter which is going on in the Southern Advocate, by the redoubtable knight Omega? His Rosinante is a perfect Bucoephalus, his words hoarse thunders, while his blows are young earthquakes. He takes up the pretentious things called "colleges," and tumbles them down-hill as so many wheelbarrow loads of small potatoes—

> "He speaks, plain cannon, fire and smoke and bounce;
> He gives the bastinado with his tongue;
> Our ears are cudgelled; not a word of his
> But bolt-is better than a bolt of France.
> 'Zounds! I was never so bethumped with words
> Since I first called my brother's father dad."

His fault is a lack of appreciation of what is good in our colleges, and a failure to acknowledge what has been accomplished by these "wheelbarrows." Omega would have one or two universities in the South. No college without $200,000 in endowment, "splendid buildings," "a noble library of five or six thousand volumes, chemical and philosophical instruments worth six or eight thousand dollars;" all costing, say $400,000, the smount to be raised before a college is to begin operations. Now, Mr. Editor, what practical man in all the country does not know that Omega and all the hopeful theological heroes that he sees rising from his university would forever remain diamonds in the rough if they waited for such a Gerard beginning. And because the Church can't set up such an institution all in magic haste, our sons must go to the State universities, or to the great North. Now, Mr. Editor, I believe it is good policy in our church to set up for herself. Because we have no costly cathsdral in which to worship, must we be compelled to train our children under a ministry we believe in error, and in ceremonies we believe wrong? So with schools. If the Church does not furnish us with means for this costly university plan, must we not begin the best we can, if it be only in the "upper room of a Masonic Lodge?" Yes sir, give me education in a Methodist college, if it has nothing besides the shellor for students and a faithful set of religious teachers.

DONATION.

Five dollars from Brother Milee, of Rutherford, Tenn., by J. W. Hunter, for Foreign Missions.

Who will not, with the love of God dwelling in his heart, and the means in his possession, follow his example? Come, friends and brethern, let us hear from you.

DEFICIENCY IN THE TREASURY—WANT OF FUNDS.

It becomes our duty to announce the fact to the Church, and our friends generally, that there will be a great demand for funds to meet the outstanding drafts of the present year.

This deficiency will exceed thirty thousand dollars. We make the announcement in due time, so that no blame or censure can possibly fall on us for not having done so.

It is a startling fact. The causes may be demanded, but the emergency is upon us. Facts are stubborn things—and that is one: it does exist. We can and will, however readily assign the causes which have led to this deficiency.

1. The encroachments that we were compelled to make on the collections of the present, to meet the drafts of the past year.

2. The decrease—the sad falling off—in some of the Conferences in their collections.

3. The very great increase in the amount of appropriations in the Conferences for Domestic Missions the present year.

From a faithful examination and analysis of the subject, we pronounce the above as the cause of the present state of things. Well, what is to be done? Are we to despond and relax our efforts? No: not at all. We are to rouse up, each and all in their places, and do our duty. The call is upon all in the ministry and membership, and among the friends of this Church. The remedy is easy. In nearly every Conference, as held during the last round, resolutions were unanimously adopted to increase greatly the collections the next year. Now, we would respectfully advise, let these operations be commenced in due time, and the results, in dollars and cents, forwarded immediately to our Treasurer and the Assistant Treasurer.

We must not have one dishonored draft—no, not one. There is no necessity for this. We commenced the past year with a liability of thousands, and our drafts were honored; however, it may have been by encroaching on the collections of the past year.

Union in effort, and immediate, universal action, upon the part of all our ministers and friends, will accomplish the object. For this special purpose we now suggest and propose—let there be a Missionary Sabbath set apart for this purpose, and we would name the 2d Sabbath in April (the 13th) as an appropriate season for this effort. Let the whole day be devoted to the Missionary enterprise, by preaching and prayer-meetings for that special purpose.

These collections need not lessen, but greatly increase, the annual collections in the Conferences. Of course the amount so raised will pass to the credit of the Conferences respectively in which they were made.

We would also esrnestly press upon all our ministers their duty to carry out the excellent provisions of the Discipline upon the subject of Missions. These we have published from time to time, and to these provisions we again urge their special attention. It is the proper mode by which all our membership can be reached, as there proposed, by having collectors appointed in every class. Were this done, and the subject, in all its importance, preached upon and urged home upon the membership, instead of $160,000 reported as raised for Missions, we would report $260,000.

Come, brethern and friends, to the rescue!

By order of the Board.

E. W. SEHON, Miss. Sec'y.
W. R. ELLISTON, Treasurer.

HOPELESS CASE. The Freeman's Journal abandons Mexico as a hopeless case, considoning the unfortunate people of that country as having no elements out of which a national life can spring. Truly, in that wretched country Romanism has done its work thoroughly. There it has, from the beginning had the entire sway. The moral, religious and intellectual training of the people has been in the hands of the clergy, who have secured to themselves a large portion of the treasures of that country; and now even their brethren, who pretend that Popery can save the United States, abandon them as hopeless. The Journal thus writes writes their epitaph: "Sicut vulnerati dormientes in sepulchris, quorum non est memor amplius."

LETTER OF JAMES ROBB
ON INTERNAL IMPROVEMENTS.

NEW ORLEANS, Feb. 1, 1856.

To his Excellency Robert C. Wickliffe, Governor of the State of Louisiana:

Sir—As you were pleased to express, in a late interview, your concurrence in the views I submitted concerning our internal improvements, and your partiality extended permission to address you on that important subject, I avail myself of your kindness, but not without diffidence and distrust of my ability to treat it properly; and were I less free from apprehension and anxiety for the future of the public works, commenced in this State, owing to the apathy and indifference with which they are regarded, I would decline the honor of addressing to you this and other letters, which will form a continuation of the subject, under appropriate divisions.

The progress made in the construction of public works in the States east of the Ohio and Mississippi rivers, with the benefits which every day's experience proves will be conferred on Louisiana by their early completion, renders the subject now, more than ever, the one of chief importance to our public policy. If we do not shrink from a vigorous inquiry into the causes of our own inactivity amidst the general progress of the nation, nor from a just contemplation of our own necessities, we have gained half the victory. We need reputation, not only for enterprise, but for prudent foresight, practically displayed, to give us solid claims to the respect, confidence and cooperation of those whose alliance it is our interest to cultivate.

It is much the habit of every day life to endeavor to be satisfied with things as we find them; and propositions to perform anything new and untried are entertained with doubt and regarded with suspicion. The discoveries that have proved most useful to society, when first made known, have not, in general, secured their authors against neglect, poverty, envy and persecution; and as conceptions that possess solid merit are generally distinguished by their simplicity, they seldom enlist eager attention. Whatever can be made so plain as to reach the common understanding lacks the charm of novelty. These reflections are suggested by the task I have undertaken, and I feel that as I cannot invest my subject with novelty, it may fail to interest the public as much as its importance deserves.

In consequence of the failure and abandonment of the Nashville Railroad, commenced in 1830, and indeed of every undertaking in the State which had the misfortune to come into existence at that period of inflation and speculation, the public mind seemed to have settled down, as by common consent, in the belief that we never would possess the capacity or means to undertake and complete any public work of importance; and that this sentiment was not only general, but had actually become inherent towards enterprise, is fully exposed in the constitution of 1845. That instrument divested the Legislature of the power to confer chartered privileges, and yet while carrying out the restrictive intention of its framers, in their hostility to "banking institutions," by a strange inconsistency actually constituted those that survived the disasters of 1842, the most exclusive monopoly of privileges ever known or tolerated among a free people. It was decided that we should have no more banks, but the enjoyment of exclusive privileges was reserved for those then in existence; which policy, if still continued, would have subjected our whole commerce to be controlled by the caprice and interest of three or four powerful combinations.

In April, 1851, our first Railroad Convention was held in this city. Preceding its organization, more was more doubtful of its success than I; and I consented with the greatest reluctance to share in its deliberations. A committee of ways and means was named, composed of our most intelligent citizens; and their report and resolutions enunciated the policy of taxation on real estate for the purpose of building railroads, which was approved with the greatest unanimity by the convention. This unexpected manifestation of an awakened public sentiment inspired the great mass of our citizens with high expectations, and was a bright index of their determination to commence a fresh career of progress, and redeem the State from the apathy which has nearly reduced it to the rank of an inferior member of the confederacy; the barrier of inactivity seemed fairly broken down. At the election in November, 1851, members of the Legislature were selected, in reference to the promotion of those reforms in legislation, which were not only demanded by our circumstances, but sanctioned by unequivocal expressions of the public will.

These reforms contemplated nothing short of an entire change in our organic law—the consolidation of the municipalities—the restoration of public credit by binding and guaranteeing the punctual payment of the interest on our debts—the granting of "special charters," and the contribution of State aid by subscription to the stocks of the companies engaged in the construction of works of public utility. The success of these measures of reform, repeatedly ratified by the public voice, is now a portion of our history. The Legislature of the State of Mississippi, in a spirit of great liberality, at the same time promptly responded by conceding the right of way through her territory, to the New Orleans, Jackson and Great Northern Railroad Company.

The considerations that prevailed in favor of a resort to taxation on real estate, to construct public works, were numerous. The policy had already been in successful practice in other States and cities, and its legality had received the sanction of the highest Courts of Appeal. None could pretend to deny that landed property, whether rural or urban, would perpetually enjoy the benefits resulting from the construction of railroads and canals; and as it constituted the great bulk of our basis of taxation, it was provided that a majority of its proprietors should alone decide upon the subscriptions it would have to bear. The measure was sustained by a vote of more than five to one in its favor, in the city, and was carried by considerable majorities in many of the parishes of the State. Reliance was not placed in mere voluntary aid, as it was well known, from the proverbial hostility of a few large proprietors to all progress and improvement, and the absence of others who resided abroad, without any sympathy with our institutions, that the whole burthen of our undertakings would in that case have to be borne by the industrious and enterprising classes of citizens who were the tenants of those whose property their very enterprise would be most certain to benefit. In addition to other weighty and just arguments in favor of taxation, it came recommended by the suggestions of economy, as being a cash, instead of a credit system; sometimes inconvenient, and, in most cases, fatal to the value of the shares of the stockholders.

Encouraged by every plausible calculation of success, I consented to serve as the first President of the New Orleans, Jackson and Great Northern Railroad Company, and left the State for Havana, in March, 1852, with every confidence that there would be no departure from an available taxation to build the road. During my absence the proposition for a subscription of two millions of dollars from the city was brought before the City Council, which, yielding to the feeble counsels of expediency, unfortunately stipulated in the ordinance that the installments should cover six years—the first not collectable until May, 1853. This was the beginning of misfortune, and up to this day our undertakings, commenced under the most encouraging auspices, have languished under the accumulated evils of a credit system, which, if not overcome by substantial aid, may in the end result in the sacrifice of the shares of the individual stockholders. If the subscription by taxation had been granted as originally proposed, viz: two and a-half millions of dollars—one-half per cent. in 1852 and one per cent. per annum in 1853-'55, and which would have equally received the support of the friends of the road, this sum, with the State and individual subscriptions, would have secured to the Company nearly four millions of dollars in cash, without borrowing a dollar. Other important aids, which so large a basis would have called to the assistance of the road, would have insured its completion to Canton, within the last year.

The manifest advantages of such an achievement would have strengthened and confirmed the confidence of the friends of progress, and destroyed the hopes of its adversaries. The business of two hundred and six miles of road, penetrating a rich and populous district, would have rapidly grown into importance; and on a reasonable calculation, its net revenues would have yielded four hundred thousand dollars annually, which would have proved an unfailing resource to the Company in carrying the extension of its works to the Tennessee river, and maintained the value of its shares on a solid basis, thereby preventing the depreciation which now gives them but a nominal quotation. Besides, the tax-payer would have held an equivalent for his taxes, and ultimately reaped the advantages which all similar undertakings elsewhere have conferred on real property.

The consequences of this unfortunate turn given to the affairs of this Company, and those of the Opelousas Company, by surrendering a position of strength for one of weakness, I will make the subject of my next letter.

And am yours, faithfully,

JAMES ROBB.

EARTHQUAKE IN CUBA.—Shortly after nine o'clock on the night of the 11th a tremendous subterranean explosion occurred at Sn. Iago de Cuba, which was followed immediately by a slight oscillation of the earth. El Redactor states that the explosion and shock were so violent as to fill the inhabitants with alarm.

Later from Texas.

By the steamship Mexico, Capt. Lawless, which arrived Tuesday morning, we have dates from Galveston to Saturday last and our files from Interior Texas.

The Brazoria Democrat states that Mr. W. C. C. Lynch, who, with his wife, was blown out to sea in an open boat a few days since, was picked up about seventy miles off the coast. This is certainly a most miraculous escape.

The San Antonio Texan states that a company is organizing to leave about the 1st of April, for the silver mines above El Paso. These mines are said to be rich, and those now working them are handsomely paid for their labor. Mr. Wood has visited the region around the Guadalupe mountains, and is fully satisfied that gold abounds in that country. Specimens of gold bearing quartz have been brought from these mountains. The editor of the Texan has one that was found about one hundred miles north of San Antonio.

We learn from the San Antonio Reporter that a party of United States soldiers beat one of the Merchants of the city of San Antonio, on the evening of Sunday, the 17th inst., in a most unmerciful manner, and had not several persons interfered in his behalf he would suffered even more severely. Two of the soldiers were arrested.

After dark about fifteen soldiers came into the town, armed with revolvers, went to a fandango and commenced a disturbance. The Marshal and a posse of citizens attempted to arrest them, and several shots were fired, but it is not stated that any one was injured. Five soldiers were lodged in prison (the rest escaping) and fined next day and fined, except one who attempted to take the life of officer Felstrup. He was committed to jail to await the sitting of the District Court.

The Indians visited the Colorado, on the 15th, and carried off ten American horses belonging to Messrs. J. R. Brown, Davenport, Harrison and others. On Thursday night they returned and took what were left, amounting to one hundred head. They also killed several animals by shooting them with arrows, and these arrows indicated that the Indians were Lipans.

The Liberty Gazette of the 25th ult., has the following paragraph:

The Trinity river is again up and still rising. It commenced rising last Friday morning, and is now within two feet of low water mark. The winds for the last four days have been principally from south and southeast, and we have no doubt but that the upper counties, bordering on this stream, have been visited with copious rains. The mail rider, who left Swartwout Friday last, informed the postmaster here that the river was rising at that place. During the entire day of yesterday the rain descended in drenching style. The weather is now clouded, with every appearance of more rain. From all appearances we think boatmen may look for a "big river," and the merchants in Galveston and New Orleans a brisk season.

The New Braunfels Zeitung of the 22d ult., states the vicinity of that place is still infested by Indians, and relates the following occurrence:

Frederick Foster, son of Edward Foster, while riding out about one mile from his father's farm, hunting his oxen on the 18th inst., was attacked by six Indians, who fired several arrows at him; they approached to within about fifty yards of young Foster, dismounted and placed themselves behind their horses as a defense, seeing Foster armed with a rifle; Foster fired and killed one of the party and a horse at the same shot—which, so completely confused the other Indians as to afford him an opportunity to get off—by throwing away his rifle and putting spurs to his pony, he reached home in a few minutes, gave the alarm, and with his father and brother-in-law, returned to where he had left the Indians; they found the Indians had gone, taking with them their deceased companion and young Foster's rifle, leaving him an only trophy, the dead horse, which they found to be a large American horse. They were all mounted on fine American horses, undoubtedly stolen from persons in the neighborhood, as many have missed horses lately.

A considerable party had gone in pursuit of the Indians.

The Indianola Bulletin, of Saturday last, says:

The schooner Martha, Golder, master, freighted with lumber, from St. Andrews Bay, Fla., and consigned to Messrs. Runge & Co., of this place, has been lost.

It is supposed that the master and crew have all perished.

THE INDIAN WAR IN WASHINGTON TERRITORY.—Through a private source the Mobile Tribune has obtained important information from Washington Territory not furnished by the latest California and Oregon papers. We copy the following:

Acting Governor Mason, of Washington Territory, together with Capt. Sterritt, of the U. S. Sloop-of-war Decatur, arrived at San Francisco on the morning of the 5th of February, in the steamer Republic from Puget Sound. As the Golden Age for Panama left at 4, P. M. of the same day, the information received was not published in the San Francisco journals. Gov. Mason states that the Republic left Olympia on the 25th of January, and that of the 24th an engagement took place between the Indians and the inhabitants of the town of Seattle, which lasted from 8 o'clock, A. M., till half-past 4 o'clock, P. M., during which time the Decatur was engaged in firing grape and canister shot and shells—that the women and children were placed on board the ship for safety and the men of the town (some 250 strong) had retired to the block fort and were actively engaged with small arms throughout the day, and yet with all the opposing force, the Indians were victorious and sacked the town. The number of killed and wounded had not been ascertained at the time of the sailing of the Republic.

The Legislature of the Territory had authorized Gov. Mason to proceed to Washington to represent to the general government the state of affairs and the total inefficiency of the arrangement of Gen. Wool. Commodore Mervine, of the U. S. ship Independence, comes in for a large share of censure for his dilatory action in the premises. Gov. Mason states that the Territory from Fort Vancouver to Olympia through the whole course of the Cowlitz river, is actually depopulated, and although every claim had been taken and improved, yet at present there are no inhabitants remaining with the exception of Judge Ford at the Chehalis crossing, and he has determined to remain and defend his property.

MURDEROUS AFFRAY IN TEXAS.—A letter from Buena Vista, Shelby county, Texas, gives the following account of an affair which occurred in that place on the 19th:

Four men named William Thurman, M. Wheeler, John Yarborough and Bob McCoy, attacked a man by the name of Stephen S. Runnels while he was in the house of a friend. Thurman fired the first shot at Runnels, when the latter returned the fire, neither party being wounded. Yarborough then shot Runnels from behind, wounding him mortally. Runnels, however, shot Yarborough in the thigh, and also discharged a ball at Wheeler which broke his arm. Thurman, in the meantime, beating Runnels over the head with his pistol. Runnels next fired upon Thurman and struck him just above the hip. Runnels lived about three hours after the bloody affray, and it was reported that Thurman was also dead. None of the party had been arrested.

AN EDITOR MURDERED IN MISSISSIPPI.—On Tuesday, the 19th ult., Chas. S. Lounsbury, editor and proprietor of the Koschisko Chronicle, was shot and killed in that place. The following are the circumstances of the murder:

Lounsbury was shot while ascending the steps to the tavern to get his supper, and without any previous warning whatever, by one Richard W. Payne, seventy-three small shot taking effect in his right side, ranging from the hip to the shoulder. He lived only about thirty minutes. This was as cold-blooded, premeditated a murder as I ever knew. Payne is still at large. He is about 5 feet 5 or 6 inches high, 23 years of age, square built, weighs 130 to 135 pounds, his hair is of a dark yellow color, his eyes of a greyish blue, his front teeth rather wide and slightly separated, his hands and feet small, his complexion a sallow white. He is quick-spoken in conversation, but not loud; laughs very loud; is very genteel in his dress and manners; stands very erect; has a very short, quick step and swinging gait; has a noted scar just below his left temple, about an inch and a-quarter long, ranging from his left eyebrow to his ear.

A difficulty occurred between deceased and his murderer about 18 months ago, which it is supposed was the cause of this affair.

Lukeman, first mate of the ship Ariel, has been tried in Charleston for the murder of Capt. Ayres at sea, and acquitted.

Items of Foreign News.

It is stated that England and France will immediately send two commissioners to Rio Janeiro to concert measures with Brazil, "for the prevention, in future, of occurrences such as have recently unfortunately rendered some of the finest portions of the East Coast of South America a prey to revolutionary license." (!)

Clarendon also threatens to apply force to Monte Video, to make her settle up some British claims.

A telegraphic slip, forwarded per Atlantic, after our parcels by that steamer were closed, mentioned, on the authority of the London Morning Advertiser, that Sir Henry Bulwer had intimated the expectation it would afford him to act as a sort of official mediator between the British Government and the American Ambassador in London. It was further stated that he was to come from Brighton that day, Wednesday, with the view of seeing what could be done to wards bringing about a more friendly feeling between the two governments. Since then the same paper asserts that Sir Henry Bulwer, in concert with a member of Parliament of great diplomatic experience, is endeavoring to arrive at a solution which may be more acceptable to both countries than the plan of arbitration. This interference in a non-official capacity, takes place at the instigation of Lord Palmerston. An interview was to take place at the embassy, when Sir Henry Bulwer would explain at length to Mr. Buchanan the compromise which he is prepared to recommend.

Clarendon Insults the Hamburgers.—As a commentary on Clarendon's insolence to Mr. Buchanan a letter from Hamburg, in Le Nord, gives an account of the mission of Dr. Rucker, who was sent to London by three Hanse cities to assure the British Government of the falsehood of the allegations that war material was being exported thence to Russia. Lord Clarendon received the envoy "in a manner so little diplomatic that a parallel is vainly sought in history," whilst Lord Palmerston cried out in the midst of the explanations, "Why! you Hamburgers are nothing but a set of smugglers!" All this, together with sundry threats made by the two lords, have grievously wounded the feelings of the citizens of Hamburg.

New Order of Valor, etc.—The decree has appeared establishing the new order of merit. The order is to be styled the "Victoria Cross," and is to be given only to members of the army or navy who distinguish themselves by individual acts of bravery in the face of an enemy. A plain Maltese cross, of bronze, with the motto, "For Valor," is the decoration of the order, and both the bestowed indiscriminately on officers and private men. Besides the decoration, a pension of £10 per annum is attached to the order, with £5 for each additional clasp. The decoration is to be worn suspended on the left breast, by a red ribbon for the army and blue for the navy.

Messrs. Scott, Russell & Co., the most extensive iron ship builders in England, have failed. Their assets are stated at £250,000. They were the builders of the monster iron ship, not yet launched, of twenty thousand tons. Their failure will not, however, it is said, interfere with the completion of this ship.

The Sound Dues.—Another conference has been held at Copenhagen on the question of the Sound Dues, at which the representatives of Prussia, France, Sweden and six other delegates from the Germanic States were present. On this occasion the Danish plenipotentiary laid upon the table several documents respecting the previous meeting by the members of the conference relative to the receipts during the last ten years. He also made a new proposition to the meeting, which was sanctioned by his government, viz: that they would take the sum of 36,000,000 thalers as compensation for their interest in the Sound Dues.

Imprisonment of the Consul at Cologne.

We derive the following from English papers received by the Asia:

HOUSE OF COMMONS, Feb. 7.—In answer to Mr. H. Baillie, Lord Palmerston stated, in reference to the arrest of Mr. Curtis, the British Consul at Cologne, on a charge of employing agents for the enlistment of troops, that there had been a great deal of correspondence with the Prussian government on the subject. The King of Prussia, as a matter of courtesy towards her Majesty's government, had pardoned the Consul; and as the transaction had ended satisfactorily to both governments, he did not think it would be expedient to publish the correspondence. No communications had been made by the authorities of the Hanse Towns with reference to the subject of enlistment. The government of Hamburg had certainly made some representations, under the impression that enlistment had been going on, but they were founded on misapprehension.

[From the Liverpool Post, Feb. 8.]

Last night Lord Lyedhurst tested the strength of Ministers in the House of Lords, on the question of a peerage for life. The learned lord proposed to refer the matter to a committee; but Ministers, knowing what the result would be in that case, opposed the motion, and took the sense of the House. The division was against the government, the numbers being 138 to 105.

The peace news had reached the Camp in the Crimea on the 23d ult., and the Times correspondent, writing on that day, says: "That peace is as good as concluded is the talk of the whole camp. There may be a few carpet warriors to whom the intelligence is welcome; but we is the soldier's harvest; a bloody war and a sickly season is an old, although hardly a philanthropic toast, among hangerers after promotion; and although many now here would doubtless have been glad to escape, whether on the plea of ill health or the pretext of "urgent private affairs," from the wearisome routine of an cxceedless winter, few contemplate with satisfaction the prospect of a cessation of hostilities. There has been much malediction and strong language going on this morning among all ranks, from generals high in command to junior ensigns."

This army will come home a very different body from what it was when it went out. "The character of the army," said the Times correspondent, "will, to a certain extent, be altered by the promotion of non-commissioned officers, by which its aristocracy may suffer, but I doubt whether its efficiency will be impaired. Great care, of course, should be, and I presume is taken to promote none but steady, trustworthy, and especially sober men. The sad mortality of the last eighteen months has filled the army with boy subalterns and captains, the greater part of them without military education, and with nothing extraordinary to recommend them beyond gentle breeding and the spirit and courage innate in most Englishmen. An admixture of experienced and practical soldiers raised from the ranks is certainly not unadvisable, and indeed, is hardly avoidable, consistently with the safety and efficiency of our army, however much it may be calculated to impair the polish and refinement of a mess table, and to shock the feelings of

NEW ORLEANS:

SATURDAY, MARCH 8, 1856.

THE GENERAL MINUTES.—This important Annual will be published as soon as the Minutes of the Mississippi and Florida Conferences, and fuller returns from the Kentucky Conference, are received.

SICKNESS OF A MINISTER'S WIFE.—We condole with our brother Rev. T. M. Penick, on the sickness of his excellent wife, in [illegible]. Though so lately [illegible] Conference, many sympathies are enlisted in his affliction.

[illegible] THURSDAY.—Our citizens [illegible] a course of Odd [illegible] by some five or six living lecturers. [illegible] delivered on Thursday [illegible] for the gratification [illegible] the enlargement of true genius [illegible] which a people honor themselves.

[illegible] SERMONS.—This excellent volume, [illegible] of our Publishing House, is [illegible] 50 Cherry street, at Nashville prices. Those who have not secured a copy, should get [illegible] at once. More than any eminent [illegible] within our knowledge, Dr. Winans's [illegible] this matter. This is the basis of his reputation. Summerfield's discourses, Whitefield's and Bascom's, illy survived the [illegible] voice and manner of the orator. But where merit lies in thought, at once perspicuous and profound, and reputation has been acquired rather in disregard and in spite of [illegible], the book does not become a [illegible]. It may be transferred to a permanent [illegible] form with little if any [illegible]. Indeed, we think it advantageous [illegible]. Reasoning then, a priori, on the [illegible] of Winans's Discourses, we expected [illegible] a strong and good book—and [illegible] not been disappointed. It is hearty, [illegible] original. The large print, clear [illegible] ample margin are merciful to aged [illegible] agreeable to all.

Election of a Chaplain in Congress.

Two [illegible] hours were spent and much speech, [illegible] House of Representatives, February 11th, on this matter. Some members [illegible] regarding the ministers of Washington City to officiate alternately and without [illegible]. Mr. Smith said this was [illegible] way, and it had been the way in Washington while they were trying to [illegible], and it worked well so far. To which another Virginian, Mr. Millson, replied, "This usage of electing a Chaplain was unwise with our Government; it was even unwise to the constitution. It had been adopted by every successive Congress, and he would not take the responsibility of being the first to depart from it."

The first ballot stood thus: Rev. Daniel Waldo, 23; Rev. Wm. G. Baldwin, 16; Rev. David S. Doggett, 15; Rev. Wm. Patten, 11; Rev. Thomas Fisher, 10; Rev. Byron Sunderland, 8; Rev. Thos. H. Stockton, 8; Rev. R. D. Morris, 7; Rev. J. G. Butler, 7; Rev. Wm. Hodges, 6; Rev. Wm. Mosely, 6; Rev. A. G. Gardiner, 5; Rev. Antoinette Brown, 3; Scattering, 7. Whole number of votes, 130; necessary to a choice, 66.

On the second ballot, Rev. Mr. Waldo, a Revolutionary veteran, ninety years old, received 70 votes, and was elected.

Our legislative bodies, both State and Federal, seem to experience unwonted friction at every point.

Rev. J. M. Wells.

We had heard rumors, but received no certain tidings of the death of this lamented brother. He took his appointment with usual cheerfulness at the last Alabama Conference. A member of the Conference thus writes:

"[illegible] seems to have learned the [illegible] Rev. J. M. Wells, which occurred [illegible] about the last of January. [illegible] reported before now to see an [illegible] Bro. Hutchinson, or some other [illegible]. Bro. Wells was a marked [illegible] of religious devotion and usefulness.

"Preaching was his business, and in that [illegible] where he happily succeeded. In [illegible] faithful itinerancy he had seen [illegible] of more than 3,000 souls, according [illegible] calculation. He seemed [illegible] at home as when on his [illegible] and well might Satan [illegible] him there. He was [illegible] to leave an altar or place of prayer [illegible] anytime remained to be comforted [illegible]. And many times have his [illegible] powers of song been the [illegible] on the numerous camp grounds [illegible]. One noble young man [illegible] preacher, who was converted [illegible] before daylight at a camp meeting, [illegible], I believe, the only witness [illegible] his solitary shouts [illegible] ring, but now a multitude of [illegible] host join him in praising [illegible]. He used to sing, (in a measure [illegible] no one will forget that ever [illegible],) 'I want to go to heaven, hallelujah;' now he sings, I easily believe, 'And I've got to heaven, hallelujah!' May [illegible] of all consolation be with his afflicted [illegible]."

Have You Sold Your Cotton?

At the late session in Bastrop, La., where the largest missionary anniversary collection ever made within the Louisiana Conference was "lifted," seven bales of cotton were donated.

On Wednesday, Messrs. Rawlins & Duncan, commission merchants, reported sales of four bales, and turned over the money to the treasurer: 1 bale, marked H., 338 pounds, 9 cents per pound; 1 bale, marked R., 426 pounds, 9 cents; 2 bales, "Brigham," 822 pounds, 8¼ cents. Charges on the whole for freight, &c., $10 88. Messrs. Rawlins & Duncan charged no commission. It was generous in them. These bales were estimated when given at $30 each, but turn out more. That is the way to give. A few more bales left, and we shall feel a lively interest in open rivers and the cotton market, until returns are made.

There is something becoming in giving the fruits of the soil. Last year we got a hogshead of sugar from the Attakapas, and shall regret always not having called for molasses, as we were assured afterwards over 100 barrels were ready to be rolled in.

Friends, have you sold your cotton—your sugar? How much goes to missions? Read the appealing statement by the Treasurer and Secretary. What can we all do? What can you do? It is now needed. Something must be done. These seven bales and one hogshead—what are they among so many? We trust they may be increased a thousand fold. Read the startling statement.

Confessions of a Converted Infidel.

Not now—yet we had not seen a copy until last week, when one reached us from the author, an esteemed member of the Virginia Conference. The "Confession" leaves the impression of having been in a good love-feast. It is omiantly characterized by the spirit of love and a sonad miad. The same is true of several pieces befors published and here gathered in form. One on "Itching ears" we gave our readers a year ago. Apropos, we clip the followiag from the South-side Democrat, of Petersburg, Va.:

CONFESSIONS OF A CONVERTED INFIDEL—(By Rev. J. Bayley.)—A remarkable instance of the triumph of truth over prejudice lately occurred in a neighboring city, in relation to the ahove work, which was favorably aoticed some months ago. A friend to the author offered one for sale to a gentleman, who from dislike to the writer of the book, turned away in disdain, and would not even look at it. Shortly afterwards, this gentleman had an attack of illness and was confined to his room several days at the house of a friend who owned a copy of the work. As soon as he was well enough to read, he took up the book, and without examining the title pags, read it entirely through, and was very much pleased with it. "'Tis the best book," said he, "that I ever read in my life—and ought to be sold by thousands." But when he learned the author's name, he exclaimed, "I'm caught, but I won't take back what I have said. It is an excellent book."

AN IMPOSTOR—SOMEWHERE.

The religious public are hereby cautioned against one JOHN W. LAWLER, who carries with him a license as a Methodist preacher, purporting to have been written and properly signed somewhere in Texas, and renewed in the latter part of 1855 in Butler Circuit, Alabama Conference.

The said LAWLER is a base impostor, having escaped from jail in Goliad, Texas, where he was imprisoned for theft, of which he confessed himself guilty, and having been employed as an actor in the Mobile Theatre during the latter part of December last. He is now gone to parts unknown. The following is an exact description of the man:

Medium size, about 5 feet 10 inches high, weighs about 150 pounds, stoops in walking, hair of a sandy or light color, has but little beard, and that is nearly all on the chin, and of a reddish cast; eyes blue, or light grey he is badly marked with the small pox.

The Church papers are requested to publish this notice.

GREENBURY GARRETT,
P. E. Mobile Dist., Ala. Con.

A BISHOP FOR THE NORTH POLE.—Father Dijunkovsky, a Russian pervert, recently left Rome decorated with the title of Apostolic Prefect of the North Pole Missions, with a salary per annum of 20,000 francs. This enthusiastic missionary took with him a cargo of prints of the Virgin and the saints, and publications of the Propaganda for the conversion of the inhabitants of Laplaad, Greenland, and other arctic regions.

REV. WM. BUTLER.—This gentleman has been appointed superintendent of the mission undertaken by the M. E. Church, North, in India. He will leave America early in April, and go to India, via England. Mr. B. is by birth an Englishman, and thought very suitable for this responsible appointment.

NEW ORLEANS MEDICAL AND SURGICAL JOURNAL.—The March number of this very valuable and very interesting semi-monthly medical journal, edited by Dr. Bennett Dowler, of this city, and published by H. McCulloch, at No. 76 Camp street, has been received by us. It contains about one hundred and fifty pages of original and selected matter, treating of diseases, cures and discoveries; of the advancement of medical science, and is accompanied by a supplement, giving a tabular view of the signs furnished by auscultation and percussion, and of their application to the diagnosis of diseases of the heart and great vessels; besides much miscellaneous medical matter of importance to members of the profession.

TOBACCONISING.

NUMBER FOUR.

7. THE EFFECT OF TOBACCONIZING ON A MINISTER'S OWN CHARACTER AND HABITS.—What is it that makes up a man's character? It is the several things which he does. Each thing which a man does is a brick or a nail in the edifice. Incidental things are small bricks, but habitual things are large timbers. A man is what he is, because of the things he did yesterday and other past days of his life. There is precisely as much difference between a chewer and smoker and a non-chewer and smoker, as there is between chewing and smoking and the absence of it. A man's character, then, is to a considerable extent made of Tobacco—that is, some men's characters.

It is well known, too, that there is in society a variety of classes of conduct, the exhibition of which serves to the observer as a thermometer to measure the character of the person. In this way we inadvertently measure men as we meet them on the street and in promiscuous society. In this measurement we are almost never mistaken, even at the first glance. No man can mistake a dandy for a gentleman, at first sight. The cut of the jib indicates the character, on the land as well as on water. These considerations are both inherent and instinctive with all men.

Now, the man who wears a "long nine," or any of its concomitants or appendages, throws himself into that channel, and the irrefragable laws of association are such that it is impossible for him not to imbibe the character and take on the spirit of his fellows.

"Birds of a feather flock together," not so much because their inclinations lead them together, but because their flocking together, their wearing the same livery, causes them to take on the same feather.

A minister is, therefore, by a law of nature, partially moulded into the character of a b'hoy, because he apes him. It matters not whether he intends to do so or not; if he does so, the law will work its way.

And so, on the other hand, a grave and thoughtful air, a dignified and genteel mien, an elevating of oneself above all kinds of vulgarisms, a peremptory divorcement from all kinds of streeteries and loaferies, however genteel they profess to be—a being a gentleman anyhow, tends greatly to make a minister of a man who wishes to be one.

These things are well known to every man, woman and child. And the reputation, as well as the character of ministers, is gradnated accordingly!

The laws of association are as imperative and certain in their operation as the laws of gravitation.

If we see a minister—the gravest and soberest minister in the land—a little too much at home with a certain class of the most genteel, so-so, jolly sort of "good fellows," he is hail-fellow-well-met with them, he instinctively imbibes their lingo, and—"No, sir, 'bliged to you, don't drink—but these cigars are very fine." If he don't shrink off and reform, he is certain to become a tippler, or a loafer, or both.

A minister must be a minister, or he will soon find himself something else.

8. THE EFFECT OF TOBACCONISING ON THE PHYSICAL CONSTITUTION.—No man, from Hayti to Kamskatka, without first putting his brains in his pocket, ever pretended to say or to intimate that there was anything good or in any way beneficial in tobacco. Either in or out of Yucatan, from Spanish-dom to New Zealand, it never claimed to have a quarter of a grain of moral, religious, social or intellectual good. Its properties, whatever they may be, are all on the other side of the page.

"Doctor," said I once, to a medical friend, "you will die from the use of tobacco, and your wife will be a widow."

"What?—what?"

"I mean precisely what I say, Doctor. It is my candid and sober belief you will die from the use of tobacco, and your wife will be a widow. With you, it is disuse or the coffin."

And after a few more words a conversation ensued in regard to the physical effects of tobacco on men of spare make and slender frame. We soon found that his practice and my theory perfectly harmonized. A year afterward I met the same gentleman, considerably improved in health:

"Do you remember," he said, "what you said to me a year ago, at my house, about the use of tobacco?"

"Perfectly well!"

"It was a home thrust. You did not know at the time the effect it had on me. I knew all that as well as you did. I could not but know it. Strange that I did not think about it. I know at the time that I should have told a patient, in a similar condition, the same thing. I should have died by this time, but now see how I am improved."

That many persons die from the use of tobacco, is certain. Persons of spare make, especially, are in great danger. It is held by the best medical opinions that the use of tobacco is always injurious to the health, and that it superinduces death oftentimes. The juices of the stomach, which ought to be taken up by absorbants, is spit out of the mouth. Each salivary discharge contains a portion of animal matter, so that after a while a man spits himself out of his mouth!

Tobacco, either by chewing or smoking, tends to destroy the coats of the stomach, and thus superinduces dyspepsia and indigestion, and prevents medicine, in case of any disease, from having its proper effect.

Tobacco supports a very large portion of the physicians of this country. As a general thing, therefore, they do not speak so readily or so loudly against its use as they otherwise would. But whenever they do speak, it is decidedly against it.

LETTER FROM BISHOP KAVANAUGH.

PANAMA, N. G., Feb. 12, 1856.

Dear Brother—I suggested, in my first letter, an intention of giving you some account of the impressions made on my mind by the ocean, but for the present I beg leave to waive that design, and to substitute an account of what came under my notice in the city and environs of HAVANA.

As one unaccustomed to sea voyages, I could not but be struck with the fact that, after passing an area of five hundred miles of ocean surface, without any visible land to guide us, on the appearance of land in the distance we found the bow of our ship directed almost exactly to the city. The first appearance of the island of Cuba, with its mountain ranges and valleys, was beautiful and refreshing. Through a narrow inlet, we soon entered the harbor. This is a beautiful basin of water, in which we found numerous ships, of various dimensions and nations, quietly anchored. Here we spent the afternoon and night, expecting another vessel in to receive us; but this failing to arrive, on the next morning we were sent ashore to the custom-house. Here, after waiting for some two hours without our breakfast, the custom-house officer came and examined our baggage and granted us a permit to enter the city. On entering the streets, an object new and amusing struck our attention—their—

METHOD OF HAULING.

There stood the little dwarfs of mules, in the shafts of the little, awkward carts on which the principle hauling of the city is done. To an American these are a curiosity. The hubbs of the wheels are large and straight, the spokes short; wheels small, and running in a wabbling manner, on an iron axle. The body of the cart is entirely flat. No pins or sideboards to confine the load; but everything hauled is fastened on by ropes. The roping, from long and steady experience, they perform admirably well, and with dispatch. The body juts entirely over the wheels, as do the bodies of our plainest burthen cars, and the wheels are about the size of those of our railroad cars. On these our trunks were hanled to the tavern. And here I saw a wagon. The frame work and flooring of it considerably resembled that of the cart, with the exception of the fact that the wagon body had pins resembling those used on the American dray. On the inside of these a course grass matting was set up, and, I suppose, by some method attached to the pins, which made the sides of the body of the wagon. This grass matting I found was sometimes substituted by what I suppose to be a better material, raw cowhides. These wagons are generally, if not universally, hauled by oxen. The yokes are firmly fastened on the necks of the oxen, and immediately against the horns, and from horn to horn on the forehead of the ox, passes a leathern pad, somewhat resembling one side of a horse-collar, and a rope from the yoke passes around the horns of the ox, and over this padding, and with these fixtures they do their pulling. While the oxen are thus performing their labor, their heads seem very much jerked and jarred, and the poor things have the appearance of being very considerate of the task they are performing. The manner of guiding these animals, I should think, is more effective but less generous than with us. While we attach the line to the horns, they make a hole through the division of the nostrils, in which they insert the lines, and from which the lines pass between the horns on to the driver, who is seated behind them. Hauling, however, in this country, seems to be the exception, and is the rule. Droves of horses and mules are ever and anon entering the city, laden with heavy packages of the products of this very remarkable and fertile island. These beasts of burden seemed well trained to the heavy tasks assigned them, traveling in long strings, one immediately after the other. The horses are generally of the mustang breed, as I suppose, for they are almost universally small, are rather keenly made, and are capable of very great endurance. Among other of the packings which we witnessed, was that of green corn stalks—the stalks varying from three to five feet in length. These are so placed upon the horse as literally to cover him, with the exception of his head and the lower part of his limbs. These stalks are generally just in the silk and tassel state, (January 23d,) and are brought in to be used as green fodder. I do not know that fodder is ever used here except in its green state, for mid-winter is the vegetable season, in this country; the summer being too hot to grow anything well except sugar and coffee. The little horse that packs in this fodder is always, more necessarily than generously, muzzled with a network of twine, so that he cannot partake of the food he bears to others.

One of the most amusing objects that struck my attention in this city was their their—

METHOD OF RIDING.

Horseback riding obtains here to some extent, but the most usual method is the use of what they style the "volante." This is a vehicle that more resembles the gig once in use in the States, and which has now given place to the buggy, than any vehicle we have had; but in several particulars it is unlike the gig. It has no springs except those of the shafts and the roll which the body has on the leathers which sustain it. The body is nearly exactly as our buggy bodies, with the exception that, instead of an apron, a similar article extends from the top of the dash to the front of the buggy top, entirely protecting those within from the sun. This may be extended down the sides so as to entirely enclose those within. The reader may now be inquiring how the driver manages the reins from within this enclosure. On that subject there need be no perplexity, for reins are never used. The little pony at the front end of the shafts, which are from fourteen to fifteen feet in length from the axletree, to which they are attached in the rear, is mounted usually by a full-grown African; full load enough, you would say, without any further burthen. The rider's roundabout is generally adorned by some extra ornaments. He has what the English would call jackboots. This is a leg adornment resembling considerably the leg of a military boot, with large open tops, rising above the knee and extending down to the foot, but having no foot attached, nor is it attached to the shoe of the rider, for the shin of the foot is usually visible between the one and the other, and the boot leg, if it may be so called, is either neatly blacked, or wears the more glossy appearance of patent leather. These are ornamented with silver resembling broad silver buckles, and to the heels of the rider are attached broad and heavy silver spurs. The rider is not always upon the horse in the shafts. The extra touch in this department is, that the rider has an additional horse, and leads the pony in the shafts, while from one to three persons are in the volante. This mode of traveling is decidedly pleasant, and very convenient to the people, and with the exception of a very few American carriages, these are the only resources of the public. The harness on the ponies is generally highly adorned with silver buckles, slides, and rich brow-band ornaments; and in those instruments where a second horse is used, he is attached by traces to a singletree, which is placed under the shaft nearest to him; but his traces are so long that he seldom stretches them.

This method of riding is so private and convenient, the driver not being in the volante, that ladies make a very free use of it, riding alone in day or night, or in companies of two or three. At night, however, they are generally in companies, and but very seldom with male attendants.

THE APPEARANCE OF THE CITY.

This, in some respects, is rather imposing. The houses are generally spacious, and have rather a heavy, massive appearance, and are covered uniformly with tiles. This is an ancient method of covering, but so out of use in the united States, as in many places to need explanation. To those of such points, I would say, a tile has the appearance of one-half of an earthen crock, without the bottom. In making the roof the house is first covered with plank, such as the Americans call sheeting, only in this country the sheeting is laid closer together, and the tiles are laid upon them. In placing the tiles on, you have only to imagine two rows of the tiles laid together, with the edges upward, and then a row of tiles laid on these edges, with their edges downward, and you have the idea of the process in covering these houses. The walls of the houses of Havana are thick, and generally plastered without and within. Indeed, the walls appear to be built mainly of cement, with an irregular inlay of stone and brickbats. And this mode of building makes an excellent wall in this warm country, where there is no freezing to injure the walls.

The streets are narrow, with some exceptions; so much so, that two carriages can but just pass each other. The side walks are usually about two feet wide, and these are of stone, of a uniform thickness of at least six inches, and appears to rise about that height above the pavement of the street. The streets are paved with flat stones of six or eight inches square, and of regular uniformity. The pavement is good, and the streets are generally clean. So that the appearance of the city, except its crowded state, is neat and agreeable. The city, at least the older part of it, is walled in with a heavy, strong wall. The crowded state of the city is occasionally most happily relieved by a vacant square, most beautifully ornamented by trees of tropical growth, and of exceeding beauty, and some of them of the most beautiful and dense foliage that I ever saw. But the largest square of the city is appropriated to military parades, and is without shade. The buildings surrounding this square are generally large and good. On one side of it is the palace-like building of Mr. Aldama, a magnificent edifice. Not far from the wharf is the palace of the Captain General. It is an immense building, with a beautifully ornamented square in front of it, called the Plaza de Armas, a place of great resort, particularly after the lighting of the gas lamps, at night, and of military music twice a week.

THE ROADS.

The roads, generally, in the immediate vicinity of Havana, are finely macadamized, and some of them richly adorned with well chosen trees, indigenous to the soil. On a road that leads out to the residence of the Second Captain General, as I am told he is styled, perhaps about a mile and a half from the city, we have the best specimen of suburban improvement. The road is very wide, and most beautifully and smoothly macadamized. On each side of the road are two most tasteful rows of trees shading the footway, which is also smoothly turnpiked. At brief distances we meet with water-fountains, surrounded with beautiful statues, the whole length of the road. This road terminates, or at least the improvements, at the foot of a considerable hill, which is surmounted by one of the most formidable fortifications about the place. At the foot of the hill, and to the right of the road, is the residence of the Second Captain General. The walks, trees, fruits and flowers of his garden exceeds anything of the kind I have ever seen. In rambling through it, I felt a deep solicitude for an interpreter of the rich and beautiful creation about me. This was the third treat a small company of us enjoyed, for we had been to the Bishop's gardens, and to the residence of Count de Fernandina, of palace-like appearance. This place, in some of my private correspondence, I have represented as the palace of Santa Anna. There are contradictory statements in regard to it. I suppose the present representation to be correct. These places are of surpassing grandeur. Our first visit was to the Bishop's garden. This garden is very extensive, but abounding more in trees, fruits flowers and shrubbery than in the culture of vegetables. We saw some corn growing, a portion of which seemed to be but a few days out of the ground. The most enchanting and absorbing objects in this and the several gardens we saw, were the trees and fruits of tropical growth. The most engaging and remarkable of these was the palm tree. I had read of these, heard them described, and seen pictures illustrating the tree, but after all, on seeing it, I found I didn't possess a proper conception of it. The body of the tree, which is entirely limbless, has the appearance of a tasteful and well-turned pillar, lofty, and yet large enough to be well proportioned. At the point where the pillar seems to terminate, shoots up a perfectly smooth and entirely green stem, of some eight or ten inches in diameter, and from this stem shoots out its flower and various fruits, its long stems and beautiful foliage. And what is most remarkable, the body of the tree, which appears to have received the graceful shape and pillar-like structure from the turning lathe, appears to bear very visibly on the bark the mark of what I think the turners call the groove, a chisel of semi-circular form—not a deep, but a shallow impression of this kind. These, when planted in extended rows, as in several instances we saw them, have the most stately and imposing appearance I ever beheld.

Through this garden of the Bishop, runs a fine stream of fresh water, which seems to have been brought there by a handsomely adorned channel, dug for the purpose. The walk on the banks of this water passage is covered and plastered smooth with cement, which seems very little effected by the weather, as it never freezes here. The passage of the water, too, is on a very elevated ground, so that the lower portions of the garden may be irrigated from this stream; and thus it both beautifies and refreshes it.

I had intended to say something about the fortifications of this city, which are numerous and strong; the strong standing army; military parades, churches, nunneries, and the burial place of Columbus, in the church, his dust over it, &c., but time fails me, having already imposed too much upon your columns and the patience of the reader.

We leave here on the 14th inst., on the steamer John L. Stevens. I have endeavored during our stay in Aspinwall and at Panama, to make myself acquainted with the religious and political condition of this and the surrounding republics. I have had conversations with the seamen's chaplains of the above mentioned places, and from them and other Americaa gentlemen received some important and encouraging items, of which more hereafter.

As ever, yours, H. H. KAVANAUGH.

VICTORIA LILY.—The following letter from N. Longworth, Esq., of Cincinnati, was received by us a day or two since. Upon reflection we have concluded that its publication would do more to accomplish the object the distinguished writer has in view than anything we could say. Hence its publication. If we can be of any assistance, it shall be cheerfully rendered:

CINCINNATI, February 17, 1856.

Editors of Daily Crescent: I am anxious (if I cannot see them) to know that your ponds are covered with the Victoria Lily. Of warm nights the leaves will form pleasant and dry beds for your children. The warmer the climate, the better. If you can ascertain, and send me the names of eight or ten persons who have suitable ponds and are desirous of giving them a trial, I will send to your care, or any other person you may name, by a steamboat, young plants in pots. They will blossom this season, and bear leaves, if the weather is warm, that will measure from eighteen to twenty feet in circumference, and the edge of the leaf, turned up, will keep a child dry, sleeping on it, weighing fifty or sixty pounds.

Yours, truly, N. LONGWORTH.

The water may be from two to four feet deep. In my pond in the hot-house, hundreds of seedling come up yearly from the seed that falls in the water. The plant is perennial.

WOMAN'S RIGHTS IN NEBRASKA.—The lower branch of the Legislature of Nebraska, says an exchange, has passed an act extending the right of suffrage to women. It passed by four majority, but we do not find that it was acted on by the other branch.

Well, any woman who would live in Nebraska ought to be entitled to vote, to wear the inexpressibles, make stump speeches, smoke cigars, and "go on a bust," too, occasionally, if she had a mind to. These extra privileges would not compensate for living in such a hyperborean region.

Report of the Board of Health.

The report of the Board of Health of this city, made in accordance with law to the Senate and House of Representatives, for the year past, embraces two documents prepared by the Secretary, Capt. Lubuzan, and the President, Dr. Choppin. We have received a copy of the pamphlet containing these papers and extract the following important facts from them.

In accordance with the law of 1855, authorizing their conduct, the Board of Health has located a Quarantine Station on the left bank of the Mississippi, about thirty-five miles from the head of the Passes, and about seventy-two miles below the city. It measures eight acres front by forty acres deep, between parallel lines, making a beautiful enclosure for the purposes of a quarantine station. The grounds are spacious, well drained, and have many fine shade trees. The wind has an unobstructed course opened for it in almost every direction, and thus every external means is improved to render the spot both healthy and beautiful.

The authority of the Board has been used in the erection of four buildings. A main hospital, 120 feet long by 45 feet wide, two stories high, with galleries nine feet wide, both above and below.

A minor hospital, or pest house, for malignant and eminently contagious diseases, two stories high, with galleries, and eighty feet long, has been erected, making the opportunities for separating the diseases which are contagious, and for fully accommodating all, unequalled.

The receipts of the Board last year—ending on the 1st of January—were $67,408 18, of this amount $45,000 was received from the State under the law of 15th March, 1855; $19593 75 was received from vessels at the Mississippi Station; $2,191 94 from the Atchafalaya Station, and $682 49 from the Rigolets Station. The expenditures were as follows: Expenses Mississippi Station, $41,701 50; Rigolets Station, $3,471 07; Atchafalaya Station, $7,811 63; expenses office in New Orleans, $7,358 87.

The liabilities of the Board amount to $28,746 13, and its assets $12,124 51.

A further appropriation of twenty thousand dollars is asked for, hoping with that sum to make the concern pay for itself. The establishment of the stations caused the excess the present year over what it will hereafter be, of $39,500. The stations on the Atchafalaya and at Fort Pike, on the Rigolets, have been discontinued since the first of November last. A discussion of the contagious character of fever and a demonstration of the benefits arising from quarantine stations in other cities, makes a very interesting portion of the report. It is shown that our imports from countries where yellow fever prevails, and from which vessels would therefore be quarantined, is $2,583,713, more than one-half of which is from Mexico; while the total value of imports is about $166,000,000—the imports from sea being $46,000,000. But for the epidemics, it is thought, they would have been $210,000,000 per annum.

The character, history and nature of epidemics and quarantine stations, are fully and elaborately reviewed. The station on the river, whatever it may have accomplished, or failed to accomplish, with regard to yellow fever, has prevented ship-fever and small-pox from being imported. Confessing the failure of the plan to have accomplished all in one year that it may do when throughly organized, and predicting much success for it hereafter, the report and our summary thereof both close.

Annual Book Trade Sales.

The annual book trade sales commence in the city of New York on the 20th March, when thousands upon thousands of volumes, in every department of literature, upon every subject and science, are sold off under the hammer, in lots varying from ten copies to ten thousand. It is the fourth of July among the the publishers and retailers—the great occasion of the year, and is the best plan that has hitherto been devised for the benefit of both parties. Half a million of dollars worth of printed matter will be sold, in New York, during the continuance of the sales, and we trust that some of our own dealers in literature will be present to look out for the wants of this section.

With regard to these trade sales, we find in an exchange some information of so interesting and novel a character that we give it as a piece of current news:

"The total number of publishers in the United States, comprising however only those who publish books, not periodicals, is in round numbers three hundred. About three-fourths of them are to be found in the cities of Boston, New York, Philadelphia and Baltimore. The balance being divided among Cincinnati, the next in rank, Buffalo, Auburn, Albany, Louisville, St. Louis, etc., etc. For the disposition of the large amount of publications issued by these various houses, we have at least three thousand booksellers, who make that their prominent business, and between six and seven thousand who are located in small villages, selling books in connection with drugs, groceries or hardware.

"The present trade sale, under the supervision of the Publishers' Association, will be managed by the house of Leavitt, Delisser & Co., and their invoices are very full and complete, leading to an expectation that at least $500,000 worth of books will be sold. Trade sales take place twice a year regularly, in New York and Philadelphia, and are also held annually in Cincinnati, on a more limited scale. These few items give some idea of the amount of American reading. It is true other and older countries have great sales that surpass this of New York, in the proportion of four to one. Such is the book market at Liepsic, famous among book-men the world through. But, at the German and other continental sales, as also, on a more limited scale, at the insular book auction of Great Britain, a great proportion of the works sold are classics—sought for with avidity by bibliopoles and bibliomaniacs, not on account of valuable information that may be in them, but for the strangeness of colophon, the singularity of type or title, or some other matter of extraneous interest.

"Our American book-sales are void of all this immeasing and unfounded attractiveness. Books are sold for no fancy rubric; for no quaint spelling, or peculiarity of age; but on account of the immediate useful practical information that sleeps in their sheets and is kept animate between their coverings. Thus, the sale of Noah Webster's Spelling Books surpassed anything the world has ever known; and Adams' old arithmetic, instead of stopping at twenty, or thirty editions, like Headly's "Napoleon and his Marshals," or Beecher Stowe's "Uncle Tom," ran through as many hundred editions as they did units, and has not ceased yet. All books, everything readable, from a bill-poster to a sanscrit inscription, is bought and read here, however. Our presses cannot keep up with the demands of an appetite that grows more exacting and voracious from every additional sop that is thrown to it; an appetite which, like Cerberus, is many headed and never ceases its readiness to devour; a great intellectual tunnel that cannot be filled by books, papers or pens. If the food bestowed upon it is only sound and well digested, the growth arising therefrom will be healthy and strong and will erect new pillars, bulwarks and protections for our present prosperity, and behind them place great viaducts and lay broad tracks upon which this age and ages to follow shall sweep exultingly into the golden and glorious plains of the West, when knowledge, virtue and power have their highest results and earthly apogee.

"In the present, however, the improvements attendant upon mental culture, when rightly directed and properly used, are such as should lead every one who has the good of his country and his race at heart to rejoice in the manifestations of its increase. Mere strength is sure to err; ability without education is worse than inability, for the latter will do nothing—remain a negative; whereas, the former, being positive, will do what is wrong. If education is only right there cannot be a glut or surfeit of it. The more the merrier and the better; not only for the immediate individual or individuals, but for the whole world. It is an old theme, fortunately, to harp upon here—the benefits of educational intelligence. Our remarks grew naturally out of considering the grand opportunity there is afforded in these book sales, to which we have referred for procuring the pabulum and fodder that shall make the increase; and, of that which is to be sold, we trust our own merchants will return laden with the best, the soundest and the most useful; whatever some up a history of progress already made; whatever points the way and shows the means by which it shall be surpassed in the future. For there are fertile plains unmapped and undiscovered; flumes of thought unnamed and unknown, yet to be found, classified and rendered useful."

A good newspaper is like a sensible and soundhearted friend, whose appearance on one's threshold gladdens the mind with the promise of a pleasant and profitable hour.

On the 15th February, by Rev. P. P. Neely, Dr. S. K. JENNINGS, Jr., to Miss MARGARET A. WEST, all of Marion, Ala.

On February 20th, by the Rev. Wm Shipyard, Mr. SYDNEY D. FERGUSON, of Carrollton, to Miss MARTHA T. PEITIGREW, of Greene county.

In the Methodist Church, at Donaldsonville, on 3d inst., by the Rev. Lewis A. Reed, Dr. J. DUKE, Esq., to Miss REBECCA HERRING, of this place.

DEATHS.

DIED, in Greensboro', Ga., on the morning of the 12th February, Mrs. A. H. DUNCAN, wife of Rev. J. P. Duncan, of the Georgia Conference.

DIED, at Lake Providence, La., on the 6th February last, aged 53 years, Mrs. ELIZA DORTCH, only daughter of Thomas and Nancy Lane, of Elbert county, Ga.

She had several years since united with the M. E. Church, but until a month before her death had not received that full assurance of pardon for sin which is the privilege of the Christian. In October last, desiring to see me once more, I visited her, and found her fast doolining under the ravages of a fixed disease, but calm and reflective as to her future state; when released from suffering by opiates. I soon informed her of her true condition, and inquired after her hopes of heaven. She said her way was not as clear nor her hopes as bright as she desired, yet she had a hope, but not fully satisfied. I spent the night with her, conversing in reference to a future state, and quoting God's promises; reminding her of their infallibility and her high privilege of knowing for herself that she was his child, and to cast her burden upon him and he would sustain her; quoting that consoling verse, the 24th of the 11th chapter of St. Mark. I bid her farewell, promising to send her a book, Baxter's Saints' Rest, which at the first reading after it reached her was sanctified to her eternal good, filling her with joy and gladness; and inviting friends and neighbors to come and rejoice with her, and hear what the Lord had done for her soul; which state of rejoicing was her happy lot until death; and to the oft repeated inquiries as to the future, responded, "I am ready." She seemed to fall calmly to sleep. When, after some time had elapsed, she suddenly awoke, and, with a smiling and peaceful countennnce, exclaimed, "Have you come, have you come? I am going! I am going! Jesus! Jesus! Good bye!" Thus died one whose pilgrimage here was one of trials and sufferings rarely experienced. J. A. LANE.

A mulatto girl was found secreted on board an Austrian ship lately arrived at Liverpool from New Orleans.

The Fate of the Pacific.

The Baltic brings no tidings whatever of the missing steamer, thus extinguishing the hopes raised by the report brought by the passengers on the America.

The Peace Movement.

The Conference was to open on the 23d ult. The Envoys had all arrived in Paris, and confidence in the final establishment of peace continues.

The Austrian Amnesty.

The amnesty granted by Austria to political offenders will be, with few exceptions, unconditional. Those who chose can resume their citizenship and at once be put in possession of their property. Those who do not wish to again become citizens may sell their estates, and those who take advantage of neither clause will be considered as dead and their property handed over to their legal heirs.

A Skirmish—Russians Successful.

On the 5th of January, six Russian battalions surprised a body of Turkish troops near Zudugildi. The latter retreated, losing their guns and baggage.

The Russians subsequently burnt the Pacha's palace and several villages.

Marriage of the Duke Nicholas.

The Grand Duke Nicholas, brother of the Czar of Russia, has been married to Alexandrina Petrowna, Princess of Oldenburg.

The Africa Out.

The steamer Africa arrived out at Liverpool on the 17th.

The New English Loan.

The Rothschilds take the whole of the new loan of five million pounds. Money is tighter and the demand exceeds the supply.

Russia on the Peace Question.

The Russian Envoy to the Peace Congress says that unless peace is speedily concluded serious difficulties may interfere to prevent it.

Markets.

Mulligan, Evans & Co. quote Breadstuffs as having advanced considerably.

In Flour there is an improved demand, and Western Canal is quoted at 34s to 36s; Philadelphia and Baltimore brands at 37s to 39s; and Ohio 38s.

Corn opened heavy, but improved, and closed at an advance of 1d; Mixed 33s 6d, White 36s.

Provisions.

Provisions are generally dull. Lard is quiet and prices are irregular; quoted at 55s to 56s. Western Bacon has improved, and quoted at 51s to 53s 6d.

The Money Market.

LONDON, Feb. 20.—The Money market is more stringent. Consols have advanced slightly, and are quoted at 90½ to 90¾.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

From Washington.

WASHINGTON, March 4.—The Senate has appropriated eighty thousand dollars for fortifications at Galveston.

The House has passed the deficiency bill appropriating one hundred and fifty thousand dollars for disabled seamen.

WASHINGTON, March 5.—The Senate to-day admitted Lyman Trumbull as Senator from Illinois.

A bill was reported for making additional fortifications and defences.

In the House, Kansas affairs were discussed.

Pennsylvania Democratic Convention.

WASHINGTON, March 4.—The State Democratic Convention of Pennsylvania have declared in favor of Buchanan as their choice for the Presidency.

British Troops for Canada.

NEW YORK, March 5.—A large British force is ordered to Canada, including the 5th regiment and the battalion of riflemen.

It is stated that every regiment attached to the Home service will be immediately sent to Canada.

New York Markets.

NEW YORK, March 5.—The steamer's news had no effect on our market. Flour is firm; Ohio is quoted at $8,35.

Louisiana Legislature.

BATON ROUGE, March 5.—House.—Mr. Jourdan introduced a resolution asking the Governor to return, for further consideration, the bill equalizing taxation in the city of New Orleans. Laid on the table.

Mr. Sterling moved a reconsideration of the vote taken yesterday on the bill for the payment of claims for work done on Cat Island. After a tremendous struggle the vote was reconsidered, and the bill passed by a vote of 33 to 15.

The opponents of the bill at one time left the Hall in a body, and destroyed the quorum.

The bill appropriates thirty-two thousand dollars for the payment of the claims.

NEW YORK, March 4.—The United States mail steamship Baltic arrived at this port from Liverpool on the afternoon of the 20th ult., her advices being four days later than brought by the America.

Markets.

Our circulars by the Baltic quote Cotton as steady at unchanged prices. The sales for three days since the sailing of the America amounted to 26,000 bales.

The Money Market.

LONDON, Feb. 20.—The money market is tighter. Consols closed at 90½ to 90¾. A new loan of five millions pounds has been determined upon.

The Peace Congress.

The meeting of the Congress had been postponed until the 23d. Everything was still favorable to peace.

ADDITIONAL BY THE AMERICA.

England.

The London Times expresses an anxiety regarding England's success in the approaching Congress.

In the House of Commons, on the 15th, Roebuck moved the production of the correspondence with the United States and a copy of the instructions to Crampton.

Palmerston defended the Government, and deprecated the idea of a war with the United States. He believed the interests of the two countries were inseparable. The Derby party are determined to support Palmerston.

The Peace Congress.

The Peace Conference opens on the 21st. It is said that Austria and France wished the admission of Prussia, but England refused.

The Dutch and Japan.

The Dutch have concluded a new treaty with Japan, obtaining important privileges, accorded to no other nation.

The Steamship Baltic.

The Collins steamship Baltic, from New York, arrived out at Liverpool on the 13th.

CINCINNATI, Feb. 29.—The fugitives, whose arrest caused so much excitement, a short time since, were delivered to their owners to-day, and escorted across the river by 200 special police.

From Washington.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 29.—The Senate has received documents from the President showing that England has made no offer of arbitration. Crampton on Wednesday last made a proposition for arbitration, but withdrew it on the following day.

JACKSON MONUMENT ASSOCIATION.

We have received a copy of the report of the Commissioners of the Jackson Monument Association of this city, presented to the Senate and House of Representatives, containing a brief account of the origin of the association, its officers, the steps taken in prosecution of the object for which it was originated, the amounts of money collected, the method and times of disbursement, and a final summing up of receipts and expenses, showing the very handsome balance of $12,353 23 to be still on hand, for any expenses that may yet be incurred in carrying out the designs of the association.

The earlier steps taken towards the accomplishment of the object in view, are recited at length; but, as we have hardly more than touched the fifth year since they were inaugurated, it is needless to recite more than the general outlines of development that have followed. The association was organized on the eleventh of January, 1851; and, in February, 1855, a report was made showing the operations up to that time, and giving a described detail of the arrangements made for the statue. The corner stone which was laid in Jackson square, in 1840, by Gen. Jackson himself, was removed on the 30th of Oct., 1855, and deposited, together with a box containing numerous coins and documents, within the pedestal of the present statue. In Feb., 1852, the Legislature passed an act, incorporating a Board of Commissioners and making appropriations towards the erection of an equestrian statue to be placed in Jackson square; and, also, for the erection of a battle monument, in commemoration of the glorious victory achieved by General Jackson over the English army.

It was hoped that the statue might be in readiness for inauguration on the Eighth of January, and in order that it might be here in time, was shipped early in December; but, owing to contrary winds, the vessel did not arrive until the 6th, leaving too short a time for the necessary preparations for its erection on the day proposed. The inauguration was accordingly postponed for one month and one day; when, on the 9th of February, it was placed where it now stands, and, we trust, ever may, as a memento of the past and moral for the future. The ceremonies which attended the occasion were recorded by us at length at the time of their occurrence, and leave it only to be said that they reflected the highest honor on all concerned. The statue has long been due from the city to the memory of the day, the heroism of the soldiery, the courage and ability of the commander. At last it is in its place to welcome the sun in its dawning, and be crowned with the last rays of its light as it leaves us in the evening; whence the morrow shall bring it back brighter and more beautiful to regild that which has been dimmed by the dews of night.

As a work of art alone—all connection it may have with the great event celebrated in it, being wholly overlooked—the statue is a glory and source of pride: an American statue, wrought by an American artist and placed on American soil, in honor of an American hero. But, when to this is added the great beauty of design and perfection of finish, the spirit and tone that breathes through it, we may well hope that its perpetuity shall be commensurate with the fame of the man whose character alone gives life and spirit to it.

For this work Mr. Mills has been paid thirty thousand dollars; he claims, however, the additional sum of five thousand, on account of losses and for reasons which the Commissioners consider sufficient to entitle him thereto. The expenses of the inauguration and all the arrangements devolved upon the Jackson Monument Association, and were met by it, without any cost to the city. The whole of this expenditure amounted only to $1,069 80.

The last report of the Jackson Monument Association announced to the Legislature that the Commissioners had secured an eligible spot upon the battle-ground of 1815 for carrying into execution the duties imposed on them under the legislative act of February, 1852. The Commissioners unanimously determined that the manifest design of the State was the construction of a shaft, rising to a towering height, so as to form a conspicuous point of attraction and elevation, which could be discerned at a distance of many miles; and thus, whilst impressing the beholder with the loftiness of the structure, designate likewise for all time to come the site of that great and wonderful achievement which delivered our city from destruction and the soil of Louisiana from foreign invasion. Accordingly they advertised for plans, terms and specifications for the erection of a shaft or obelisk on the battle-field of the 8th of January, 1815, the material to be either of iron or marble. On the 30th of May, the joint plan of Newton Richards and John Stroud & Co., for a marble shaft, 150 feet high, 16 feet 8 inches at the base above the foundation, and 12 feet 6 inches at the apex, was accepted for the sum of $47,000. The contractors have already gone to work, and the foundation is completed to a height of 13 feet, presenting the most solid piece of masonry in the State, and capable of sustaining three times the intended weight. The times and rates of payment are so arranged as to be sufficient for the contractors, and at the same time safe for the Commissioners. The sum of $8,500 has been paid for work already done, and it is expected that the monument will be completed in the two ensuing years.

In this simple statement of facts, there is much credit reflected upon our city and State, as also upon the Commissioners, and something subtracted from the trite cant concerning the ingratitude of republics.

Jewish Widows' and Orphans' Home.

We have received a pamphlet containing an account of the dedication of the Home for Jewish Widows and Orphans, situated on Jackson and Chippewa streets, in the Fourth District. The dedication occurred on the eighth of January, and was attended by a great many people, of all persuasions, from all parts of the city.

The ground on which the Home is erected faces 120 feet on Jackson, and 180 feet on Chippewa streets. The building fronts 66 feet on the former, with a depth of 41 feet on the latter, and is three stories high. The facade and portico are neat and somewhat ornamental, but comfort and use have been sought for more than show. The windows are large and well ventilated, and the passages broad—intersecting one another at regular distances. The lower story contains a parlor, matron's room, committee room, dining room—39 by 21 feet—store-rooms, pantry, kitchen, bath, and other rooms—well lit and abundantly ventilated. The second and third stories are devoted to sleeping rooms—all arranged with a view to comfort and health. The position of the building is well-chosen for rendering the dormitories cool and pleasant. Pipes have been laid in every room and hall for conducting gas, and for carrying water from the cisterns, of which there are two large ones, and also, a very deep well. The grounds are well filled up and graded, and, when the shrubbery grows green, will be very pleasant.

Following this outline of the buildings, the pamphlet contains an account of the ceremonies, and gives the prayer and the address which attended the dedication. They were very interesting, and well adapted to the occasion.

Following the address, the ladies and gentlemen present were invited into the hall of the building where refreshments had been provided. After the usual toasts and speeches belonging to such an occasion had been disposed of, Sir Moses Montifiore, "the shining pillar of Jewish philanthropy," was elected First Honorary Member of the Association. The most interesting feature of the occasion was, however, the liberal amount of subscriptions then made, which amounted to $2,580; subsequently increased by the subscriptions of ladies, amounting to $758, to the handsome sum of $3,408; which may well be set down as a large and honorable charity from those who gave it.

New Orleans is full of great public charities of all kinds, intended to aid the poor, heal the sick and help those who are suffering. The American charities, which outweigh all the others, include hospitals, state-prisons, jails, houses of refuge and asylums. The French have a relief and benevolent association and so have the Spanish and Portuguese. We do not know whether the St. George's Society is charitable in its organization or not. Other sects and nationalities have their charities, and we are happy to see that our Jewish citizens have erected an asylum which shall entitle them to an equal standing with those of other religions. In this remark, we do not ignore the fact that the poor of their creed are cared for by those who are richer, but rejoice to see that charity organized and so arranged that it will be freed from the annoyances and instability of private benevolence, and put on the broad footing of a great public good.

Lyceum Lectures.

The lecture of Professor Olmsted, last evening at the Lyceum, was more largely attended than its predecessors, and to those who were conversant with astronomy and high mathematics, was exceedingly interesting. The discovery of the planet Uranus was the subject, and the merits of Leverrier, and other astronomers concerned in its discovery, were fully unfolded. The difficulties attendant upon calculating any planet, added to the peculiar difficulties which exist in calculating the motion of a planet, upon which the influence of other planets was not known, gives some idea of the difficulties encountered by those who studied out the existence of Uranus.

Up to a very recent period our astronomers knew only of those planets whose histories were handed down from former generations. Thirty-nine new planets have been discovered since. In 1840 there were twenty observations concerning Uranus. Since then it has been fully computed and now it is known that this planet requires eighty-four years to move around the sun, which one planet does in twenty-four hours. In 1821 Bouvier, who was a student of Laplace, made some calculations concerning the planet. From his time the discovery has been more and more fully followed up until Neptune is now as exactly calculated as any other.

In 1830 Bessel, while calculating the distances of the fixed stars, announced the fact that there must be such a planet in being, although he had never seen it. Bouvier and Hanson, before 1839, both believed that the planet was in existence. Mr. Airey and others had a similar suspicion, and so the whole astronomical world was on the qui vive for this unseen world, and continued to correspond concerning it—some with doubts, others with high hopes—all with a greater or less proximate success. Adams and Leverrier were the only men who continued in pursuit of the fugitive planet—the former began in 1843, the latter in 1845—and in 1843 Adams sent out the calculated orbit of a new planet, which Prof. Airey acknowledged. The calculations of Adams were close and exact; but Leverrier's were more full, and the difference between them is great, the latter's work being ten times severer than his rival's, and creating an entirely new series of calculations. Both, however, were magnificent and worthy of great astronomers.

On the 23d of Sept., 1846, the planet was found by Leverrier, and the glory, therefore, belongs to him. He published his theory and staked his reputation upon it. This is a brief theory of Leverrier's planet up to the discovery of Uranus. Walker, an American astronomer, in 1847, declared that a star which had been calculated by Lalande, years before, was not a star, but a planet. Prof. Pierce took up the theory and carried it forward. Had he pushed it a little further, the glory of the discovery would have been his. (The different calculations of the different astronomers, and the differences between them, were very clearly given, but were too exact for condensation and too long for entire publication.)

In March, 1847, Pierce and Walker, of our own country, calculated more closely the position and form of Neptune; so that now it is impossible for any further achievement to be accomplished, and foreign astronomers are now dependant upon American calculations for their statistics concerning the great planet. The calculations of Leverrier and others were true in their general outlines, but those of Adams were correct in their minutia and gave the planet as a fact, thoroughly calculated, and with nothing left for suspicion. While Germany, England and France, struggled for the palm of victory, it was won by an American, and our country is now at the head of all others. American astronomy now supports a periodical which admits nothing that is not purely scientific to its pages. Sears C. Walker, who lies buried in Ohio, was one of the noblest of all American astronomers, and his memory must ever be remembered; for if,

> "Dulce decorum est
> Pro patria mori,"

as the poet says, how much sweeter is it to give up life for the pure study of science? Walker, the great astronomer, will have his praises sung in years we shall not see. With this tribute the lecture closed.

The next lecture will be concerning our progress in astronomical instruments, which, as being more generally comprehensible and fully as interesting as its predecessors, should attract all who have any taste for scientific knowledge.

Local Intelligence.

DEFALCATION OF THE CITY TREASURER.—The high character that Col. Wm. H. Garland has sustained in this city for some years past, and the earnest assurances of his friends that he would be able to disembarrass himself from the charges brought against him by the Council, caused us to abstain from publishing, in yesterday's paper, any thing more in reference to his alleged defalcations than was contained in our report of the Council proceedings of Saturday night. There was a great deal of excitement throughout the city during Saturday and Sunday, and an infinity of conflicting stories, more or less in the prejudice of Mr. Garland; but, knowing how readily panics arise in reference to parties having large sums of public money in their keeping, and hoping that this panic would prove groundless, we thought it best to defer publication until we could become possessed of certainties. The arrival, however, of Mr. Garland from the Bayou yesterday morning, in the custody of an officer, and his incarceration in the parish prison, put an end to the public doubt, and left a large portion of the community to indulge in sad ruminations upon the instability of human nature.

The excitement commenced during the forenoon of Saturday, by the action of Aldermen Eager and Bailey in closing the Treasurer's office and pocketing the keys, just as the school teachers were beginning to apply for their monthly pay. Mr. Garland was met by various persons during the day, to whom he intimidated the demander of a sum who expected to prove him his father; in such a manner, in fact, that no one could for a suspected him of harboring any intention of flight.

Immediately upon the adjournment of the Council, Messrs. Eager and Bailey called upon Recorder Wright, made affidavit that Mr. Garland had embezzled over $25,000 of the public money, and asked for a warrant for his arrest and detention for trial.

The warrant was issued and placed in the hands of Capt. Moynan. Their officers was told, upon application at Mr. G.'s residence, that he had gone up the river. As he was not to be found elsewhere in the city, the conclusion became irresistible that he had sought safety in flight; more especially when it became known that the schooner Jane Elizabeth, belonging to him, had cleared at the Custom-house, in ballast, for Sabine and Aransas, and had left the Government Wharf in the vicinity of a merchant late at night. On Sunday morning it was ascertained that Mr. Garland did actually leave on the Jane Elizabeth. He was soon to embark by Corporal Dolon, and another policeman of the Third District, who happened to be at the Government Wharf at the time. These officers stated that Mr. G. was accompanied in the wharf by a number of friends, who came down with him, in four carriages; that amongst the luggage taken on board the schooner was a trunk or chest so heavy that four men had difficulty in carrying it; and that Mr. Garland, (whom they knew perfectly well, he having previously accosted them,) followed after it, remarking, "Be careful you don't drop that in the river." This was at half past 10 o'clock. The officers state that they suspected there was something wrong, but that, as they had not heard of the excitement up town, they did not think it worth while to interfere. There had not elapsed time enough between the issuance of the warrant and Mr. Garland's arrival there, for them to be apprised of their duty. These officers also claim to have communicated with the steamboat shipping master had been ordered to include no American on English man in the crew of the schooner, and that his bill, as well as the bill of the schooner's stores, were paid by orders upon Mr. Garland. This information was kept secret, and during the whole of Sunday the public were in uncertainty as to whether Mr. Garland had taken flight or not.

After the examination with Mayor Lewis, and by his advice, Capt. Moynan proceeded to telegraph to the Balize for the interception of the schooner—but as the line does not operate from 10 o'clock on Sundays, he was unable to get the dispatch forwarded till night.

Yesterday morning the dispatch was answered by the arrival of the tow-boat Angelo Norman, having Mr. Garland on board, a prisoner. It appeared that Capt. Bowditch, the boarding officer of the Balize, had received the dispatch; the schooner not having got down, he waited for her. Boarded her when she arrived, found Mr. Garland secreted in the hold, made him a prisoner, put him on board the Angelo Norman, and sent him back to the city. Mr. Garland made no resistance when arrested, had very little to say, and had on his person some five or six hundred dollars and a new revolver. But for a heavy fog on Saturday night, which compelled the tow-boat having the schooner in tow to lay to below the Battle Ground, and remain there for some hours, the schooner would have been safely out at sea before the arrival of the dispatch at the Balize. On the arrival of the prisoner at the wharf yesterday morning, he was handed over to Capt. Moynan, and by that officer escorted to the Parish Prison, where he is at present.

Capt. Bowditch, not having authority to do more than detain Mr. Garland, (and not having legal authority to do even that much,) permitted the schooner to remain unmolested. As soon as this became known, Capt. Moynan sent down an order for her detention. An answer was sent back to the effect that the schooner had put out to sea with a good breeze, and that there was small chance of catching her.

In this state of affairs Mayor Lewis consulted the U. S. District Attorney, Mr. Mott, and ascertained from that gentleman that the Government could have nothing to do with pursuing the schooner. The Mayor then applied to Harris & Morgan for the use of a steamship, but found he could not obtain one, except at a price which he feared the Council would not sanction. He next applied at a towboat office, and found that the only terms upon which he could have the schooner pursued, would be the payment of $1000 for the use of the pursuing towboat, and the guaranteeing of the company against any damages that might arise from the arrest of a vessel on the high seas without authority. These conditions, with the advice of other city officers, were acceded to, and the company dispatched an order to the Balize to send a towboat in pursuit.

Last night Capt. Moynan received a dispatch announcing that the schooner had been captured, and was on her way up the river and public be at the levee this morning.—Crescent, 4th March.

COMMON COUNCIL.

BOARD OF ALDERMEN.—This Board met on Saturday evening, pursuant to a call of the Mayor, at the request of Messrs. Bailey, Price and Dopp, the Finance Committee of the Board.

On motion of Mr. Bailey, the Board went into secret session.

When the doors were closed, a committee of the Board of Assistants presented a resolution charging Wm. H. Garland, the Treasurer of the city, with gross malfeasance in office, and impeaching him of high crimes and misdemeanors, also that before they would prepare the articles of impeachment, and ask for the Board of Aldermen to take measures to secure the attendance of said Wm. H. Garland in answer to the charges.

Mr. Bailey thereupon offered a resolution for the Board to take the necessary measures in the impeachment, etc., which was adopted.

A resolution was received from the Board of Assistants, asking a joint session for the purpose of electing a temporary City Treasurer, to act during the suspension of Mr. Garland. It was concurred in, and then the Board adjourned, to meet the Assistants in joint session.

BOARD OF ASSISTANT ALDERMEN.—This body met on Saturday evening, pursuant to a call of the Mayor, at the instance of the Finance Committee.

Mr. Eager moved that the Board go into secret session. There was some debate upon this, Messrs. Price and Stith opposing secrecy, and Messrs. Eager, Chambers and Abbott supporting the motion. It finally Mr. Eager's motion was carried by a vote of 4 to 3.

When the doors were thrown open, Mr. McKnight offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That this Board do hereby charge Wm. H. Garland, Treasurer of the city of New Orleans, with gross malfeasance in office, and that this body, acting with solemn regard to their responsibility, do hereby impeach said Wm. H. Garland of high misdemeanors in office.

Resolved further, That a committee of five be appointed by the Chair to prepare the aforesaid charges of impeachment.

Which were adopted, and Messrs. McKnight, Stith, Howell, Wallace and Abbott, appointed upon the committee called for.

Mr. Stith moved that the report of the Finance Committee, upon which the action of the Board was based, be published. Adopted.

Mr. Barthette offered a resolution for directing the City Attorney to proceed legally against Mr. Garland.

Messrs. Fabre and Stith opposed it on the ground that [illegible] had performed all its duty in instituting the impeachment of Mr. Garland, and that the guilt or innocence of the gentleman was to be inferred only by the Board of Aldermen, according to law.

After a debate, the resolution was voted upon and lost, and then the Board took a recess.

Afterwards, Mr. Eager offered a resolution inviting the Board of Aldermen to a joint session, for the purpose of electing some one to discharge the functions of the Treasurer during the suspension of Mr. Garland. It was adopted without debate.

Mr. Eager offered another resolution for the arrest and detention of Mr. Garland, in case he should be found within the city. During the discussion of this resolution, the Board of Aldermen entered. A Treasurer pro tem was elected, and the Board of Aldermen retired. Afterwards, upon further consideration, the resolution was withdrawn, and then the Board adjourned.

JOINT SESSION.—The Board of Aldermen having joined the Board of Assistants, the object of the session was announced to be the election of a City Treasurer to serve temporarily during the suspension of Mr. Garland.

Mr. McKnight nominated Assistant Alderman Adam Gillen for the office.

Messrs. Fabre and Stith opposed the nomination on the ground of its opposition to the spirit of the City Charter; and Mr. Fabre moved Mr. Thomas Theard.

Mr. Eagan quoted the City Charter to show that Aldermen were eligible to certain offices.

The Chair (Mr. Darcell) decided that Aldermen were eligible only to those offices conferred by vote of the people.

Mr. J. H. Dunlap was next nominated for the office, upon which the Chair stated that all votes cast for Mr. Gillen would be ruled by him as blank.

A vote was taken, and the result was 17 for Gillen, 6 for Dunlap, and 1 for Theard.

The Chair decided that Mr. Dunlap was elected—the votes for Mr. Gillen being ruled by him as blank.

The decision of the Chair was appealed from. Then the Chair changed his opinion, and decided that there was no election. This decision also was appealed from, and the appeal sustained by 10 to 2. Thereupon the Chair announced that Mr. Gillen was duly elected City Treasurer pro tem, after which the Board of Aldermen retired, and adjourned.

REPORT OF THE FINANCE COMMITTEE.—The following is the report of the Finance Committee, which was adopted in secret session by both Boards of the Council, and subsequently, on motion of Assistant Alderman Stith, ordered to be published:

REPORT.

The Finance Committee deem it their duty to lay before the Council the following statement in regard to the Treasury Department.

On the 15th January the Comptroller reported to the Council his annual statement, showing the receipts and expenditures for the year 1855.

In investigating this report your committee found that from the showing there was a large deficiency in the receipts from various sources, more particularly in the State appropriation for school purposes, and from the Commercial Water Works.

By the Comptroller's report there had been received but $31,853 from the State. Upon bringing the matter to the notice of the Treasurer, he reported at once upon the books then open at the Treasury, he had never been paid to him on the 26th January, 1856. Subsequent investigation has proved to your committee that this sum was paid to the Treasurer on the 10th of April, 1855.

Finding this discrepancy, your committee obtained from the State Auditor of Public Accounts, a full statement of all monies paid to the city from this fund, which, upon examination, shows that the December appropriation for 1854, of $15,941 has never been paid to the city. A statement of the account, together with that of the Treasurer, is herewith enclosed. These documents show that there has been gross malfeasance in the Treasurer's Department.

The next matter, which attracted the attention of your committee, was the absence of every report on the books of the city of moneys received from the Commercial Water Works for dividends due the city. In bringing this matter to the notice of the Board, the Comptroller informally reported as having received on the 26th of January, 1856, the sum of $6,000. Upon examination of the books of the Water Works, we find that, of this amount, $4,320 were paid to the Treasurer on the 1st of March, 1855, and not reported to the Comptroller until January 26th, 1856. Upon further investigation, we find that the sum named ($41,280 dends of December, 1852, and June, 1853, amounting to $18,320, were paid to the Treasurer on the 14th December, 1853, which amount has never been credited to the city, or changed to the Treasurer on any of the books of the city.

We deem it our duty to state that the receipt given for this amount was regularly audited and endorsed by the Comptroller, but, owing to some neglect on his part, was never entered upon his books.

In matters connected with the Commissioners of the Trust Funds' department, of which Mr. Garland has been Treasurer, we find there is a like discrepancy between the books of the Commissioners and the accounts rendered by the United States Bonds of New York and others, showing a balance against the Treasurer of about $35,000. For this amount Mr. Garland claims to have vouchers, but up to this time we have been unable to procure them.

It is proper in remark that these discrepancies are in the accounts of 1854, previous to the creation of the Fiscal Agent.

We would also direct the attention of the Council to the report of the Treasurer made up to the 23d February, showing a balance in the Treasury on that day of $142,965.

Under existing ordinances, this fund is required to be deposited in the State Bank elected for that purpose. Upon examining the books of the bank we find to the credit of the Treasurer on that day the sum $85,683. 99, leaving a balance in his hands of $57,281 01.

On the 26th February, the Committee addressed Mr. Garland the following letter, asking full information concerning the foregoing statements, (No. 1,) and receiving no answer on the 28th, we again addressed him as follows, (No. 2,) and in answer received the following reply, (No. 3.)

In examining Mr. Garland's report to the Comptroller, made up to last evening, of the receipts and expenditures of the week, we find but few reports as having been received, from the 25th to the 29th inclusive, the sums of $39 for bulls, and about $150 collected in December last.

From examination at the bank, we find there had been deposited to the credit of the Treasurer during this time the sum of $2,000.

It is proper to remark that during the same time in the previous week there was collected and unreported $4,000.

Finding the collections, if any there were, not being either reported in the Comptroller or deposited in bank, the Committee deemed it their duty to address the following letter to the Comptroller, which they delivered to him this morning, and urged the immediate action thereon:

We also arranged for the Mayor to call this meeting, that we might be relieved from these statements, in the hope that the Council may believe us of any further responsibility.

The foregoing statements have not been made without pru[illegible] and caution on our part, nor until we had called upon the Treasurer to defend himself from the charge.

[No. 1.]

FINANCE COMMITTEE ROOM, Feb. 26, 1856.

Wm. H. Garland Esq., Treasurer.

Dear Sir: We have before us the State Auditor's report of moneys paid to the city of New Orleans from the School Fund, beginning in 1852 and ending February, 1856.

Upon comparing this statement with the Comptroller's reports, we find that the December apportionment for 1854 for $15,940, and reported as paid on the 20th December of that year, is not reported as having been received. Will you be kind enough to inform the Committee, whether the said amount has been allowed or reported to you, and whether still due from the State Treasurer.

We also observe that the March, 1855, apportionment, $27,895, reported as paid on the 5th of April, 1855, is not reported on the Comptroller's books until 31st January

Anti-Slavery National Convention.

The body assembled in Philadelphia on the 22d, for the purpose of nominating candidates for the Anti-slavery party for the Presidency and Vice Presidency.

At fifteen minutes past 10 o'clock, the Convention was called to order by Mr. Brownlow, of Tennessee, upon whose motion Thomas Hazlehurst, Esq., of Philadelphia, was elected to the chair.

Upon being conducted to the chair, Mr. Hazlehurst was greeted with applause. He thanked the Convention for the honor conferred upon him, and promised that, while he remained its presiding officer, he would endeavor to deserve the confidence of the delegates. He hoped, by the performance of his duties as presiding officer, to feel assured that he would receive the support of those around him. The Convention was called for the purpose of nominating candidates for the offices of President and Vice President of the United States, by the Anti-slavery party of the country. The Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States would be appropriate for reference to the platform of principles. Upon the platform of principles which would be reported, he trusted that the Convention would be found to be united.

Delegates were then announced as being present and ready to be represented: Connecticut, New Hampshire, New York, Ohio, Indiana, Pennsylvania, Wisconsin, Tennessee, Rhode Island, Vermont, Michigan, Arkansas, Texas, California, Maine, Kentucky, Louisiana, North Carolina, Florida, Delaware, Illinois, Missouri, District of Columbia, Virginia.

The Virginia delegation declined to act with the Convention for the present.

Mr. Fry, of New Jersey, moved that a committee of one from each State be appointed to report business for the Convention.

Mr. Fry, of Pennsylvania, moved as an amendment, that the number of delegates to be allowed by the delegates of the several States on all questions not contested, which was carried.

The States were then called, and a delegate from each was named by his colleagues.

The Chairman of the Committee on Credentials reported, naming the names of two hundred and forty-one delegates. There were two delegates from Pennsylvania.

A delegate from Illinois moved that the report of the Committee on Credentials be accepted, except [illegible] referred to Pennsylvania and Ohio.

[illegible] against except[illegible] denounced platform making [illegible] new, calculated to [illegible] appealed to those who [illegible] report to withdraw it. He [illegible] conservative man; but he knew [illegible] was distasteful to his constituents [illegible] north. He also argued strongly [illegible] at this time.

After some debate, a motion to lay the resolution on the table was carried by a large majority, and then, [illegible], the Convention adjourned [illegible] morning.

The Anti-slavery Convention to nominate candidates for the Presidency and Vice Presidency met at Philadelphia on the 22d, pursuant to adjournment.

The proceedings were opened with prayer, and Mr. Cassey, of Pennsylvania, moved that the Convention proceed to make nominations for candidates for President of the United States, and Vice President, which was carried.

The previous question was then taken by yeas and nays, and decided in the affirmative by a vote in favor of 151 against 51.

Mr. A. Stewart, of Pennsylvania, then nominated Millard Fillmore, of New York, for President, and Andrew J. Donelson, of Tennessee, for Vice President.

Mr. Fly, of Maryland, nominated the Hon. Wm. H. Smith, of Alabama, for Vice President.

Mr. Perkins, of Connecticut, spoke at length, and insisted upon a restoration of the Missouri Compromise as the ultimatum of his State, and without that principle in the American platform, Connecticut could not and would not vote for the nominees of the Convention. Upon concluding, he ignited the delegations from the United States determined to stand upon the restoration of the Missouri Compromise to meet at 11 o'clock at the Merchants' Hotel, to organize a committee to call a National Convention. It was understood that Connecticut, New Hampshire, Massachusetts in part, Rhode Island, Ohio in part, Iowa, Illinois and Pennsylvania in part, were embraced in this secession. A great deal of time was consumed in trying to get at some plan for making the nominations, and finally it was concluded to make a general nomination of candidates for President by calling over the several States, with the intention, after a recess, to proceed to complete the nominations upon a plan to be agreed on.

The nominations as made were Millard Fillmore, of New York; John Bell, of Tennessee; R. F. Stockton, of New Jersey; George Law, of New York; Sam. Houston, of Texas; Erastus Brooks, of New York; Garret Davis, of Kentucky; Kenneth Raynor, of North Carolina; John M. Clayton, of Delaware.

Governor Johnson, of Pennsylvania, was also put in nomination, but he positively declined being considered a candidate before the Convention.

The Convention then adjourned to 5 o'clock.

Afternoon session.—The Convention in the morning having made the general nominations by calls of the several States, the first business of the afternoon session was to fix upon the plan of taking the vote for the final nomination. This was settled by taking the votes of the States according to their representation in the electoral college, the absentees to be represented and counted in proportion to the votes given by the delegates of any State voting for the respective nominees, where they differed in their preferences, and where the whole number voted for one candidate, to give the entire number of votes the State was entitled to for that candidate.

The roll was then called, and the result was as follows: For [illegible] Fillmore, of New York, 179; Geo. Law, of New York, 21; John McLean, of Ohio, 13; Garret Davis, of Kentucky, 10; Kenneth Raynor, 14; R. Houston, 4.

Millard Fillmore was announced as having received a majority of the whole number of votes cast, as the candidate for President of the United States.

On motion, the nomination was made unanimous, and a good round of cheers given for the candidate.

The Convention then proceeded to a nomination of a candidate for the Vice Presidency, and upon the first call, Andrew Jackson Donelson, of Tennessee, had 161 votes; Kenneth Raynor, 8; Percy Walker, 8; Gardiner, of Massachusetts, 12; Stewart, 2; when Mr. Donelson was announced as the candidate. His nomination was then declared unanimous. In several of the States the delegations voted entire for the nominees, and a large number went almost unanimously.

Great enthusiasm was exhibited after the nominations were completed, and a number of speeches were made, characterized by a strong conservative feeling, the question that so long distracted the deliberations of the body, and a fixed determination to adhere to the principles of the party, and to give a firm and candidates agreed upon.

Thirty-Fourth Congress—First Session.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 25, 1856.—Senate.—The chair laid before the Senate several executive communications—among them one from the Secretary of the Navy, in answer to a resolution calling for the record or journal of proceedings of the late Naval Board. He transmits a copy of the report of the Board, and states that it was not accompanied with any journal, record, or other papers; and, further, that the causes of the action of the Board in the several cases were not made known to the Department.

Mr. Mallory, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported a bill to amend the act entitled "An act to promote the efficiency of the Navy."

Mr. Mason submitted a resolution requesting the President of the United States, if not incompatible with the public interests, to communicate to the Senate all the correspondence which has taken place between this Government and that of Great Britain in regard to the enlistment of soldiers in the United States, to serve in the British army, accompanied by such evidence and documents as the President may deem proper, to show the connection of the agents or officers of the British Government with this violation of our laws and national rights.

Mr. Mason said that the statement of Lord Clarendon in the British Parliament in relation to this matter, had recently been received in the English newspapers, and unless the American side of the argument was also made known, the community would be misled. It was therefore important that all the correspondence should be at once made public.

Mr. Cass not only heartily agreed with every word which had fallen from his friend from Virginia, but would go further than he had gone. He hesitated not to say that he never saw a statement so utterly contrary to fact as that of Lord Clarendon. Mr. Cass showed, from the evidence on the trial of the British agents for the violation of our neutrality laws, that the complicity of the British Government could not be denied.

Mr. Mason, in reply to a question asked by Mr. Ynlee, said that if the British Government had offered to submit the settlement of the controversy with England to the interpretation of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, to the arbitration of a friendly power, he was ignorant of the fact having been communicated officially.

Mr. Crittenden thought that the British Government had made a sufficient apology with regard to the enlistment question.

After further debate, the resolution of Mr. Mason was agreed to, and the Senate soon after adjourned.

House of Representatives.—On motion of Mr. Thorington, the Committee on Military Affairs was instructed to inquire into the expediency and propriety of establishing a Military Academy and School of Practice, in the valley of the Mississippi.

Mr. Orr asked leave to offer a resolution that the Committee on Naval Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of immediately constructing fifteen war steamers, not exceeding sixteen hundred tons burden each, and that they report by bill or otherwise. No quorum voted, and the House adjourned.

Louisiana Items.

The Shreveport Gazette, of the 23dult., states that the river was then in good boating order and rising slowly. Large boats came up easily with heavy freights and descended with full loads of cotton.

The Gazette calls attention to an important fact in regard to Bayou Tone. It has increased recently to such an alarming extent that more than half the waters of Red river are directed through that channel into Bayou Pierre and Spanish Lake, and it is thought that if something be not soon done to remedy the evil, it will become a serious interruption of the navigation of the river.

We learn from the Louisiana Democrat, that on the 21st ult., the body of a man was found lying in a small creek about twelve miles from Alexandria; it was much mutilated, the clothes and flesh having been stripped and torn nearly off by wolves or wild hogs. A pocket-book was found with the body, in which were sundry memorandums and receipts for hotel bills. It appeared from these that deceased was Major Lewis Morris, late U.S. Consul at Campeachy, in Mexico, appointed by President Polk, in February, 1849, and that he once had a brother, now dead, living at Castor Ranch, near Victoria, Texas. He was an elderly man, his hair being quite gray.

The Thibodaux Minerva of Saturday has the following paragraphs:

We are favored with delightful spring weather. The trees are beginning to shoot forth their leaves; and beautiful green grass covers the lawn.

The Opelousas Railroad is now open to Bayou Boeuf, a distance of seventy-three miles from the depot at Algiers. The regular trains commence running over the line to-day.

The Lafourche is now rising rapidly. The steamers Dr. Batey and Fanny Sparhawk have resumed their trips, and will continue to ply regularly during the remainder of the season.

THE WILD MAN AGAIN.—A correspondent of the Caddo Gazette, writing under date of the 28th ult. from Parallita, Ark., on upper Red River, states that the cold during the present winter has been in that region the severest within the memory of man. The rivers were frozen solid, and the plains presented an unbroken sheet of snow. The writer relates the following story of an attempt to capture the famous wild man who has been so often encountered on the borders of Arkansas and Northern Louisiana:

In my travels I met a party from your country in pursuit of a wild man. They had struck his trail at a cane brake bordering on Brant Lake and the Sun Flower Prairie. I learned from one of the party that the dogs ran him to an arm of the lake which was frozen, but not sufficiently strong to bear his weight, which consequently gave way. He had however crossed, and the dogs were at fault. One of the party, mounted on a fleet horse, coming up, encouraged the dogs to pursue, but found it impossible to cross with his horse and concluded to follow the lake round until he could ascertain the direction taken by this monster of the forest. On reaching the opposite side of the bend, he was surprised to see something in the lake like a man breaking the ice with his arms, and hastened, under cover of the undergrowth to the spot where he expected him to come out. He concealed himself near the place, when he had a full view of him, until he reached the shore, where he came out and shook himself. He represents him as a stout, athletic man, about six feet four inches in height, completely covered with hair of a brownish cast about four to six inches long. He was well muscled and ran up the bank with the fleetness of a deer.

He says he could have killed him with his gun, but the object of the party being to take him alive, and hearing the horns of his comrades and the howling of the dogs on the opposite bank of the lake, he concluded to ride up and head him, so as to bring him to bay and then secure their prize. So soon, however, as the wild man saw the horse and rider he rushed frantically towards them and in an instant dragged the hunter to the ground and tore him in the most dreadful manner, scratching out one of his eyes and injuring the other so much that his comrades despair of the recovery of his sight, and biting large pieces out of his shoulders and various parts of his body. The monster then tore off the saddle and bridle from the horse and destroyed them, and holding the horse by the mane, broke a short piece of sapling, and mounting the animal started at full speed across the plains in the direction of the mountains, guiding the horse with his club. The person left with the wounded man informed me that the party was still in pursuit, having been joined by a band of friendly Indians and thought that if they could find a place in the mountains not covered with snow, or a canebrake in the vicinity to feed their horses, they might overtake him in a day or two.

A writer in the Baltimore Patriot relates a dangerous adventure on the Western plains, in which he says he killed a large buffalo bull. He then states what followed after rejoining his Indian companions:

While journeying campwards, I related to the party my adventure with the old bull. I of course finished it by stating I had slain him. Capt. Wolff looked at me with a most quizzical and incredulous smile, and emphatically remarked, in his broken English, Carvalho no kill buffalo. I insisted that I had left him dead on the field. At this the whole party laughed at me. I felt annoyed, but soon found that it was no use to contend with them. Weluchas, who was really my friend, and to whom I had rendered several services, such as bleeding him and curing him of fever, could not believe the statement I had made. Capt. Wolff, seeing me look offended, said, in these exact words: "When Capt. Wolff kill buffalo he cut out the tongue. Indian shoot buffalo, bring home tongue. Carvalho no bring buffalo tongue; he no kill buffalo." This was powerful argument, and the inference perfectly logical; and I soon changed the subject.

With all due deference to Mr. Carvalho, we must be permitted the privilege claimed by the Indians—to remain incredulous.

AN ANCIENT CHIEF.—A correspondent of the New York Times, writing from Omaha City, Nebraska Territory, says:

Yesterday the Omaha Indians made their appearance in town to get their flour, sugar, and coffee from the hands of their agent. About noon the scene was quite interesting, particularly so, I presume, to one who might never before have seen a gathering of an Indian tribe in their native costume. The ground was covered with snow, and they built fires around the town plat, and gathered in groups around them. Many were painted and bedecked in their Indian finery, presenting a wild yet interesting appearance. One of the chiefs we noted particularly—his age could not have been much under one hundred, and yet his step was as elastic and his carriage as erect as those of a man of twenty. He recollects the celebrated explorers, Lewis and Clark, and bears his certificate of chieftainship from Governor Wilkinson, of Louisiana; this country then belonged to the Territory of Louisiana. On his breast hung an old Jackson medal, from whose hands he received it in Washington.

Opelousas Railroad.

Messrs. Editors.—Permit me, through your valuable paper, to call the attention of the public to the completion of the New Orleans and Great Western Railroad, as far as the Bayou Boeuf, seventy-three miles from the city. What shall we say of the completion of that great enterprise thus far? It has already been spoken of, and all manner of speculations made on its progression and final completion. But let me ask if the people of New Orleans and the State at large, have sufficiently pondered its importance, not simply as a source of revenue to the stockholders but as an important agent in the development of the resources of the State? Have they sufficiently weighed the benefits arising to the city and to the districts of country penetrated by the railroad from the consummation of the enterprise? I really fear not. The benefits are not simply of a pecuniary character, although the last annual report of the President and Directors of the road have placed that beyond a doubt, but it is of a social and educational character. Let the time come, Messrs. Editors, and soon it will come, when the road has been completed as far as its first projected terminus—Washington—and the people of this State, who have built the road, will see what an immense stride they have taken in the first great work of internal improvements. It is not my intention to appear before you at this late day as an advocate of this great enterprise, but I own I can hardly restrain myself from giving vent to my feelings of real enthusiasm—after having been an humble participant in the meeting at the Bayou Boeuff on Saturday, March 1st. The meeting was appointed by the President and Board of Directors to celebrate the completion of the road to that point. Never, let me say, have I witnessed a meeting where there was more good feeling and harmony than on that occasion. Friends of the road, from New Orleans to St. Martin, were present, and not a single individual did your correspondent see who was not an enthusiastic supporter of the enterprise; but conspicuous among its friends "Toto vertice supra," stood the truly deserving President of the road, who by his modest and unassuming, yet energetic deportment, won a way to the confidence and respect of all who were present. Not one present seemed to entertain a single doubt of the ultimate and speedy completion of the enterprise, but on the contrary seemed from their expressed sentiments to wish it, "God speed."

Speeches we had, and all of them full of enthusiasm, but I would prefer leaving you to imagine their manner and diction than to attempt a report. Let it suffice to say that among the speakers were Dr. W. Brashear, Messrs. Brand, Baker, Strawbridge, Coffee, Pamphrey, Hyams, etc. After a handsome collation, the train employed to convey the delegation of friends and Directors of the enterprise, started on their return to the city. When it had arrived nearly at the Des Allemands station, some accident, not certainly known, threw the cars off the track. The promptitude, however, of the President and Vice President, whom we can not mention with two much praise, and officers of the road, soon procured a conveyance to the Bayou Des Allemands, where the train remained until nearly daylight, in consequence of the special relief-train having run over some six or seven cows, which had quietly taken their quarters on the track of the railroad, and thereby threw the locomotive off the track. It really seemed as if a full chapter of accidents was, on the occasion of the opening of the road to Bayou Boeuff, to be recorded; but, in justice to the passengers on the train, it must be said that not the first murmur was breathed, but all, knowing there was no blame to be attached to any one connected with the road, with remarkable patience, and even jollity, faced the disasters through. I am not drawing on my imagination, but speak the words of soberness and truth," and may such feelings always exist as this which promises not only confidence but speedy success. AMERICUS.

FROM HAYTI.—A recent letter from Port-au-Prince to the New York Evening Post, says:

Political matters stand about the same as on the 15th. No one seems to know what to expect. The Emperor is still on the lines, with the remains of his army—say some ten or twelve thousand men. We know but little of them, but we fear he will attempt to renew the expedition. Should he do so, we do not know what would come of it. But we most earnestly hope he will return; in which case, business, now moving very languidly, (though in its usual channels,) would revive immediately. The Emperor is probably the only man in the Empire who is in favor of this expedition, and if he can succeed in it against all this dead weight of opposition, he must be a very able man.

I am sorry to say it is still very sickly here. I never saw it worse. It has now (the last spell) lasted over fifteen months, and it seems as if it would never cease. Vessels are losing nearly half their crews. Hardly a man escapes the fever, who has not already had it. Four of the bork's men ran away, and went off by a vessel going out, just after she arrived; and this, naturally enough, is an incident of common occurrence. The two others, the second mate, cook, and two boys, have all been on shore sick. The two former died. The nursing and funeral expenses amounted to over $2,000, Haytien currency. Either the shore or harbor is almost certain death to an unacclimated stranger.

ANNEXATION OF THE MOSQUITO COUNTRY TO NICARAGUA.—By the arrival at Key West of the steamship Star of the West, the Charleston Courier has received dates from San Juan to the 19th ult. The Nicaraguan Minister of Foreign Relations had issued the following decree:

The Supreme Executive Power to the People.—The title of Nicaragua to the territory called Mosquito, including the port of San Juan del Norte, being notorious and incontestible:

And whereas H. L. Kinney pretends, in virtue of a purchase from Shepherd & Haley, to be owner of the said territories, the government of this Republic, in the exercise of its faculties,

Decrees—The rights, which the said Kinney pretends to claim in and upon the said territory, are null and void, and of no effect—the same being the property of the Republic of Nicaragua; and, consequently, every alienation made by the said Kinney is also void.

Art. 2. The said Shepherd & Haley, and Kinney, and all other persons claiming this unlawful acquisition, are declared guilty of offending against the integrity of Central America.

Art. 3. The Minister of Relations and the Interior is charged with the publication, execution and fulfilling of this decree.

Given in Grenada, 6th day of February, 1856.

PATRICIO RIVAS.

At about the time this decree was issued Col. Kinney visited Granada for the purpose of establishing an amicable understanding between himself and Gen. Walker, and even offered his services to the Republic. The General told him, however, that his antecedents precluded his holding an official position in Nicaragua, and he was soon after arrested as a prisoner to the State. He was afterwards released, and is said to be on his way to this city.

CURIOUS CASE OF HANGING.—We find, in the Detroit Advertiser the following account of a horrible accident that occurred at Lockport, St. Joseph county, Mich., on the 31st ult:

Miss Alice Wilkinson was in the rag-room of the paper-mill alone, when by some unaccountable accident her shawl and a woolen scarf, which she wore around her neck, were caught and wound around a perpendicular shaft, which was performing some sixty to seventy revolutions per minute. She was raised from the floor, and when discovered was suspended by the neck to the shaft. As soon as possible the motion of the shaft was stopped, and her body cut down, but life was extinct.

A SHARP GAME.—We learn that Fyler, who murdered his wife sometime since, near Syracuse, is playing a sharp game upon the counsel who defended him. It appears that the agreement between them was, in case Fyler was saved from hanging, his counsel was to have $4000. Of this amount $1000 was paid in cash, and the remainder secured by a mortgage on his farm. The counsel put in a plea of insanity, and Fyler was sent to the Lunatic Asylum. The mortgage is now about due, and the holders on proposing to foreclose it, were met with the defence that, if the maker of it was insane when the murder was committed, could he have been sane at the time of giving the mortgage? It looks as though the lawyers were caught this time.

THE WOLF CAUGHT.—We were bored a good deal by the incredulous for stating a week or two since, in the Metropolis, that a large gray wolf was then prowling about the immediate vicinity of the city. The facts have been completely verified by the capture of the "varmint." He was chased with dogs by James Acton on Monday, and finally brought to bay, whereupon a fool-hardy negro, who was along, rushed in upon the wolf and succeeded in capturing him alive. It was found that he had been captured when a pup, a collar placed upon his neck, which, as he grew, compressed his throat so that he had suffered greatly. He was very gaunt and weak when taken. PATENTS ISSUED IN 1855.—The whole number of patents issued in the year 1855, was 1,943. The number for additional improvements was 10, and number of re-issues 49. The number for designs, included in the total above stated, was 67. The Pen and Lever gives the residence of the parties to whom patents were issued during the year, as follows:

NEW MODE OF PROPULSION.—Capt. H. Whittaker has made a successful experiment on Lake Erie in the propulsion of vessels, and which is looked upon as a matter of considerable interest. The plan consists simply in the application of the common propeller to the sides of vessels instead of the stern, only employing those of smaller size, driven by light, high-pressure steam engines, and using one, two, three, or more propellers on each side, according to the size of the vessel. It is claimed that a greater degree of speed can be obtained by this than by the common method, with greater safety, less expense, &c. The "Baltic," which is the name of the steamer to which Capt. W.'s invention has been applied, is a full freight model of about nine hundred tons capacity, originally built a paddle-wheel boat.

NEW LINE OF STEAMERS.—A line of screw propellers has been formed to run between London, Cork and New York, the first of which, the Brenda, will leave the former place on the 1st of March, touching at Cork. On her return she will leave New York on the 1st of April.

☞ The best evidence that can be adduced in favor of the efficaciousness of Hoofland's German Bitters, prepared by Dr. C. M. Jackson, is the unprecedented demand for them from all parts of the Union; and, although there may be many compounds prepared and represented as being worthy of a liberal patronage, yet we feel constrained to remark, that the vast number of testimonials with which the worthy doctor has been honored, by persons of the highest character and respectability, who found it necessary to have recourse to his preparation, is testimony sufficiently conclusive, that a more effectual remedy for the almost immediate relief of those afflicted with that direful malady, Dyspepsia, has never been discovered. See advertisement. m4 1m

☞ A MASTERPIECE OUTDONE.—We have lately supposed Ayer's Cherry Pectoral was the Ultima Thule in its line, and that nothing had been or would be invented which could at all surpass it in its fine points of excellence as a medicine. But we are confidently assured, by those competent to judge on the subject, that Ayer's new Pills excel in high medical artistry even that widely celebrated embodiment of his skill. He has succeeded in making them not only pleasant to take, but powerful to cure the large class of complaints which require a purgative remedy.—Lancaster Argus, Ky.

COURSE OF INSTRUCTION.

The course of study and text books used will be furnished in catalogue, which will be immediately forwarded on request.

IMPROVEMENTS.

Notwithstanding the apparatus, chemical, philosophical and astronomical, is equal to that of any similar institution in our country, it will be still further increased within the next three months by an additional instrument, of $600.

The grounds of the Seminary are to be greatly extended and beautifully ornamented.

The Library will be greatly enlarged.

Though the Fossil and Mineral Cabinet is already of fair extent, arrangements are in process of rapid fulfillment for greatly enlarging it.

For the carrying out of the above improvements and additions to our facilities, the Principal of the Seminary now holds a solvent subscription of more than $2,000. All the improvements promised will be completed by the 1st of July.

Steamboat for Sale.

On the 5th day of April next the steamer R. FULTON, of the undersigned will be sold at public auction, at his landing on Pascagoula River. The boat is well calculated for peddling, and has been built with a particular view to this purpose. She is 55 feet long by 8 wide, and has a 2½ horse power portable engine and boiler, occupying on the floor only 5 by 8 feet. Her speed is from 8 to 7 miles per hour, with 50 lbs steam, and her boiler is capable of carrying 100 lbs. She burns but one cord of wood per week, and requires but two men to run her.

Good Medicines.

It is estimated that AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL and CATHARTIC PILLS have done more to promote the public health than any other one cause. There can be no question that the Cherry Pectoral has by its thousand on thousand cures of colds, coughs, asthma, influenza, bronchitis, &c., very much reduced the proportion of deaths from consumptive diseases in this country. The Pills are as good as the Pectoral, and will cure more complaints.

Everybody needs more or less purging. Purge the blood from its impurities. Purge the bowels, liver, and the whole visceral system from obstructions. Purge out the diseases which fasten on the body to work its decay. But for diseases, we should die only of old age. Take antidotes early, and thrust it from the system ere it is yet too strong to yield.

Ayer's Pills do thrust out disease, not only while it is weak, but when it has taken a strong hold. Read the astounding statements of those who have been cured by them of dreadful scrofula, dropsy, ulcers, skin diseases, rheumatism, neuralgia, dyspepsia, internal pains, bilious complaints, heartburn, headache, gout, and many less dangerous but still threatening ailments, such as pimples on the face, worms, nervous irritability, loss of appetite, irregularities, dizziness in the head, colds, fevers, dysentery, and, indeed, every variety of complaints for which a purgative remedy is required.

These are no random statements, but are authenticated by your own neighbors and your own physicians.

Try them once and you will never be without them.

Price, 25 cents per box; 5 boxes for $1.

Prepared by Dr J. C. Ayer, chemist, Lowell, Mass., and sold by all respectable druggists every where.

A New Building Material.

This material is not surpassed for cheapness, strength, durability and beauty. It strongly resembles polished marble or cut stone. It is, in fact, artificial stone, produced by a combination simply of common sand and lime, subjected to great pressure in moulds to the shape and size required, without burning, after which a gradual state of crystalization takes place. Presses are now in the city for manufacturing. Specimens may be seen and all particulars had from the agent,

COLLEGE EDIFICE.

A large and commodious building, planned by the best architectural talent, and erected in the most substantial manner, is now nearly ready for the reception of pupils. Feeling the great importance of space and comfort for the educational and domestic interests of the institution, the Trustees have spared neither pains nor expense to meet the demands of utility and beauty in the construction of the edifice.

EDUCATIONAL FACILITIES.

A new and valuable apparatus has been purchased for the College. Cabinets of minerals, fossils and curiosities have also been provided. Stated courses of lectures on science, art and literature will be delivered.

OPENING.

The first term of the college will commence on the second Monday of February, 1856.

TERMS.

Board, including washing, fuel and lights, will be furnished at $12 50 per month. Tuition fees will be at the ordinary rates.

REMARKS.

The present circular is merely designed to give notice of the approaching opening of the college, and to afford a general outline of its plans and objects. The public may rest assured that the Trustees, in co-operation with the Faculty, will use all proper and possible means to render this institution worthy of a cordial and generous support. The remaining officers of the Faculty will be elected as soon as circumstances will allow, and it is confidently expected that in a short time the college will be fully organized in all the departments of a thorough education.

Acknowledging with gratitude the earnest and liberal sympathy which this enterprise has so generally received and thankful to that kind Providence which has conducted it to its present stage of promising usefulness, the Trustees have now the happiness to announce the near fulfilment of their long-cherished wishes. The location of the college is healthy and agreeable as could be desired. It is perfectly accessible, and yet sufficiently retired for the purposes of a moral, intellectual and womanly culture. Its expenses will be made as moderate as practicable, and a faithful, parental guardianship will be exercised over all who may be committed to the charge of the institution.

They are of the richest quality of alluvial soil, unsurpassed in fertility by any lands in the South, and fully capable of producing from one and a half to two bales, or fifty to sixty bushels of corn to the acre. They lie near the Ouachita and Boeuf rivers—good navigable streams—and likewise in convenient distance of the route of the Vicksburg, Shreveport and Texas Railroad, now in course of construction and hastening to a rapid completion. MONEY—ITS USES AND ABUSES.

A LECTURE,

Delivered by Col. THORNTON before the Literary Club of Montgomery, Ala., at its winter session of 1855-56.

Money, with some men, is their God, and they fear and worship no other; with others, their first and only love; and with a few, a confidential friend and servant.

The Scriptures have been quoted as denouncing money as the root of all evil, but we do not so understand them. St. Paul, the most learned and distinguished of all the Apostles, and whose epistles are so much beyond the wisdom of this world, speaks of the love of money as the root of all evil. It is the love of money that he condemns, not money itself; the true use of which he would have regarded as an evidence of true morality. The inordinate love of any object is sinful, and there is a just proportion due all things which merit our regard, that should form the true standard.

The error into which many fall is, that if a little of a good thing is good, more is still better. And in nothing do we see this more exemplified than in the continued, never ending stretching and grasping after money.

We have occasionally seen a man who, in the acquisition of wealth, up to a certain point, has been happy, and everything around him bore testimony to the propriety of his life and the fitness of his condition. He had reached the full measure of his prosperity. But, like a man at an advanced maturity, who had attained his full maximum of health and strength, failing to govern a constantly increasing appetite, the very health that he enjoyed but facilitated the fatal apoplexy or paralysis that consequently awaited him. So with him who, with increasing hunger and thirst after money, labored day and night to satisfy its constant gnawings: with increasing wealth came increasing and absorbing cares; decay followed; the scene very soon changed; riches increased, but the greater wealth of contentment departed, and he who once enjoyed true prosperity, lived but to die a martyr to overgrown wealth. The surfeit of the epicure is more to be dreaded than the hunger of the poor man. And who regards money in its extended representative character as the great assayer of the world's goods, and the immediate agent of Him who created all things?

All that lies buried in, or that is produced by the earth; that floats upon the waters or flies in the air; the products of the seasons, the arts and sciences, and the labors, genius and inventive powers of man, are within its reach and subject to its control.

Let the rich man look abroad and give thanks to the Giver of All Good who has honored him as a steward by placing the means within his power to raise the fallen, to direct the wayward steps of the young, to support the decline of old age, solace the broken hearted and afflicted, and cheer the hearth of the desolate. For these purposes, and the development of the industry and prosperity of a people, the use of money is a study worthy the consideration of all, and he who practically affords its best illustration is a philosopher, and worthy of our highest commendation.

But in this teeming, busy world, how few who regard it as a subject of intellectual and conscientious investigation. The agriculturalist, the merchant, the mechanic, the author and professional man, all give the most faithful exercise of their faculties to their different pursuits, and the accumulation of wealth as a primary or secondary object; but, after years of labor and sacrifice have brought wealth into their possession, who of them takes time to reflect upon the great element of power and usefulness in his hands?

Does he even comprehend the tenure by which he holds it? That his ownership is a qualified one; that for a short time he is the mere trustee of Him who has appointed him for a season one of earth's treasurers; that, whether miser or spendthrift, it will soon be another's, and he passed on to his final account?

Every man will admit a direct accountability for the exercise and improvement of his talents. Money is a talent, and for the use of which he is alike responsible. Neither man nor money should be idle, but both be at work, and that kind yielding the most profitable return and conferring the greatest good upon the community. Too often when money has been acquired by those who have labored hard for it, it is considered by them as having performed, when it came into their hands, the last task assigned it by Providence, and, like the bills of the Bank of England, when once received at its counter, never again to be issued. By such it is handed over to an old lady named Prudence, bearing a most sisterly resemblance to an old man of the name of Avarice, and whose chief knowledge consists in the use of a key that only locks; and, when once that key is turned, money may be heard to exclaim, "Farewell world!" and remains a closely guarded prisoner until the decease of its ever watchful jailor.

There are some men who have never opened their eyes wide enough to behold the world as it is, but seem to have shut one eye, or regarded it with a squint, or looked around a corner, or through a fog—some, through a bottle, and others at all times and places except the right standpoint or true light. Some, with light step, dance cheerily through the world to the sound of music, and all is revelry and gaiety; while others commenced the journey with a model face for an undertaker, which gradually lengthened as they advanced, and were never seen to smile. If a joke by accident entered their head, its instant death or congestion of the brain was the consequence, and in either event it had performed a journey to that bourne from which no such traveler ever returned. To the wise it is a world of realities; to the thoughtless, a panorama, of which they seem disinterested spectators.

Some, by the eye of faith, catch a glimpse beyond it; others never open their eyes to the scenes immediately around them.

There is, however, an object in this world, upon which the countless multitudes passing along its checquered scenes all cast their longing eyes. It is known of all, and so beloved that, possessing it, they care not for aught beside. So fascinating is it to the eye, that when once its gaze is fixed upon it, it never relaxes; and while it increases in magnitude, all other objects diminish and become obscure, and all we see, hear, smell or touch, but adds to its dominion over us; for avarice, unlike other vices, gains strength with our age. Let us revert, for a moment, to the history of such a worshiper, or rather, slave, of Mammon.

In early life he regarded money as the one thing needful. It became a passion; and in his love it had no rival. He worshipped it with Pagan devotion. In his case it was blind idolatry; it had the power of reproducing itself, and if it had any other quality or virtue, he cared not for it, and sought it not. From small beginnings he soon accumulated a capital, which he regarded and watched over as the philosophers' stone, or elixer of life. Its daily chink was to his attuned ear the music of the spheres, and its sight and touch the only sensations of which his heart was capable. Like Justice, he held within his hands a pair of balances, in which he placed all the friendships, all the virtues, and all the charities of life; but, unlike Justice, his eyes are open wide, and within all their ken he can find no coin so small which, when placed in the opposite scale, does not outweigh them all. With a calculating eye, and the talons of a bird of prey, he looks around upon his fellow-creatures but as his victims, and the more defenceless their condition, the greater his rapacity and the more relentless his attack. His pity is that of the wolf for the lamb. If a man ever passed through his hands in a trade, years might pass away, but to that man the recollection of that trade, never; for, like a twinge of the rheumatism, it went to the bone, and like it remained—it penetrated the joints and marrow. How could he be liberal to another, for he was worse than an Egyptian taskmaster to himself. His hands knew no other touch than labor, and he had no time to look upon sun, moon or stars; for his daily exercise was to grasp and hold fats, and hold fast and grasp again. These were his only tactics, and with these he gained his victories and counted his spoils.

Newton, with an eye in unison with the beauties of nature, and comprehending its laws, discovered in the fall of an apple the great principle of gravitation; but this man had only looked upon gold, and studied that philosophy which taught that in it alone centered all gravity, the smallest atom of which, when placed in his scales, outweighed the universe, and for which, having no use in the future, he was ready to barter the treasures of eternity. Blind to all objects but the accumulation of wealth, he cannot see himself as others see him, and has no conception of the artificial poverty which surrounds him.

The greatest failure upon earth, and the object least worthy of respect, is the poor rich man; without the advantages belonging to either character, he is the embodiment of the miseries of both. Paradoxical as it may sound, he is debtor and creditor to himself—has a long unsettled account for both food and raiment, and has literally cheated himself inside and out. To satisfy his avarice he has for years breathed the damp, unwholesome air of an old dilapidated dwelling, expecting a coming opportunity of getting his neighbor's at a sacrifice, that he has long coveted. His whole existence and wants having become artificial, he has no longer any sympathy with nature—its green fields, mountains and valleys, like its oceans and rivers, he can only regard as they may be made to add to his increasing wealth. To borrow a comparison, he has no idea of the sun in the heavens beyond the saving it is to the world in gas, nor of the human heart but as a pound of flesh, which, as a sort of mechanical contrivance, something like the pendulum of a clock, counts the seconds and keeps one going. He is in debt to every generous impulse of his nature, and the probability of payment has become so hopeless that one after another they have all deported, and his form is all that remains of what was once a man.

Money is intrinsically but of little value—less than most of the other metals; but varied attributes, its power to supply all wants, to atone for all defects, to visit all places, and by its magic touch to make the property of another ours, gives it such an instinctive life, power to discriminate and facility to execute, that we almost come to regard it as a part of our being. It procures for us the garments of infancy, supplies our wants through life, accompanies us in all our journeyings, shrouds us in death, and secures to us a final resting place with the dead.

But to love money for itself, to feast upon its mere possession, regardless of its great moral power, is to take the lifeless statue of the man, the shadow for the substance, the agent for the principal, a stone for bread; it is to be morally blind, mistaking the means for the ends. As well might we take the telescope which reveals the heavens for the heavens themselves. The man who regards the mere ownership of money as its chief good, is no longer a man, but a slave, who has sold himself, and his wealth is but his price. Such a man and his money enjoy a kind of a Siamese twin-existence—sever the cord that binds them together, and whatever there is of soul in either will at once depart.

Of all aristocracy, pride or vanity, that which is alone based upon the possession of wealth is the most contemptible and unworthy. And how abject is the condition of that man without genius, cultivated intellect or virtue, who, standing aloof, as it were, from his fellows, prides himself upon the bare fact that he is the owner of one hundred thousand dollars or more, and, like a golden calf, as he is, from that cause alone claims the worship of the poor. Why, dednot the hundred thousand, and naught remains. His epitaph has already been written:

"Here lies one that was born and cried,
Lived several years, and then—and then—he died!"

We occasionally discover a wonderful unity between money and the affections, and have heard marvellous stories of the achievements of Cupid and his bow; but his most miraculous feats have always been performed with golden pointed arrows. These have a telegraphic swiftness and electrical power, and none could withstand the battery from which they were discharged. By means of this golden battery the decrepitude of age has been made to vanish with the speed of lightning. In its destructive force against opposing obstacles it combines the power of the Lancaster gun with the precision of the Minnie rifle, and its range is without limit. At the summons of an old lady of three score years and ten, whose stoop, by means of its transforming power, has been metamorphosed into a Grecian bend, and her cough of forty years into an angel's whisper, the stout heart of a young bachelor, whose form surpassed our beau ideal of Hercules himself, has by its galvanic shock melted within him, and he who might have wrestled with Sampson has bowed the knee to this aged but more successful conqueror than Joan of Arc.

And, what is somewhat remarkable in the history of the world, men of military fame have been among those most suddenly brought into such captivity, practicing with the greatest dispatch that very popular axiom, that "discretion is the better part of valor," and happily illustrating by their example the poetic idea that "None but the brave deserve the fair."

This surrendering of discretion on the part of men accustomed to danger would seem inexplicable, were it not for the fact that the soldier, from his greater courage, is in the habit of carrying his heart in one hand, and nothing in the other—but his sword. We will not attempt to invade the sanctity and bliss of love so intense, nor impugn the ardor of youth when confiding in the prudence of age. To speak in the language of flowers, without being skilled in that science by which they sometimes give expression to love, we should think such an union of winter and spring aptly represented the "sere and yellow leaf" of an old cabbage sweetly linked to an early jonquil.

We fear that not only is the stout-hearted civilian and renowned warrior sometimes stricken down by this terrible weapon, but that even tender hearted woman is sometimes made the object of its resistless attack.

Woman is priceless. She may be in poverty, but the heart of a virtuous woman is a pearl above all price. We will not attempt her eulogy, but He whose gift was that of wisdom has said, "She openeth her mouth with wisdom, and in her tongue is the law of kindness."

"She looketh well to her household, and eateth not the bread of idleness. Her children rise up and call her blessed; her husband also, and he praiseth her."

We praise her excellence and admire her virtues; but she is human, and perfection does not belong to fallen humanity.

Money may represent and purchase property, and transport its owner around the globe, but there its agency stops; it cannot personate man. God alone made man. And let not woman seek for nor place her affections upon an object less worthy than him for whom she was created an helpmeet.

In the selection of a husband there must be no arithmetic introduced—so much for the husband, so much for his riches; the former bearing the homopathic proportion of a tear drop to the ocean.

If the choice is presented between a full grown, real man, one of nature's nobility, and the mere semblance of a man, whose sole fortune is outside of himself, (gold and silver and the things that perish,) let her at once renounce the shadow for the substance, the imitation for the real; assured that there is but one thing on earth to be given in exchange for the heart of a woman, and that is, the heart of an honest man. We look to woman for purity; let the sincerity of her love honor and adorn the nature with which she is endowed.

The professed fortune-hunter is such a stereotyped character as to be scarce worth a daguerreotype sketch, much less a portrait. We may take a passing glance at him, as we would at some newly-painted railroad hotel, while rapidly moving along the road, and which he very much resembles—a good deal of exterior and very little interior—a good deal outside and very little inside. In common parlance, he is too lazy to work, and too proud to beg. He is a walking illustration of the "misplaced confidence" of some confiding tailor, and the genius of some victimized hatter; and, however successful they may have been with other customers, he is more than a match for both. Like a loafer who had lost his clothes, he was ready for the next fashion; and, however expert the barber may have been at shaving, he was still faster at skinning; for his mode of payment of both his patrons was like the financial operation of that unsuspecting woman who sent her little girl to the store-keeper for change of a dollar, with the remark that she would send the dollar next week.

Having nothing else to do, he is daily engaged in contemplating his charms and graces, estimating the value of his handsome person and the sincerity of his affections—in dollars and cents. He is convinced that he is no ordinary character—that he is greatly needed by somebody—puts himself on the market ready to be knocked off to the highest bidder; the bid and not the bidder being the only item considered in the transaction. It is true, he becomes the property of some fair purchaser, but was as much sold and bought as my lady's lapdog or any other goods and chattels. At the ceremony of such a marriage there may have been the body of a man, but the soul, if he ever had any, had long since deserted, and all within was vacant. Knock where his heart should beat, and listen to the empty echo. Knock higher, at his head, where his brains should be, and hear the reply so often given at a fashionable door, "No one at home."

Let us not sell what does not belong to us. Our souls and bodies are not our own, and can only be disposed of by that Omnipotent Power which created them.

Henceforth be it understood that husbands and wives are no longer to be considered as items, or subjects of quotation in the money market, and that the value of either cannot be computed or paid for in gold and silver.

(To be continued.)

CONVENTS.

The people of this country are well satisfied that young females induced to enter convents at a time of life when their judgment is feeble and their imagination strong, are compelled to remain in those strong-built places against their will. That few of them would remain, if permitted to exercise free volition, is a certainty founded on all we know of human nature. It is useless to argue about it. The situation of these women is utterly unnatural, and must be intolerably irksome until the enfeebled mind loses its power to struggle against misery. Moreover a number of nuns have from time to time escaped. Alas! that this word should in this country be the only one applicable to the departure of a woman from a house where she has been detained without legal authority. The story told by these is invariably the same. They have all become disgusted with convent life; they have all been eagerly desirous of departure; they have all been carefully watched by their keepers; and they all declare that many, unable to escape, are pining miserably in their cloister. Supposing that the real purpose of these houses is religious, admitting all that the priests would have us believe of their own superhuman purity, yet it is horrible that women should be kept in these places after they have found out their mistake in going into them. What ground can the priest have for detaining them when no longer nuns in heart? Is it not apparent that if all was right in these places the priests would expel every woman that was apostate in soul? Is it reasonable to suppose that they would detain by force, as a bride of the Deity, a young woman whose heart was utterly unfaithful to her vows? It is plain enough that the priests have other than religious views in relation to convents.

But again: Much has been revealed of the abominations practiced in these places. It has been proclaimed to the world, and by Catholics themselves, that houses of religion where young women are under the control of Catholic priests, are liable to be perverted into places of shocking licentiousness and most unmitigated despotism over the hearts, minds and persons of the nuns. In Catholic countries, again and again, ecclesiastical authorities have searched into these matters, and proclaimed the horrible wickedness of the nunneries. In our own country, now and then, a wretched woman has contrived to make known to the American people the fact that foreign ecclesiastics are repeating in the convents the conduct charged to them in Europe. An American, a clergyman of the Episcopal Church, who recently went over to Rome, and became a priest, while his wife went into a convent, was so shocked by the abominations which he witnessed, and by the attempts made upon the virtue of his wife, that he withdrew from the Church and published an appeal to the world against its wickedness.

It is not at all necessary to adduce facts to confirm our readers in their suspicions of the wrong done to American women in convents. No body of men could have unrestrained power over women without abusing it; and of all men, the Catholic priests, from the nature of their relation to society, are the least likely to be blameless under these circumstances. "Opportunity is the most powerful temptation." When opportunity is continual, unrestrained, unfelt, secrecy secured, exposure fully guarded against, it needs no record to inform us of the consequences.

These women are not under the protection of the law. The law has no knowledge of them; they have no access to it except at the will of those who keep the keys of their prisons. The law provides that the wife shall have protection against her husband. Close as is the relationship by law established, it is not as close as the relationship of the woman to the law. She may at any time go before a magistrate and make complaint against her husband, and the magistrate will do her justice, even though he send the husband to prison. The father has not uncontrolled authority over the daughter. The law shields her against harshness. Were it known that a husband kept his wife locked up, or a father his daughter, an officer of the law would soon inquire into the cause. The woman would have leave to speak, and to speak to those able and ready to redress her wrongs.

The State itself is not at liberty to keep a female in prison without permitting inspection by the Grand Jury, that great vigilance committee which always watches over personal liberty and right. But what a husband may not do, what a father may not do, what the State may not do, is freely accorded to foreign priests that we know not of, except that in the land whence they came men's hearts are sick and their souls weary because of them. The priests may keep the nuns locked up, nobody interferes; they offer them the grossest insults, inflict upon them the utmost outrage, and the poor victim cannot make complaint. No Grand Jury enters portals, which, once closed upon the nuns, shut them in from all the devices of society for the protection of person. When a nun is removed, nobody knows it: when she dies, nobody necessarily knows it; there are no coroner's inquests in nunneries.

We do not wish legal impediments thrown in the way of those who may choose to enter convents. It is a free country. If they are unfortunate enough to make choice of a life so unnatural and irreligious, the law may not interfere. But the law should provide that none but the willing shall enter those gloomy abodes, and it should take care that none but the willing should remain there. All this can be accomplished without trenching upon any religious right.—Philadelphia Sun.

THE EARLY BAPTIST PREACHERS.

The following extract from an article in the Examiner, written by Rev. Dr. Wayland, contains remarks on the subject of preaching which well deserve attention, especially as coming from one who holds such eminent rank as an intellectual and literary man.

There was formerly a difference between Baptist and other evangelical ministers, although both believed essentially the same doctrines. In attempting to explain this fact, I referred to the education of the larger part of them, and to the mode in which they enter the ministry. This led me to consider some of the aspects of written and unwritten discourse. I might easily pursue this subject further, but I can tarry upon it no longer. I will leave it by recommending to every Baptist minister the reading of the memoir of the late Dr. A. Alexander, by his son, Dr. Alexander, of this city. It is a most interesting biography of one of the best men and most remarkable preacher of our times. So thoroughly had he trained himself to unwritten discourse, that although a voluminous author, he declared that, were he on trial for his life, he would rather make his defence without writing or even meditating a plea, but merely by possessing himself thoroughly of the principles of the case, and leaving everything else to the excitement of the occasion.

The circumstances to which I have referred will serve to explain the peculiarity and the success of our early ministers.

In the first place, they were taken from the middle walks of life, adding to the scanty education of their youth such acquisitions as they were able, under great difficulty, to secure. They were in general very desirous of improvement, and availed themselves of every opportunity that presented itself for gaining knowledge. One of them, who settled early in what was then the wilderness of New York, has told me how he snatched the hours and half-hours of morning and evening for mental improvement, while he was laboring to clear up his farm. As the country settled around him, he was a constant attendant on the courts of justice, for the purpose of learning how lawyers planned out an idea, and of gaining from their example ease and self possession in delivery. With this kind of training it is obvious that the language of these preachers was not the English of books, but the English of common conversation, rendered sober and solemn by the thoughts to which it gave utterance. This is really the language by which the masses of men are to be moved. You may explain a doctrine or enforce a duty in so refined and eloquent English that not one in ten of a common audience will understand you. Men never enter fully into the conceptions of a speaker unless there is a common medium of communication between them. The more perfectly this medium is common to both parties, the more ready and perfect is the transmission of the thought. The common people heard Christ gladly. The apostles were observed to be unlearned and common men, while they were filling Jerusalem with their doctrine. Suppose John Bunyan had been senior wrangler at Cambridge, could he ever have written the Pilgrim's Progress? He might then have written a Paradise Lost for scholars, but could he have written a book for all ages, all conditions, and for men of all nations and tongues and languages?

It was the plain and honest Anglo-Saxon that our fathers used in preaching. Hence the people flocked to hear them, because they heard in their own language the wonderful works of God. They left the pulpits where the truth was adorned with every grace of classic eloquence, which they could neither understand nor feel, and came to attend upon ministrations which uttered what seemed to them new truth, while it was really the very truth which they had heard oftentimes before. The difference was, it was in the one case clothed in the English of books, in the other in the English of conversation.

Again: It is obvious that men accustomed for years to the ordinary avocations of life lose the capacity for following a very closely connected series of reasoning. The mind grows weary, some link in the chain is lost, and then follows indistinctness of connection, so that the end is irrevocably severed from the beginning. I remember once to have heard a very able man deliver a discourse, admirable throughout, perfectly conclusive and elegantly written, to an audience of common and plain people, with here and there an educated man. He saw by their countenances that he had utterly failed to fix the attention of the mass, and he was mortified. "I might," says he, "just as well have delivered a lecture on noses." And he was right. The discourse gratified highly a very small portion of the audience, while to the remainder it was almost unintelligible. Had he delivered the same ideas in the language of simple, earnest conversation, breaking up the continuity here and there by illustrations which reflected light on its more abstract principles, he would have carried with him his whole audience. The ten or fifteen who admired the style as it was delivered would have expressed less admiration, but the truth would have been as strongly fixed in their minds, and the eight or nine hundred would have been doubly interested. Which of them is the best method of preaching the gospel?

This was the advantage of the early Baptist preachers. They delivered their messages in such a manner that everybody understood them. But, besides this, they were not often enticed into the fields of literature or science. They occupied themselves mainly in the study of the Scriptures. From the Bible they drew all their illustrations; from the Bible they proved all their doctrines. Their language in prayer was almost wholly the language of the Scriptures. This gave great point to all their sayings, and it placed them within the regions of thought with which all their audience was familiar. They rarely quoted from learned authorities, for the simple reason that they did not know of their existence. They never attempted to prove a doctrine of revelation by an appeal to natural religion, or to the necessary relation of things. They had not read John Foster's Essay, and therefore had no fear of creating an "aversion in men of taste for evangelical religion." They believed the Bible to be the word of God, and they felt themselves called upon to preach it, and to quote it as an ultimate truth, though it seemed to the Jews as a stumbling block and to the Greeks foolishness. They did not gain the mighty and the noble, but they roused the masses. They were reviled by the tens, but the hundreds and thousands were converted unto God.

Later from Texas.

INDIAN DEPREDATIONS AND MURDERS.

By the steamship Charles Morgan, which arrived on Saturday, we have later dates from Galveston and interior Texas.

The Indians have commenced operations for the spring in a very energetic manner on the Upper Guadalupe and in the valley of the Cibolo, stealing and killing horses and cattle, and committing murder when opportunity offers. A letter of the 22d from Cibolo, complains bitterly that a rich and well settled locality within a few miles of two large towns, (San Antonio and New Braunfels,) one the head-quarters of U. S. troops—should be in continual peril from marauding bands of savages.

A letter from the same vicinity says:

The Indians seem to be in a state of madness and starvation at the same time. From some young and tolerably fat colts they cut out the best pieces of meat, while they had killed other animals, far more suitable for food, and then left them entire, thinking, perhaps, they were too much on the lean order. Our stock at this time looks very bad on account of the severe weather and bad pasture. The loss we sustain from the Indians is more severely felt because they are sure to pick out the fattest and finest animals that have been fattened on corn, and these they often take from near the houses.

The Texan has the following:

On yesterday, Wednesday, the 27th inst., the glad tidings came to our city, that the citizens on the Cibolo, who left in pursuit of the Indians that appeared there on the 21st, killing cattle and driving off horses, had overtaken four of them in the vicinity of the Rundera Pass, and had a combat with them, killing three and severely wounding the other, and took from them some fifty horses. We regret also to learn that three of our citizens, engaged in the combat, were wounded, and one, probably dangerously.

Two companies of soldiers, who started in pursuit, a little later, were unable to follow the trail in consequence of a heavy fall of rain, and returned.

The Texan, of the 28th, has the following intelligence of a later occurrence:

We stop the press to announce that two persons were murdered yesterday near the Cedar Brake, on the Cibolo, and only eighteen miles from San Antonio. Mr. Hill, at whose house these murders were committed, is now in our office, and from him we have the particulars. It seems that Mr. Hill, Mr. Brown, and two others, left the house of Hill about four o'clock yesterday to visit the spot, a short distance from the house, where a German boy killed an Indian a few days ago, an account of which we have given in another article. The Indians, it seems, were watching them, and as soon as they left, came to the house of Hill, and shot a negro boy, some eight years old, and the mother of the boy, who was the only other person, saved her life by crawling under the house. Mr. Robinson and a brother of Mr. Hill were at work in the garden about 100 yards from the house. They surrounded them, and pierced Robinson with a lance. Hill barely escaped by running to a creek near by and swimming across. The Indians then plundered the house, taking away all its valuables, and destroying what they could not carry; then taking four mules and two American horses, they departed.

As soon as Mr. H. brought the news to our city, Gen. Smith in one hour had a company in pursuit of the savages, who were six in number. Three of the arrows, that were cut and pulled out from Robinson and the boy, are now on our desk before us as we write. Two of them we believe to be Comanche arrows, and the other of the Tonqueways. We expect every moment to hear of more depredations and murders.

Citizens, to the rescue, your families are in danger!

Fifteen Days Later from California.

Earthquake in San Francisco.

By the Prometheus we have received papers from San Francisco to the 20th ult. The Alta California of that date has the following general summary of events:

A violent shock of an earthquake was felt in this city on the morning of the 18th. The people were aroused from their sleep, and hundreds rushed frantically in the streets in their night clothes. The shock lasted some twenty-five seconds, and was preceded by a rumbling sound like distant thunder. No material damage was done to property. The fire wall fell from one brick store, the plastering was more or less cracked in a good many buildings, and in some instances slight fissures are created in brick walls. A great many timid people were terribly frightened for a time, but they were soon led to believe that there was no danger. It was the most severe shock of which we have any account in San Francisco.

The report of the Engineer who made the preliminary survey of a railroad from Sacramento to Benicia, has just been published. The distance is ninety miles, and it is estimated that the road can be constructed for $3,000,000. The first division—twenty-two miles—of the "Sacramento Valley Railroad" is now completed, and a grand celebration is to take place on the 22d, at the new town of Folsom, the present terminus of the road. This road is to be continued on to other towns in the mining region, and promises to be the nucleus for a net-work of railways connecting the principal towns of the mines with the river cities, and ultimately with San Francisco. Public expectation is high in regard to these enterprises, and now that speculation in real estate has ceased, it is not improbable that heavy investments may be made in railroads. Capital is now rapidly accumulating in this country, and seeking investment in any kind of enterprises that promise profit. A survey is about being made for a railroad from Stockton to San Francisco, and a project for a railroad from Marysville to Benicia is also exciting a good deal of attention at the former place.

Much indignation has been manifested in this city in consequence of the recent appointment of J. Y. McDuffie to the post of U. S. Marshal for the Northern District of California. The party named was for years a professional gambler in Marysville, and it is supposed the President has been imposed upon, or he would not have made such an appointment. Strong petitions for his removal, signed without distinction of party, will be forwarded to the President; so strong, indeed, that a removal will be almost certain to follow.

Six persons were fined $2,350 in one of our courts, on the 11th instant, for keeping gambling houses. We have a very stringent law for the suppression of gambling, and whenever it is enforced, it has a most salutary effect. This vice is gradually diminishing in this city and, indeed, throughout the States, and of late gambling is seldom witnessed in public places.

There is nothing from Oregon later than the news received here on the 5th, and forwarded in our evening edition by the steamer which sailed on that day. In our columns, however, will be found much fuller details from that quarter. It appears that the Governor of Oregon has already issued $4,000,000 in scrip, to defray the expenses of calling out volunteer soldiers to fight the Indians. This war promises to prove a very expensive affair to the General Government.

The schooner Pege arrived at this port from Japan on the 14th, with a miscellaneous cargo, which it is believed will find a good market here. She brought news of a violent earthquake which took place at Jeddo on the 11th November, and destroyed 100,000 houses and 30,000 people. This may be an exaggerated account, although it was obtained at Simoda from the Dutch Interpreter. A great deal of interest is felt here in the Japanese trade, and we shall continue to send an occasional ship there to procure cargoes, as well as to try to introduce some of our "notions" into that mysterious country.

Accidents in the mining region have been quite common. Caving in of embankments, burying from one to six or eight persons at a time, have been of frequent, almost of daily, occurrence. Such accidents in some cases are doubtless unavoidable, but may often be attributed to carelessness on the part of operatives, who, habituated to danger, have become foolhardy.

On the 12th, we were called to record a sorrowful casualty; two women and two children, while riding with some others in a carriage by the margin of a small lake, near this city, were drowned by the overturning of the carriage in the water.

The Alta California has a long account of the effects of the earthquake and the phenomena attending it, from which we extract the following:

It occurred at about twenty-three minutes past five o'clock on Friday morning. The shock was preceded and attended at its commencement by a very heavy and distinct report, which somewhat resembled the roaring or rushing of a heavy sea, and also that of distant thunder or artillery. In other words, it was a sort of combination of those sounds, and such as to impress the least imaginative with profound awe if not terror. The vibrations, which were nearly from north to south, lasted about twenty-five seconds, and were so forcible as to awaken nearly every sleeper in the city. The vibration appeared to be from N. E. to S. W., and as far as we can learn not a single building escaped the terrible shock. The first movement of the earth was very sudden, and the buildings swayed to and fro heavily afterwards, and finally the vibrations were short and rapid. Evidences of the violence of the shock were visible in different portions of the city this morning, and it is surprising that there was not much more damage done. The fire-wall on the top of the store occupied by Messrs. Goodwin & Co., on Front street, was entirely thrown from the north side of the building into Oregon street.

Instances of persons being thrown out of bed, of clocks stopping, breaking of windows, cracking of walls and disarranging of household things generally, are entirely too numerous to mention. The whole city was in uproar, and the entire population a good deal alarmed, while many were nearly frantic. People rushed wildly into the streets in their night clothes, and stood amazed and astonished at what had happened.

The markets had just opened, and those within left their stalls untended to seek refuge in the open streets.

Many amusing incidents are related of the occupants of the large public houses. The sudden alarm of fire could not produce half the consternation that prevailed in them. All ages and sexes rushed pell mell to the avenues of egress in their eagerness to get out of the buildings, without ever stopping to gather up their clothing.

It seemed as though every dog in town set up a hideous yell after the convulsion.

Later from Central America.

ARRIVAL OF THE STEAMSHIP PROMETHEUS.

By the steamship Prometheus, Captain Churchill, which arrived Tuesday afternoon from San Juan, we have received El Nicaraguense of the 1st inst, and the Central American of the 2d. The latter paper, it will be remembered, is published in San Juan and the former in Granada.

The Prometheus arrived at San Juan on the 4th of March, and left on the evening of the 5th, in company with the Northern Light. She brings sixty passengers.

The Northern Light had two hundred passengers and $300,000 in specie, by the Uncle Sam, from San Francisco.

General Walker seized all the boats belonging to the Transit Company, annulled their charter and granted a new one to another party, who will immediately place other boats on the route.

In regard to the prospect of a difficulty between Nicaragua and Costa Rica, El Nicaraguense says:

By advices from Costa Rica to the 17th inst., we are semi-officially informed that the Mission of Colonel Schlessinger would not be received. The President of Costa Rica will decline to accept our Commissioner, because the Republic has engaged the services of Americans in its military establishment. If the "foreigners" under General Walker had been dismissed when the revelation was accomplished, then the messenger of the Government would have been accepted; but while the army is composed as at present, Costa Rica will hold aloof from us. We hope for better things, however.

The most improbable stories are circulated, vouched for by high officials, that the American immigrants have come to rob and waste, and that their houses will be marked with pillage. The simple credulity of the people is thus imposed on, and the American name brought in disrepute. A Costa Rica paper now before us contains a proclamation, in which the people are inflamed by a grandiloquent libel, that the Americans were "invading that State, with ... and insatiable appetite, hunting their wives, their daughters and their properties."

Central America will have a better [illegible] bye. Nicaragua will marshall her sister States in a nobler career than intestine broils. As she has done, and will continue to do, with Costa Rica, so she will continue to act with all, until they have been won to fraternity.

Terms: $2 00 per annum, in advance.

NEW ORLEANS:

SATURDAY, MARCH 15, 1856.

Mortality.—The week ending last Sunday records only 61 deaths—our population, transient and fixed, about 200,000. Never was there a cleaner bill of health.

"Good News."—The Tract Society of the M. E. Church, North, will publish a monthly paper, beginning with April, 1856, entitled "Good News." It will be edited by the Corresponding Secretary of the Tract Society. Each number will include four folio pages. Ten copies each month, for $1 per annum.

The Bell Manufacturers.—The Messrs. Meneely, of West Troy, N. Y., may justly be termed the bell makers. We learn that during the past year they manufactured and sold seven hundred and fifty bells, of large size. They were sold on order and widely distributed. In the State of New York, 276, Pennsylvania 87, Massachusetts 75, Louisiana 47, Canada 19, Alabama 6, Connecticut 16, Virginia 10, Ohio 21, South Carolina 12, Vermont 16, Georgia, 11, Maine 13, New Brunswick 3, Maryland, 7, New Hampshire, 10, Nova Scotia 3, Iowa 16, Delaware 9, Mississippi 9, Indiana 10, Wisconsin 22, China 1, North Carolina 6, Texas 3, Rhode Island 7, New Jersey 8, Tennessee 4, Minnesota 2, California, besides a number sent to Cuba and the Sandwich Islands.

At the State Fair at Elmira, and at the American Institute at the Crystal Palace, they received the first premiums for "the best bell and yoke," and for "the finest toned bells."

Lectures and Lecturers.

New Orleans is favored with this elevating and pure style of entertainment, and from the crowds that wait on it, we should judge theatres, circuses, and such like, are driving a poor business.

Rev. Messrs. Pitts and Baldwin have appreciative audiences, who listen with wonder to the unfolding of the Armageddon theory, which discovers the United States in prophecy as the true Israel restored.

Mr. Thackeray's first two lectures, we think, disappointed public expectation. They certainly fell below ours. But his Third Georgian, on Tuesday last, fully sustained his reputation. It was very successful, even in the line of elocution. The poor old crazy thing, with whom our grandfathers had some dealings, afforded a pathetic vein, a la Newcome, which Mr. Thackeray's genius suited. We judge he made $800 per night at Odd Fellows' Hall.

Professor Gould continues his course at the Lyceum, under an engagement with the School Board, at $100 per night. He deals in science and its illustrations.

Death of the Church Herald.

DIAGNOSIS OF THE CASE.

The High Church organ of the Diocese of Mississippi pays us its last visit, with the following sentence of death, surrounded by mourning lines:

"The Church Herald will, after this number, be suspended!! If our subscribers will not pay, we cannot carry it on. We have endeavored to do our duty. The paper was established by the Convention." If the Church will not support what the Convention recommended, that recommendation cannot be carried into effect. To each of our subscribers who have paid, one-half will be returned or paid to Domestic Missions. Where not otherwise directed, the amount will be handed to the Treasurer of the Society for diffusing Christian Knowledge in the Diocese of Mississippi."

This is not the way we would prefer seeing our decease upon our counting. We would rather see them live, and converted from unsound views, and running with us to and fro, increasing knowledge.

With this cheated corpse of the Herald on the table, let us, as the doctors say, proceed to make a diagnosis.

The remote cause seems to have been Episcopacy; a subdued type of a malignant epidemic known in England as Puseyism. It struck in. The disease carried off (to Rome) the late Bishop of North Carolina. He of Mississippi has been in a bad way, but hopes have been entertained. Mississippians are too sensible and matter-of-fact, too much educated and indebted to Methodist, Presbyterian and Baptist Churches, to uphold their contemptuous forerunners. They have no sympathy with the pretension and arrogance. The prominent symptom of the demise of the organ was lack of breath. "If our subscribers will not pay." Ah! it is not lack of subscribers, of which nine-tenths of religious papers die, but because subscribers will not pay. To each one of them the sum is insignificant—to the paper it is vital as breath.

While these subscribers take this lesson to themselves, it is very convenient to pay our grateful mind us drafts on their commission merchants, or, in the absence of both, to enclose bill current, with direction, "credit my account with this amount."

The Legislature of New York has passed a law that no religious or benevolent society shall hereafter any bequest or devise the annual income of which is over $100,000, and which shall have been made at least two months before the death of the testator. In no case may the bequest be more than one-fourth of the Five Hundred Mistakes Corrected.—New York, D. Burgess & Co.: 1856.

Not that in speaking and writing five hundred mistakes are all that occur, even among pretty well educated people. But the most general and offensive are here noted and so corrected as to lead to general purity. Combinations of auxiliary verbs produce the most mistakes—shall for will and may for might, &c. Also, no for not, or for nor, either for neither, ever for never. It is a plain book and promiscuous—will be of great use in turning a pure language upon the masses. We shall keep our own copy and recommend one to other people.

A Grammar of Composition—

By the same excellent and practical publishers we have this little volume also, calculated to promote accuracy and facility in drawing from the well of English undefiled. English Grammar has been defined "the art of speaking and writing the English language correctly." But some stop at the science. An art requires practice for perfection. Some who know little of parsing technicalities, by the habits formed under good models and usage, excel those who are more learned in the mere rules. The exercises here given can hardly be gone through without forming and fixing a correct and ready form of speech, spoken or written. We approve them very highly.

Glances and Glimpses—By Harriet K. Hunt, M. D. Boston, J. P. Jewett & Co: 1856.

A queer book—a novelty all over. The ups and downs of a female physician, woman's-rights-woman, &c., for fifty years in social and twenty years in professional life. Perhaps others have often wondered at these unsexed but generally sincere creatures. How they came to desert their sphere—what accident or taste set them upon the man-track. We have. Here we see the development of a specimen—the social circumstances operating with individual idiosyncracies to produce a phenomenon which, we hope, will always be rare, but is an interesting study.

The Wolfsden—An authentic account of things there and thereunto pertaining, by J. B.: Phillips & Sampson: Boston, 1856.

Wolfsden is a quiet nook in the mountains of Maine. A half-fiction half-fact story is worked out of its chronicles.

Macaulay's History of England—Third and Fourth Volumes.

Has been a good while since announced. We call the reader's attention to the edition of Phillips & Sampson, Boston; neat in every respect, and retailing at the remarkably low price of forty cents per volume. Extremes have met. Here we have the most readable books at the most readable prices.

All these books may be had of H. D. McGinnis, 36 Camp street; of Norman, 14 Camp street; and of Morgan, near the Post Office.

RETURN OF REV J. S. BELTON.

New York, Feb. 5, 1856.

Dear Brother—Rev. James S. Belton, of the Alabama Conference, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, arrived in this city on the 19th ult. Chronic diarrhœa had so prostrated his health in China as wholly to disable him for missionary service there, and, in the judgment of the mission, make it necessary to return to his native land to preserve his life. The voyage did not improve his health, though Mrs. Belton was much benefitted by it, and he reached this port much enfeebled.

Shortly after his arrival, Bishop Pierce was in this city and visited him, and made arrangements for his removal to Charleston by steamer. But on the day fixed for sailing Bro. Belton was too ill to undertake the voyage. He was then removed to the house of a friend with whom myself and family have our home for the winter. A good physician and nurse have been employed, who, with sympathising friends, will minister to his wants and do all in their power to promote his comfort and the restoration of his health. His constitution is so impaired that it must be a long time before he can resume the work of the ministry; but we hope, if it please God, in a few weeks his health and that of his family will enable them to return to their friends in the South.

Bro. Belton and family need, and we are assured will have, the sympathy and prayers of the Church. He is deeply afflicted in having his cherished aspirations for missionary usefulness unsatisfied, but is resigned to the Divine will and tranquil and devotional in his religious feelings.

He is very desirous that his Conference and his friends should be informed of his return, and the reason of it. We judged the New Orleans Christian Advocate the best medium through which to communicate to them this information. You will very much oblige him by inserting this note.

Yours, fraternally, in Christ,

E. S. Janes.

The Usefulness of Some Men.—"There are some men in a community," said the sagacious and witty Thomas Bradbury, "that are like a crumb in the throat: if they go to the right way, they afford a little nourishment; but if they happen to go to the wrong way, they give a great deal of trouble."

TOBACCONISING.

NUMBER FIVE.

9. The Effects of Tobacconising on a Minister's Reputation and Usefullness. It directly and immedintely lessons the standing of any minister somewhat in the eyes of every person that witnesses the practice.

Ministers are held in higher estimation among themselves universally—all other things being equal, from the non-use of tobacco. This is universally the case.

In ordinary conversations respecting the reputation and usefulness of ministers, nothing is more common than opinions and sentiments with regard to the amount of depreciation occasioned by the use of tobacco in the cases where it is used. Chewers and smokers never hear these remarks, but they are made constantly, commonly just out of their hearing. So far as I know and believe, these remarks are as common as ordinary conversation. In regard to ministers of high standing, who travel abroad, they seldom pass a day or even an hour without being the subject of these remarks. Among the ladies no kind of personal remark is more common; but "wouldn't let him hear it for the world."

If I were a tobacconiser, I should be as ignorant of these things as they; but I am not, and hence I have opportunity of knowing.

A minister's usefulness depends more upon his reputation than most persons are aware of. He may preach the best sermons, say the best things socially or privately, but if he be deficient in reputation, everything passes for half its value.

And how is a man to keep up his reputation? All direct efforts to do so are highly dishonorable in any man. The only way a man may sustain his reputation is by keeping his conduct right. Let his conduct be void of offence, and the people will take care of his reputation. But if his conduct be regarded as faulty, he might as well try to patch the clouds as to patch his reputation.

It appears to me a minister is obliged to do every honorable thing, and to refrain from everything an honorable man can refrain from, to give himself a reputation; not for the sake of the reputation—this is disgraceful—but for the sake of the usefulness; or, in other words, for the sake of the cause of Christ.

I never heard a word said against a minister or against any man in my life for not tobacconising.

The minister who receives a cigar in a smoking trio is thought the less of for it, and his sermon the next Sunday is, in their estimation depreciated in consequence. Perhaps not very much, but this is the inevitable tendency. While he who refuses is appreciated on the spot for that very thing.

Take away tobacco from the ministry and it is elevated considerably. The whole machinery of the pulpit is invigorated greatly.

Tobacco disgraces the pulpit. Every man not directly involved will readily agree to this. Those involved are not allowed a vote in the case.

10. The Effect of Tobacconising on a Minister's Efforts to Raise Money.—It requires all the ingenuity and eloquence of the best ministers to induce the people to do in a very partial manner their duty in supporting the pecuniary requirements of the gospel in its various enterprises. He has to remind them over and often that their money is the Lord's money—that their ownership of it is a mere stewardship—that they are bound by very high considerations to support these various enterprises—that to this end worldly superfinities must be abridged—that "save all you can and give all you can" was not merely the doctrine of Mr. Wesley, but that he gathered the principle from the Bible—that self-denial is still the law of religion—that those few dimes and dollars spent needlessly, if appropriated according to the will of God, would hasten the evangelization of the world greatly, and bring about the salvation of many a poor soul for whom Christ died. He reminds them how it is, and explains to them that the money saved from needless expenses and appropriated to the Lord's treasury will greatly benefit their own religious enjoyment. And he appeals to them: how can a Christian spend sums of money, large or small, for that which is not bread, for that which does not lie precisely in the channel of religion, while the Lord's treasury is so empty?

And all this while people well know that that very man is engaged in a business of useless, worldly, pernicious money-spending, which, if turned into the channel he recommends, would fill the Lord's treasury to overflowing many times over. The annual interest on the money would meet all his recommendations and demands.

Some of the congregation or other persons to whom these appeals are made do not, perhaps, think of these things; but some do!

Some people think it strange that a minister of the gospel should appropriate more money to the purchase of tobacco than he does for the support of the gospel of the Son of God!

These considerations greatly cripple any man's efforts to raise money for the Church.

At the same time, a man may make a good speech and get a good collection; but most certainly he would make a much better speech and raise more money if he were unfettered from these entanglements and inconsistencies.

Perhaps so, and perhaps not. But this is not exactly the question. The right or the wrong of their conduct is not now under review. The fact is as I state it. People do and will look at the character, position and consistency of the Lord's advocate.

THE WARNING.

"But know thou that, for all these things God shall bring thee into judgment."—Ecc. xi. 9.

"Know thou," he admonished, be warned, that for all these things God shall bring you into judgment: for his Spirit's wooings, his gospel's calls, his ministers' exhortations, his people's example; for your father's earnest prayers, your mother's thousand tears wept over your impenitence; above all, for his Son's undying love.

Know thou that God shall bring thee into judgment. Remember this when you resist the Holy Ghost; when you refuse the offers of mercy; when you slight the Saviour's love; when you choke down your tears and steel your stubborn heart. Remember the coming judgment when you take God's hallowed name in vain; when you indulge your passions in the midnight sin; when you go where your mother would weep to see you, and your pure sister blush to hear. Aye, in every scene of sin, public or concealed, remember God shall bring you into judgment. Yes, God Almighty shall bring you—your respectable family, your honorable associations, will not help you, nor your learning, your money, your unbelief, your cold indifference, nor your cry for hills and mountains to fall on you and hide you from the wrath of God; nor your deep distress and wails of woe. You shall call, and God will not hear you; you shall seek, and you shall not find; for when your fear cometh as desolation, and your destruction as a whirlwind; when distress and anguish cometh upon you, then God will laugh at your calamity, and mock when your fear cometh, for his mercy will be clean gone forever, and he shall swear that you shall never enter into his rest, seeing it is a righteous thing in God to recompense tribulations and anguish upon every soul that doeth evil.

Remember he shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God and obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ; who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of God, and from the glory of his power. Then all the kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him, for our God is a consuming fire.

Oh, thoughtless, prayerless, impenitent, ungrateful sinner, what will become of you when God's dread thunder tramp of judgment shall startle all the dead? When the crest shall be turned to ashes and the ocean to vapor, when the mountains and hills shall melt like wax, and the earth shall be enveloped in a stormy ocean of wavering flame, and fly like a parchment scroll from the dread face of God; when all the angels from heaven and the damned from hell, and the risen dead, in countless millions, stand before the tremendous bar of God; when the crucified and despised Redeemer shall be arrayed in all the solemn majesty of the Eternal Jehovah, shall open the awful book of doom, and pronounce dread sentences, fraught with endless weal or everlasting woe!

Ah! what will you do, when the all-seeing eye of God shall flash with starling glare into the deep recesses of thine immortal soul, and shall read to a congregated universe every public act and private doing of your history! What will you do when the despised and insulted Savior's brow grows dark with excessive wrath, and his breath, like a storm of fire, shall sweep you from his presence, and far, far beyond the reach of hope? Oh, it will be in vain to wish that you had never been. You exist, and you must exist forever. You cannot escape immortal being and the vast responsibilities it involves. It will be vain, in the distraction of your anguish, to curse God and nurse the atoning Lamb. No, you have made God your enemy, hell your home, and lost souls your companions forever. You can carry nothing with you from the judgment scene but the eternal scorpion lash of a guilty conscience—nothing but the remembrance of what once you were, a sinner redeemed by the blood of Christ, and heaven once within your grasp—nothing but the remembrance of what you have lost, the fruition of great and precious promises, the association of the great and glorious dead, a splendid and ever-expanding career of knowledge and ever-heightening joy. Nothing, when finally lost, but what you are, an eternal enemy of God, an embodiment of woe, yourself a living, conscious, endless hell.

But we forbear. If you hear His voice, harden not your heart; for now is the accepted time and now is the day of salvation.

Fire at the Mississippi State Insane Asylum. We learn from Jackson that a fire occurred on Thursday night, at the Asylum for the Insane, destroying all the outbuildings, including the gas-works, from which it is supposed to have originated. Loss estimated at $25,000.

The Legislature a few days since appropriated $23,000 to the Institution, and we presume that the destruction of property since will render necessary a further appropriation. [Vicksburg Whig, 8th.

CLASS MEETING AND PASTORAL VISITING

A member of the Mississippi Conference, who is a worker as well as an observer, is led on from a business letter to the following remarks. They appear to have been meant for editorial suggestion only, but we publish them, as supplying more nearly than we can do the object desired.—Ed.

I sent you a new subscriber last week; this week I send you two more. I will do all I can to help along our paper.

I hope you will occasionally give an editorial on class meeting and pastoral visiting. I am compelled to believe, from actual knowledge, that these two important duties are shamefully neglected by our ministers. Dr. Pierce lays the "failing off" in the Georgia Conference to the neglect of these two duties mainly, yet admits that from the large numbers in church it is impossible to attend to the matter of pastoral visiting as it should be. This may be true in Georgia, but not in Mississippi. Our circuits are cut up so small that most of the appointments are Sabbath appointments. This leaves an abundance of time for pastoral visiting, prayer meetings, &c. Many of our ministers are local itinerants, and as soon as the service of the pulpit are over, they are "off" for home. The consequence is, the people feel but little interest in the preachers, grow indifferent to the Church, backslide in religion. Thus the Church loses her moral power in many places. And, in fact, most of our churches, so far as I am conversant, from these and other causes, enjoy but little of the life and power of religion. We report additions and an increase of thousands yearly, and yet how little really of moral power do we gain, by this increase! They enter the school, but, alas! have but few in the ministry or laity to teach them and help them on to heaven.

Very many are lost to the Church for the want of nursing. Upon the ministry, I believe, in great degree, rests the blame. They do not visit them pastorally, do not meet them in class, do not urge the class leaders to feed the classes. In a few weeks the current of the world bears them back, if not to former sins, to a cold and lifeless formality.

I am pained to see the course things are taking in our Church in this State. A spirit of worldliness is growing in the Church. Many do not relish the preaching that presents the practicals of Christianity.

I must speak myself, as I did not intend to write more than three or four lines when I began. I am no ascetic, but write what I know to be the melancholy fact. Unless we can have a change for the better speedily, "Ichabod" is written upon our colors.

Again let me urge you to give us "line upon line" on class meetings and pastoral visiting. * *

THE HALLOWED SPOT.

It seems strange that the Christian, destined to look on nobler scenes, should ascribe a peculiar value to any spot of earth: but many scenes are so associated with the memory of happy hours, that a charm steals over the heart whenever we behold them. The lowly cottage, where childhood's days were spent, is still dear to him who inhabits a mansion. The school-house, in which the elements of education were obtained, has still pleasant memories to those who have drunk deeply from the fountains of ancient and modern lore. And, could we identify the tomb where the Savior of sinners once lay, how many, not merely of the superstitious, but of the wise and good, would bow in silent adoration there!

I hope to be pardoned, then, if I cherish those recollections which often gather around that spot of earth "where first I saw the Lord." It formed the separating line between the gloom of guilt and fear and "the light of the glorious gospel." An influence then sprung up which has gladdened my pathway since. It has sanctified life's associations, given joy to every friendship. It has proved a pleasant companion in full many a weary journey, a source of consolation in deepest sorrow, and when ties the dearest have been severed, it gave assurance of reunion in a better land.

But the influence originating there has not been circumscribed to the narrow bounds of one finite soul: it has gone abroad to cheer the hearts of others. The former rebel has become a recruiting officer in the army of the King, nor held his commission in vain. With that volume which was a lamp to the royal prophet's feet, and a heart burning with fire borrowed from heaven's own altar, he has gone abroad to "publish salvation," encourage his fellow men to trust its truth, and invite them to the well of life which it reveals. And oft the invitation has been accepted, and scores—to His praise be it said—have unfurled the banner of salvation and mantled themselves in its folds. One too, among these, seizing the trumpet, has gone forth to sound the alarm of battle, and widen still the sphere of Emanuel's conquests. And often, while pursuing this arduous work has my own heart thrilled with sympathetic gladness. The bliss first tasted there still lives; although he who felt its power has wandered far from the sacred scene. And though the revolutions of destiny should bring him no more to look upon it, he shall bear its stamp on the tablets of his memory, and bless in death the recollection of that hallowed spot.

THE SOUTH-WESTERN BAPTIST.

"We are surprised to see men working themselves into such a state of fanaticism as to believe for a moment that Baptists will ever be guilty of the gross inconsistency of communing with sects who they do not believe, according to the Scriptures, are legal members of the Church of Christ. And we are frank to admit to you, sir, that we do not admit the different denominations to be gospel churches. So we believe, and so we act. If we are wrong, it is our misfortune"—Editor Southwestern Baptist, Tuskegee, Ala.

"With regard to the question of 'Terms of Communion,' we had repeated conversations. On this subject he (Robert Hall) spoke with uncommon interest and animation, and he seemed surprised at the arguments of those who were opposed to his views. I recollect, in particular, the effect produced on him when I stated that I had heard Dr. Lawson, of Solkirk, declare that he would not admit a Roman Catholic, not even Fenelon or Pascal, to the table of the Lord. Mr. H., who had been previously reclining on three chairs, instantly raised himself on his elbow, and spoke without intermission and with great rapidity for nearly a quarter of an hour, expatiating on the amusing absurdity and presumption of rejecting those whom Christ received, and of refusing to hold communion on earth with those with whom we hope to associate in heaven. During all this time his manner was exceedingly vehement, his other arm was in continual motion, and his eyes, naturally most piercing, were lighted up with unusual brilliancy."—Bulmer's Conversations with Robert Hall.

"Guilty of the gross inconsistency," &c. That's right, Bro. Henderson, stick to it. "Consistency is a jewel." But why not carry it out in all other respects? We hear Baptists talking of Christian communion and Church communion. "I can hold Christian communion with you, but not Church communion." Do tell us the difference. Which is the most essential? Which the greater? Does Christian communion include the other, or does the other include it? My own impression is, that it is a distinction without a difference—a shelter of words to which the sectarian may fly when plied with arguments he cannot avoid otherwise; a shelter which will ultimately be swept away with every other refuge of "lies!"

I cannot understand how it is lawful for me to hold Christian communion in one way, and refuse it in another. If it is Christian communion, that is the essential point; not the manner in which it is held. There are various ways in which we may Christianly communa; but the most excellent, the sweetest, the most love-inspiring, is that which Christ instituted. Why acknowledge my right to commune in one way, and debar me from that which, by pre-eminence, is Christian communion? Robert Hall, that Prince of Christian ministers, (I would say Baptist minister, but for the contrariedness the epithet is fast acquiring,) terms it amusing absurdity and presumption.

"Is thy heart right?" "If thy heart be as my heart," &c. These are the important questions—these the conditions. If I have the spirit of Christ, I have a right to his table. If I am debarred from it, I then am "offended." "Better that a millstone were hanged round your neck and you cast into the sea, than offend one of these little ones."

The Still Small Voice.—It is not amid the scenes of wild excitement that God is pleased to speak unto His children. The prophet stood upon the trembling Mount until the tempest, the earthquake and the fire had passed. But when all was still, he received the Divine communication. It is when the storm of passion has spent its fury—when the powers from beneath no longer move the soul by an impulse that threatens its destruction. When the destroying flame that has filled the mind with terror and dismay is extinguished, and the elements are all hushed to rest—then the serene and tranquil spirit holds communion with God, and there comes a "still small voice" in answer to its silent prayer.

Washington National Monument.

In the Washington Intelligencer of the 3d, we find the yearly report of the Board of Managers of the Washington National Monument. They state that the old Board, who disputed the legality of their election, have withheld from them all information concerning the affairs of the Association, and have thrown every possible obstacle in their way. The efforts of their agents in every part of the country have been rendered futile by the action of other persons professing to be agents under the authority of the old Board. When elected they found the treasury bankrupt, the machinery, tool implements, etc, in a very imperfect state, the material on hand for even a temporary resumption of work, and the last courses laid so defective, that a portion of the stone had to be taken out. These results of mismanagement were remedied, with the exception of the empty treasury, and in regard to the future prospect of raising funds, the report says:

"The country cannot be roused to liberality, nor even to gratitude; and the agents who have been appointed have, many of them, returned to us disappointed and despairing, and deeply wounded by insult heaped upon them. The scheme with which we entered upon the work has been broken by the mistaken action of our predecessors; and it will be difficult indeed, if not in vain, to renew it. The tide had ebbed before our election, but we are not responsible for the difficulties interposed by others, which precluded us from taking it at its flood. We can only deplore it, and by renewed and earnest efforts endeavor to remedy the evil which has already been done, to awaken the public feeling rather than go to Congress for legislative aid. The receipts of the year have been far less than in any preceding year since the corner-stone was laid. The gross amount from all sources has been but $7,740. We have now $25 in the treasury, and are in all responsible for not exceeding $30 of debts contracted by us, all of which is expected to be liquidated and paid by the end of this month. Additional accounts of the receipts and expenditures are prepared and ready for inspection.

Railway Wit.—Among the jokes which have been got off during the detentions occasioned by the deep snow is the following, clipped from a Vermont paper:

"Madam," said a conductor, a day or two since, "your boy can't pass at half fare; he's too large." "He may be too large now," replied the woman, who had paid for a half ticket, "but he was small enough when we started!"

BUSINESS COMPARISON.

The spring trade of our city has commenced in good earnest. The resumption of intercourse with the great West is shown by the daily arrival of boats heavily laden, from Cincinnati, Louisville, Evansville, Nashville, not omitting the great Wabash Valley and, before these remarks are perused by our readers, the majestic steamers from St. Louis may be shutting off steam at our levee. It is gratifying that we can announce the renewal of business in our State and Eastern Texas, through that great tributary of the Father of Waters, Red river. From the very upper limits and branches of this great artery, we have accounts of a rise sufficient for all purposes. To this can be added the revival of trade with Arkansas through that other important river, the Arkansas. Thus, all doubt of this season's business being the largest and most important which has ever attended the career of the Crescent city, is removed.

Let us refer to figures and facts, and see how we stand now in the seventh month of the present commercial year. We take for our guidance the receipts of produce by way of the river, for the past three years—say from the first of September of each year—1853, 1854 and 1855—to the 8th of March of each year:

	To 8th March, 1854.	1855.	1856.
Cotton, bales	868,438	910,350	1,126,102
Sugar, hhds	155,566	121,462	88,000
Molasses, hhds	24,126	26,620	20,000
Flour, bbls	652,909	582,581	548,000
Corn, sacks	745,310	331,628	1,020,000
Corn, bbls, ear	42,581	6,500	28,000
Wheat, sacks	79,529	8,828	20,000
Oats, packages	221,262	161,733	311,000
Tobacco, hhds	11,288	10,747	9,000
Potatoes, bbls and sacks	147,056	39,047	150,000
Pork, bbls	90,135	61,481	80,000
Pork, in bulk, lbs	1,541,760	1,387,180	2,482,000
Pork, in boxes	6,384	7,196
Lard, in kegs	61,431	31,969	28,000
Lard, in bbls and tierces	70,000	68,382	41,000
Whisky, hhds	68,824	45,338	41,000
Bagging, pieces	27,248	13,122	30,000
Bale Rope, coils	48,125	48,851	36,000
Apples, bbls	21,805	21,810	30,000
Bacon, in bulk, lbs	411,000	69,000	117,000
Bacon, hams, casks	5,427	17,174	8,000
Bacon, packages	19,557	19,771	8,000
Butter, kegs	28,664	19,252	14,000
Beef, in bbls	13,473	19,561	14,000
Beef, in tierces	3,922	4,840	3,000
Hay, bales	31,053	31,744	51,000
Hides	41,281	33,250	63,000
Lead, pigs	1,066	3,750	2,000

In four, it will be perceived, there is an increase over last year, but a deficiency from the year previous. This is owing to the interruption of navigation, which has now been of sixty days duration. Corn has increased over last year three-fold, and over the year previous fifty per cent. The most important feature in cereals is the great increase in wheat, which shows one million four hundred thousand bushels, for this season, against twelve thousand bushels last year, and two hundred thousand bushels the year previous. In oats there is an increase over last year of nearly one hundred per cent., and although oats may be called by some an insignificant article, yet the estimated value of the receipts this season are over four hundred thousand dollars, and may reach one million of dollars ere the close. The great increase in wheat is owing to the fact that it is more desirable for foreign exportation, being manufactured in the countries to which it is exported, and a higher standard given to the flour, much more satisfactory than most of the Inspection laws of many parts of this country confer. Though there has never been any complaint against inspection of New Orleans, New York inspection has come in for a great share of reproof, and very deservedly, too.

In other articles of Western produce there is also a great increase, particularly in bacon and bulk meat. It is, however, too early in the season to assume present receipts of Western produce as a criterion of what will be the extent of the receipts before the close of the season. We have not yet got into the real merits of the Western trade. Should a low margin of freight rule for foreign countries as well as coastwise, the business of our city will successfully contend with the railways of the West.

There is more tonnage now in port than has been for the last six years; with one hundred and twenty square rigged vessels, many of them of the most burdensome kind, on the way here, there is no reason to doubt but what facilities for transportation will remain at living rates through the season. Just at this moment a stiffening aspect marks the course of the freight market, but it may be considered only momentary. It should be taken in view that the stock of the most bulky article of freight, cotton, is one hundred thousand bales less than in the prolific season of '52 and '53; and that there are fifty more vessels in port than at the same time in the above named years. But how much the receipts of cotton will this season exceed that of those years, is a question yet to be answered by futurity. As gallons of ink and reams of paper have been used in making estimates on this absorbing topic of the times, we have no desire to add to the quantity by giving our views more in detail.

It is conceded that there will be a great deficiency in the product of sugar, but we have not been furnished with any evidence that shows there will not be a fair return in molasses. With the advance in prices now ruling, it is manifest that the yield in dollars will be equal to that of last year; at this date and the year previous, and at this present time the following are the comparative prices:

	March, 1854.	1855.	1856.
Sugar, Inferior	2¼@3	3 @3¼	4½@4¾
" Common	3 @3½	3¾@4⅛	5¼@5¾
" Fair	3¾@3¾	4 @4¼	7 @7¼
" Prime	3¾@4	4⅜@4¾	7¾@8
" Choice	4¼@4½	—@5	8½@8¾
Molasses	16½@17½	17¾@19	33@35

As an episode let us go back thirty years ago and see how and what the old merchants had to do:

The receipts of Cotton for the first six months of the commercial year of 1826 were, from October 1 to March 8, bales.....77,776

Ditto of Tobacco, hhds	12
Ditto of Flour, bbls	31,500
Ditto of Corn—all come in ear—bbls	2,000
Ditto of Oats, bushels	4,500
Ditto of Bagging, pieces	1,92
Ditto of Bale Rope, coils	1,72
Ditto of Hay, bales	6
Ditto of Bacon, casks	6
Ditto of Pork, bbls	8,50
Ditto of Potatoes, bbls	10
Exchange on London—gilt-edge	9¾ to 1 per ct. prem
Do. New York and Boston, sixty days	4 per ct. dis.

And although the population of our city has only increased about four times the number, the general business, trade and commerce has increased twenty times the amount of 1826. And yet we are asked to credit the almost daily assertion that our good city is in its decline, when it has scarcely entered on its great career and eminence. Our limits will not at this time permit us to extend our remarks.

New Orleans and Baton Rouge Railroad.

A bill, extending the aid of the State to a corporation to be entitled the "New Orleans and Baton Rouge Railroad Company," will, we understand, be brought before the Senate this week. We expected it would have been introduced ere this, but trust nothing will be lost to the enterprise by the delay. It has merit enough to command a favorable consideration from our Legislature, if properly presented.

The following article from the Baton Rouge Advocate, of the 5th inst., is sensible and to the point, and we publish it with pleasure:

New Orleans and Baton Rouge Railroad.—An act granting the aid of the State to this Company will be placed before the Senate at an early day, and we have no hesitation in saying an enterprise of the kind within our borders has so many and palpable claims upon the favorable consideration of the Legislature.

The amount asked for is small—$200,000—and the rapid communication which it provides between our commercial and political capitals, obviates all objections on the part of our city friends in relation to the locality of the Seat of Government, and from our personal knowledge of the views of a large portion of the people in the country parishes, we are confident that they would rather subscribe this small amount, to aid in forming the rapid connection with New Orleans, than to run the risk of an incessant agitation of the question of removal, which would cost the State at least one million of dollars.

It would afford great facilities to members from the country, who always have more or less business with New Orleans, for themselves or their constituents, during the winter, to attend to it without neglecting their legislative duties. Besides, this enterprise, and the region through which it passes, have a valid claim for aid, as bearing its proportion of taxation to pay interest on millions granted to works of internal improvement of a similar character in different sections of the State.

The claim is so modest and just that we hope there will be no objection whatever in the hill. Aside from its being a measure of unquestioned utility, it should be gratifying to every citizen of the State to feel that it would enhance those great natural advantages which Baton Rouge possesses, and give an additional value to those interests that naturally cluster around the Capital of the State.

Emigration.—The old reading—"Westward the Star of Empire takes its way," must now be metamorphosed so as to read—Southwestward the star is becoming. Under the vigorous incentives of health and wealth, good-fellowship and such an unending summer's glory as no old poet ever dreamed of, our sister republic of Nicaragua is steadily filling up with a hardy, intelligent and industrious emigration. Two hundred and four emigrants left yesterday, on the steamship Daniel Webster, prepared to subdue the soil and to contribute to the world's wealth the unworked riches of that agricultural and mineral El Dorado.

Greatness.—A man may be great and not good; he cannot be good without being great.

DEATHS.

DIED, on the 12th February, at the residence of Rev. Mark McCutcheon, Mrs. MARY JANE PENICK, daughter of Richard and Mary Barcus.

The deceased was born in Princeton, Caldwell county, Ky., September 7, 1822. Her father's house has long been a home for the preachers, and was the first place where the gospel was preached in Princeton. After the death of her mother, when in her seventeenth year, she found peace in believing, and consecrated herself to the service of God. She engaged in the pious task of assisting her father in rearing her younger sisters and brother, and was a useful member of the Methodist Church, being emphatically one of those who cared for the keeping of the house of God. On the 14th of November, 1855, she was united in marriage to Rev. Thomas M. Penick, who was about to transfer to our Conference, and accompanied him with cheerful trust and Christian confidence to his distant and perilous field of labor. She was attacked with flux on the 30th of January.

The above facts have been furnished me by her husband. Upon calling to make acquaintance with our new minister's wife, I found her ill—so seriously ill, that our Presiding Elder, Bro. Randall, who was visiting her, the kind Christian friends with whom she was boarding, even her physician, shared in the apprehensions of her husband. She lived eleven days after this visit, and I had the privilege of being with her several times, and of witnessing scenes of Christian endurance and resignation and joyful triumph, as beautiful in themselves as they were consolatory and helpful to those who were the favored witnesses of them, and which can surely never be erased from memory. A clear perception of the circumstances in which she was placed, a cheerful acquiescence in them, patient fortitude in the hours of physical suffering, and thoughtfulness for others, characterized her. When the strong probability of her dying was first made known, and she was questioned concerning the state of her mind, she said she could reply in the words of one who had once read of, "I have trusted in God for grace to live by, and he has given me dying grace," but expressed to her husband her inability to understand why she should be called to die just then, when her sphere of action seemed enlarged; but, after a few moments of quiet reflection she manifested entire acquiescence, saying, "It is all right, quite right." In this calm, reflective, and sometimes joyfully anticipative spirit, she remained until her transformation from the image of the visible and the temporal to the invisible and eternal was effected.

It is not in the nature of written language to convey an adequate idea of some truths—of some of those admirable manifestations of the power, wisdom and goodness of God which the sick-rooms and deathbeds of Christians often exhibit. This impotence of language is felt on the present occasion by the writer of this sketch, and who will close a notice so imperfect of the short visit and early departure from among us of our minister's dear Christian wife, with the prayer that both her brief sojourn and her beautiful death may be sanctified, not only to us, among whom she came to do a labor of love, but to her deeply bereaved husband and his infant motherless daughter, and to her far distant father and friends, with all of whom we deeply sympathize.

A FRIEND.

DIED, in the village of Jonesboro' Jefferson county, Ala., on the 28th January, 1856, ANN CHAPELL, consort of Dr. G. H. Chappell.

She was a communicant of the Baptist Church, and an observer of its rules; and though she was not rigid in her views and feelings in regard to the doctrines of her Church, yet she was not carried away by every wind of doctrine and views of others. She evinced great courage in the last hours of affliction. She had her children called and committed them into the hands of God and her weeping husband with many admonitions. She did not show dismay on entering into the cold stream of death, but told us that she trusted in the atonement of our Lord Jesus Christ for final salvation. The struggle was long and hard, yet she replied to the last with a strong hope of final glory. For nearly fifteen minutes before her spirit fled, all was clear all was easy—all was calm—the victory won.

DIED, near Midway, Ala., Dr. HARVEY KING.

In early life he was converted to God, but the cares and pleasures of life choked the good seed sown. During his last illness he again experienced the peace which passeth all understanding. Then was the proud heart bowed in humility, acknowledging the supremacy of our Saviour and the all-sufficiency of his atoning blood.

Later from Mexico.

The steamship Texas, Capt. Forbes, arrived last night from Vera Cruz, which port she left on the 8th. We have received by her a few copies of the El Veracruzano up to the day of sailing, but no papers from the capital, although the diligence had come through, and, it is said, brought correspondence for the European packet. El Veracruzano states that communication with the capital had been re-established via the plains of Apam and Huamantla, and that the troops were to be stationed at proper points to protect the route.

We find nothing in the papers we have received concerning the disposition made of the prisoners who were taken for an insurrection in the castle. They were probably shot.

Nothing of importance was known in regard to the condition of Puebla. A letter from that city of the 1st inst., states that it was expected that on the 3d the government troops would lay seige to the place. They numbered nearly 8,000 men, and were provided with all the material of war necessary to carry out the undertaking. At the time the letter was written the forces were stationed between San Martin and Puebla, awaiting the arrival of the President, who proposed to take the command himself.

It is stated that in Chiapos the revolution has been completely put down, the arms and munitions of the insurgents having been seized and a number of prisoners made. In regard to the condition of things in the other disaffected districts, we find no news whatever.

The celebrated cantatrices Vestoali and Almonti had arrived at Vera Cruz on their way from the capital to the United States. They gave a concert in Jalapa.

The maple sugar crop of the year 1855 is estimated by the officials in Washington, D. C., in the Agricultural Bureau, at 2,720,000.

Cotton is wholly unchanged. The sales of the week amounted to 66,000 bales, of which speculators took 17,000 and exporters 3,000 bales. The sales of Saturday were estimated at 8,000 bales. Orleans Fair, 5⅞; Middlings, 5⅝; Uplands Fair, 5¾; Middlings, 5 13-16d.

The stock in port amounts to 400,000 bales, including 270,000 bales American.

Breadstuffs have declined considerably and the market is quiet.

Provisions are unchanged. In Pork there is an improved demand. Lard is quiet.

Wheat had declined 3d. Flour and Corn, each shows a decline of 1s. Ohio Flour, 37s 6d.

Consols have advanced and are quoted at 91¼ to 91¾.

General News.

The Peace Conference is progressing favorably.

It is announced that the Armistice will last until the end of March.

The excitement regarding the Central American difficulty had entirely subsided.

The Steamer Pacific.

The Arabia brings no positive news of the Pacific, but reports on the 7th of February a portion of the cabin of a wreck was seen in lat. 40 36, long. 49 40, which might possibly have belonged to the missing steamer.

Probable Traces of the Pacific.

NEW YORK, March 12.—A dispatch received by Brown, Shipley & Co., agents of the Collins steamer at Liverpool, and dated Glasgow, Feb. 27, says that the steamer Edinburg, from New York, passed, on the 7th of Feb., large quantities of broken ice, and saw on it a quantity of broken cabinet furniture, fine ornamented doors with white or glass handles, a lady's work-box, and other articles common to the cabin of a first class steamer. The Edinburg was at this time five days out from New York.

The Peace Conference.

Three Conferences have been held, but nothing of the proceedings has been allowed to transpire.

The armistice, which is announced to end with March, does not affect existing blockades.

The general impression is that matters, so far, are progressing favorably.

There is a doubtful rumor that Russia concedes the required limitations, but will not abandon her protectorate over the Greek Christians.

General News.

It is believed that immediately after a peace treaty is signed, an European Congress will meet to adjust the balance of power.

The excitement relative to American affairs has entirely subsided.

Mr. Buchanan dined with the Queen a few days since.

The armistice has been made known to the Crimean armies.

The resignation of Omar Pacha has been accepted.

Russia, the Allies and Sweden, all continue active preparations for war.

The Very Latest.

Alarming rumors are in circulation that Russia has started objections which will break up the Peace Conference. It is believed they are promulgated as a speculating ruse.

The New Hampshire Election.

NEW YORK, March 11.—The returns from New Hampshire show a Democratic gain in 138 towns of 6,500. It is supposed there will be no choice by the people. The House is strongly opposition while the Democrats claim the Senate.

New York Market.

NEW YORK, March 11.—Flour dull. Corn quiet at 68c. Pork firm. Sterling Exchange 9.

Congressional.

WASHINGTON, March 12.—In the Senate, Douglas' majority report on Kansas affairs recognizes the legality of the Kansas Legislature, and recommends the enforcement of the President's views, whose special message gives notice that he shall ask a special appropriation therefor.

Collamer's minority report attributes the troubles to the repeal of the Missouri Compromise, and asks the repeal of the Nebraska bill and the reorganization of the Territory on free principles. The report was ordered to be printed.

Louisiana Legislature.

BATON ROUGE, March 11.—At the morning session a joint resolution was adopted ordering the State Engineer to report a system of internal improvements for the State.

The bill providing for the election of a Recorder of Mortgages for the city of New Orleans was, on motion of Mr. Seames, laid on the table.

A bill relative to the appointment of commissioners of elections, was referred to the New Orleans delegation.

At the evening session, a bill for the relief of the heirs of Bailey for loss sustained by the Raccourci Cut-off, created considerable debate. Mr. Hamilton offered a bill creating a Board of Commissioners, to whom should be referred all claims against the State, which bill was referred to the Judiciary Committee.

An act incorporating Dolbear's Commercial College was passed.

An act abolishing the Land Office at Baton Rouge and creating offices at New Orleans, Natchitoches, Opelousas, Monroe and Greensburg, and reducing the fees, was under discussion when the House adjourned.

BATON ROUGE, March 12.—Gov. Wickliffe this morning signed the bill equalizing taxation in the city of New Orleans.

The Registry bill, introduced by Mr. Hyams of New Orleans, passed the Senate to-day.

The House is again on the appropriation bill. The appropriation to the Charity Hospital is $10,000, and the same to the Insane Asylum at Jackson.

An act providing more effectually for the sale of public lands passed. The act establishes a land office in New Orleans.

The Senate has ordered Dr. Bard's lecture on education to be printed.

The Advocate this morning strongly endorses the action of the Democratic Convention, and concedes that Douglas was its choice for President.

River Intelligence.

LOUISVILLE, March 11.—Arrived, St. Clair and Highflyer.

Telegraphic Items.

NEW YORK, March 12.—The steamer Atlantic sailed hence to-day at noon, having Hon. Geo. M. Dallas, our new Minister to England, and his family on board. The Atlantic took out no specie.

NEW YORK, March 3.—The brig London, of New Orleans, with a cargo of molasses, is ashore at Squam Inlet, full of water.

PORTLAND, March 3.—The bark David Nickels, from Cardenas, was sunk in the harbor yesterday by the floating ice, and Captain Sweet, her master, was drowned.

A fire occurred here on Saturday night, which destroyed five stores on Middle street, occupied by Burions White, O. H. Perry, W. S. Richland and William Russell.

WASHINGTON, March 2.—Mr. Crampton has written a note to the editors of the Intelligencer stating that he was not instructed by Lord Clarendon to submit a proposition for the arbitration of the Central American question, but only to inform Mr. Marcy that such proposal had been made to Mr. Buchanan.

CHICAGO, Feb. 29.—Thomas Hayne, United States District Attorney, attacked Charles L. Wilson, editor of the Chicago Journal, in the street yesterday, striking him a severe blow in the face. Mr. Wilson returned the blow, knocking Hayne through the window of the State Bank. The difficulty was occasioned by the comments in the Journal on the political course of Hayne.

CHICAGO, March 1.—A dispatch from Kansas, dated yesterday, says the Kickapoo Rangers had commenced preparations for driving the Free State men from their claims.

LOUISVILLE, Feb. 29.—The notes of the Central Bank of Tennessee, at Nashville, are refused by the other Nashville banks. The bank is said to be owned in New York. The Attorney General of the State has been directed to examine into its condition. Their recent issues are payable at Danridge, Jefferson Co., Tenn.

Lyceum Lectures.

Prof. Gould's lecture last evening, at the Lyceum Hall, was listened to by a very attentive audience, comprising many of our most respectable citizens. The lecturer proceeded in continuance of his former address, to say:

Their irregular arrangement of the stars, and their grouping into nebulæ, always strikes the beholder. The Pliades and Hercules Hair are the best known of these groups, but the sky is filled with them. In Perseus and others, are seen minute clusters, only distinguishable by the most powerful telescopes. These little clusters are nebulæ, and often deceive the eye by their resemblance to stars. Their form varies in accordance with the strength of the telescope. Their whiteness was what led Herschel, the elder, into his idea of nebulosity, or a fluid of which worlds are made. This chaotic matter called nebulæ, in obedience to the law of gravitation, sometimes seems to be merged in one great whole. The theme can only be touched by hypothesis. In leaving the firm ground of astronomy for these speculations, we launch on to an unknown sea; and science gives way before the inconceivable remoteness of these stars of immensity.

Herschel, the elder, built a telescope forty feet in length and four in diameter, by means of which he was enabled to resolve some of the nebulæ into plagets, but came to believe that the greater part were the matter and component of other worlds in an unformed state. He saw some stars with the nebulosity, still adhering to one side. He beheld new worlds forming, and saw the birth of universes. All was explained by the law of gravitation acting on chaos and preparing new planets.

While Herschel was discovering these things the great philosopher of France—La Place—had been completed to the nebular hypothesis, by his grand discovery. It is owing to the mathematics of the latter and the discovery of the former that we have our nebular hypothesis. A planetary body may have a direct or retrograde motion to the spectator, and it is immaterial which way it moves to accomplish its circuit. La Place knew of twenty-two of these orbital motions, of which the sun has one. We know of eight great and thirty-eight small planets, and thirteen satellites, revolving from right to left, in this manner. Four have been discovered lately. The direction of the sun and two other planets in their motion of rotation has been discovered. From this fact Laplace started in his theory. The fact that the large planets move in almost regular circuits is also established. Now, if the planets moved, as has been supposed, they would soon flatten into discs, and the attractiveness of cohesion would be destroyed, whereby the outer rim would be thrown off. A rotary nebulæ, like that imagined by Laplace, would, in this manner, be ultimately dispelled and solid masses would be formed from the fragments. The rings of Saturn we now know to be fluid, and it is supposed that worlds once were. Geology can, through this field, be allied to astronomy, as it records the results of this constant condensation in our own world.

Herschel's inferences have lately been disproved to some degree by the explication of the nature of nebulæ, and few astronomers now consider it indispensable—even his son has given it up. A grander idea supplies its place. How vast were the stellar distances until the present nebular theory was taken up, and worlds were found beyond the farthest reach of the most powerful telescopes, shining as the nearer ones were want to do! Laplace's theory is not shaken, however, by Herschel's, that nebulæ are worlds in process of present formation.

An experiment of Plateau's tolerably explains all this. He shows that although ardent spirits and water will mix, oil will not mix with either separately, but when the two are mixed the third will combine with them. If a teaspoon full of oil is poured into a glass of water it will be seen drawing itself into little spheroids. Put the glass in a rapid rotary motion, and all of the oil will be collected into a single spheroid or globe. A very rapid rotation will, however, cause the outer rim to revolve from the central body and form itself into other spheres. If any accident occurs, these lesser globes will in their turn be parted, and become still lesser globes, circling round the parent one. This is in simple language the gist of the nebular hypothesis; and thus, in a glass of brandy and water, the whole plan may be frequently seen eliminated.

Up to the year 1805, only 110 comets were known. Their excessive tenuity was discovered by one comet passing over Jupiter without any result; and, also, because stars are discoverable through them. It was known that Halley's comet returned in seventy-six years, proving its orbit to be the same as had been calculated. The views now are that they are asteroids or debris of former planets. They have been very useful to us as reporters from regions we cannot reach. Their form is elliptical, but so near a parabola that we cannot distinguish between them. A parabola would move in one track only, but an ellipse could not be calculated, and Halley's is the only comet whose course in this direction has ever been proximately calculated. The periods of forty have been correctly calculated, and we now look for an annual increase. Arago thinks that comets shine by refracted light from the sun. The waves of light have a peculiar color when reflected, and Arago, on this ground, based his theory. There are also other grounds equally strong.

The worlds were built in order, and the planets march in tune. All knowledge, in increase of what was known, is pleasing; but it strikes us as singular to conjecture of worlds all moved by magnetism and polarism, within regularly prescribed routes. Encke's comet has shown us the fact that there are resisting mediums in the heavens, as the waves of light had shown before. Every philosopher believes there is a medium of the kind which is called Ether; and Encke, who founded the Berlin school of computing philosophy, which has been proved by Encke's comet, agreed with him.

The solar system contains within itself the seeds of the destruction of all worlds. Encke's comet is more light and vaporish than any air in an exhausted air-pump. Every planet is, with greater or less velocity, drawing nearer the sun. Universes are born and live and die like the insects of an hour.

The remainder of the subject, not less interesting than its introduction, must be deferred to a future evening.

The discourse was listened to with a great deal of interest, and the illustrations were very frequently applauded.

The Indianapolis (Ia.) Journal states that a few days ago, a number of drunken men were quarreling in Zionsville, Boone county, when one of them fired a pistol at another. The bullet, however, missed the one for whom it was intended, but struck a man who was passing by the crowd on his way to call the doctor for a sick child. It entered one ear and came out at the other, killing him instantly. He fell dead on the street without a word. The child died about an hour afterwards. The murderer was arrested and is now in jail.

RED RIVER ITEMS.—From the Caddo Gazette of the 1st inst., we extract the following paragraphs:

The planters in this region have been very much set back by the rain and cold. The season is backward and very little has as yet been done. We hope the spring will prove favorable.

The State Engineer, in his late report, represents that the work upon the Falls at Alexandria has proved injurious to the navigation. It is our opinion that he knows nothing about it. The captains of steamboats, who are presumed to know more about the matter than any one else, speak very differently of the effects of that work. They have become so well satisfied of the benefits of the work performed, that many of them have signed a petition to the Legislature praying an additional appropriation for an enlargement of the excavation.

Last week, Mr. W. W. Deloach, late of the Parish of DeSoto, cut his throat horridly with a razor, with the intention of committing suicide. He was stopping at the time at the boarding-house of J. Talmadge, in this place, where he now lies. Surgical aid was promptly procured, and we are pleased to say that he is in a fair way to recover.

On the 5th February last a negro boy, named Lewis, between twelve and thirteen years of age, the property of Mr. Samuel Hollingsworth, of this parish, murdered a negro child called Jasper, belonging to the same gentleman, about two and a half years old.—Lewis took the child about dark, stripped off his clothes, carried him to a gully, the bottom of which was covered with very soft mud, and smothered him. His excuse for the murderous act was, that Jasper had fought a little brother of his, and made him cry, and since he has been imprisoned here, has asserted that his father instigated him.

The boy was tried by a justice and a jury of slaveholders, and sentenced to imprisonment for life, his extreme youth saving him from capital punishment.

The Southern Sentinel states that Bayou Plaquemine is now in fine navigable condition.

Louisiana State Teachers' Association.

This body met in Lyceum Hall on Saturday, Mr. Burrows in the chair and Dr. Benedict acting as Secretary. A blessing was invoked by Dr. Smith. The minutes were read and approved.

The following gentlemen were elected officers for the present year:

President—J. H. Burrows, of Thibodaux.
Vice Presidents—James Smith, A. A. Upham, J. G. Parkman, R. H. Chilton and J. C. Miller.
Secretary—L. H. Pothier.
Corresponding Secretary—Ali. Bonfoys.
Treasurer—Wm. F. Dunn.

Committees were appointed as follows:

On Common Schools—Hon. J. P. Rawle, of New Orleans, and Hon. J. Perkins, Jr., of Madison.
On School Books—Hon. A. Perkins, Jr., Prof. McGinder, and J. M. Lemert.
On Normal Schools—Messrs. Jas. Saul, Dr. Cope, R. H. Chilton, N. G. Miller and L. Parsons.

Prof. Duffell, Col. L. U. Seymour and Major Gerard Stith, were appointed a committee to report on the expediency of publishing a monthly educational journal.

Messrs. M. N. Byington, S. H. Torrey, W. H. Lindsay, Wm. P. Duncan and Dr. Benedict, were appointed a committee to report on the propriety of introducing phonetic instruction into the schools.

Of the committees appointed at the Thibodaux meeting, several were either not present, or had no reports to make.

The Committee on Normal Schools reported that they had duly considered the matter entrusted to them, and submitted a resolution for appointing a committee to draft a law for the establishment of a Normal School, to be considered at the next meeting of the association, in the event of the Legislature taking no action on the subject at the present session; which was adopted.

The Committee on Phonetic Instruction presented a lengthy and interesting report, setting forth the great and numerous advantages of the system, the present state of its progress in this country, and recommending its immediate introduction into the public schools. Resolutions carrying out the views of the report, were submitted and adopted.

On motion of Professor Chilton, the Executive Committee was recommended to call the next meeting of the Convention for the 6th and 7th of January next; and also, that the meeting be held in this city.

After some further informal business, the Convention adjourned.

American Privateers.

NEW ORLEANS, March 3, 1856.

Messrs. Editors: While threatened war with our old and inveterate foe is talked of, and the English press is filled with vaunting of the power of England's fleet, the following may not be uninteresting. In the Remembrancer, a work published in London during our war of independence, I find that during part of 1775, the whole of '76 and part of '77, that there were over six hundred British vessels taken by American privateers, and of which the above mentioned work gives the names.

In Niles' Register and other works of a like nature, I find the names of some two hundred and sixty (260) American privateers at sea during the war of 1812, and I do think I would be far from wrong, in placing the number of private armed American vessels cruising during the war against English commerce, at three hundred and fifty (350). Niles' Register gives the names of one thousand, seven hundred (1700) British vessels taken by American privateers during the war, seven-eighths of which number were either sent into American or neutral ports, and the balance destroyed or retaken. Baltimore fitted out the largest number of these privateers, as I find the names of fifty-four; next comes New York with forty-eight; next Salem, thirty-eight; Boston, twenty-two; Philadelphia, eleven; Portsmouth, N. H., and Charleston, S. C., nine, each. These ports stand first—the balance were fitted out at various other ports. Our own city, I find, fitted out two, viz: the Two Brothers and Spy. These vessels were mostly brigs and schooners, ranging from one hundred to three hundred tons, and their success was beyond parallel. In one cruise the Scourge, of New York, and Rattlesnake, of Philadelphia, took over forty sail of English vessels. Among those whose success seems to have been the greatest, were the Salem vessels America and Grand Turk; the Fox, of Portsmouth; the Portsmouth, of the same place; the Gen. Armstrong, (of Fayal celebrity;) Morgiana, Warrior, Scourge, Prince de Neufchatel and Young Teazer, of New York; the Alacrino, Brutus and Wiley Reynard, of Boston; the brig Yankee, of Bristol; the Rattlesnake and Young Wasp, of Philadelphia; the Roger, of Norfolk; Snap Dragon, of Newbern; Lovely Cordelia and Saucy Jack, of Charleston, S. C.; the True Blooded Yankee, fitted out in France; and last but not least, the famous Baltimore vessels, viz: Amelia, Comet, Chasseur, Caroline, Globe, Harpy, Kemp, Mammoth, Surprise, Sabine and Ultor. It is to be borne in mind that these vessels went to sea and returned laden with the spoils of English commerce, in face of a strict blockade enforced by over two hundred men-of-war; and they often sought and never avoided, where there was anything like equality, a conflict with these same blockaders, and that many of the most brilliant actions of the war were fought by privateers.

If we could do this in 1812, what could we not do with our present resources. Indeed, I believe I do not hazard too much by saying that, in four months after a declaration of war, over a thousand privateers, under the American flag, would be on the ocean.

In the mention of names, I give us first those who stand credited with having taken the largest number of prizes in the lists given in Niles' Register. Z.

Louisiana Legislature.

FRIDAY, March 7, 1856.—House.—House met pursuant to adjournment at 10 o'clock. Fifty-seven members present.

Mr. Dunn, from Committe on Commerce reported favorably on an act, for the protection of masters and owners of ships and steamboats. The bill provides a fine of $25, and imprisonment not over ninety days, to any person or persons who shall be found guilty of interfering with the crews of vessels thus interfering with the business of commerce.

Mr. Dunn, from Committee on Commerce reported favorably on a bill, relative to seamen, boatman and firemen in the State, providing that contracts shall be entered into with such by the masters of boats and vessels, and fixing penalties for non-performance of duty; made the order of the day for Friday.

Mr. Haynes reported favorably on a bill for the relief of veterans of 1814 and '15.

Mr. Laville—an act to regulate the fees of Justices of the Peace in the parish of Orleans.

Mr. Walker, without previous notice introduced an act to provide for subscription by the State to the capital stock of the New Orleans and Baton Rouge Railroad Company—referred to committee on Internal Improvements.

As the order of the day the city charter of New Orleans, came up.

Mr. Mackey called for the yeas and nays on every section as it came up. Seconded by Mr. Estlin.

Mr. Wright said that the opposition to the charter grew out of the fact that the time for holding the elections, from March, had been changed to July. He was willing to compromise the matter, and moved to reconsider the vote fixing the time to July. The result was that the third Monday in June was substituted.

SATURDAY, March 8.—House.—House met at 11 o'clock—sixty members present.

Mr. Robinson offered a resolution that after the 15th inst. no new business shall be introduced. Passed.

Mr. Wright offered a joint resolution of instructions to Senators and Representatives in Congress to have an appropriation to open a channel through Lake Pontchartrain. Adopted.

Mr. Estlin called up a bill to appropriate the sum of $1,000 to the National Guards of New Orleans. Lost.

Mr. Lawrason called up the resolutions in reference to Dr. Kane, providing for a medal to be presented him in the name of the State by the Governor. Adopted.

The charter for the city of New Orleans was here taken up and occupied the House until it adjourned.

THE CZAR SEES A GHOST.—An extraordinary story is in circulation in the Paris salons. Here it is: Towards the last days of January, 1854, the Czar Nicholas, alone in his study, saw all at once before him a monk of gigantic stature, of whom he instantly demanded what he wanted. The monk replied: "I have come to warn you. If you undertake this war from pure motives you will succeed; but if from your own personal ambition, you will fail, your armies will be vanquished, and you yourself will come to an untimely end before the close of the war." The Czar rushed at his visitor, and called the guards from the ante-chamber. The guards came and found the Czar clutching at thin air, and exclaiming: "The monk! the monk! who has seen him? Prevent his escape." Such is the tale that was stealthily whispered in St. Petersburg in the last days of January, 1854, and which was written on the 1st of February by a diplomatist then in Russia, and transmitted to Paris.

A CHALLENGE.—"Do you mean to challenge the jury?" whispered a lawyer to his Irish client in California.

"Yes, if they don't acquit me, I mean to challenge every one of 'em."

Items of Foreign News by the Baltic.

The papers bring news of the death of Mr. John Braham, the celebrated singer; at the age of eighty-two. He lost the greater part of his fortune about twenty years ago, by speculations in connection with the Colosseum and the St. James' Theater, but the close of his life was rendered happy by the care of his daughter, Lady Waldegrave.

Another event which has excited interest has been the death of Mr. John Sadleir, M. P. for Sligo, who was found dead on Hamstead Heath, last Sunday morning, having poisoned himself with a large quantity of essential oil of almonds. He has been known for some time past to have been involved in unsuccessful speculations, and the details that are now likely to be published respecting them are watched with much curiosity. Mr. Sadleir was forty-four years of age, and unmarried. His brother, Mr. Jas. Sadleir, is a member for Tipperary, and chairman of the Tipperary Joint Bank Stock, which is reported to be in serious difficulties.

A NEW ORLEANS MULATTO BOY FOUND CONCEALED ON AN ALBANY AND SHIP.—The ship Austin, Captain Gay, from New Orleans, arrived at Liverpool on the 16th. On overhauling the ship, the custom's searchers found a mulatto girl concealed in the boatswain's locker, where she had been secreted during the voyage, unknown to any one on board except the boatswain. A reward of $300 was offered at New Orleans for the girl's apprehension. She is now at Liverpool.

NOVA SCOTIA MINES TO BE WORKED.—A Company has been formed to work the iron mines of Nova Scotia, to be called the Acadian Iron Company, with a capital of £200,000 in £5 shares. Among the Directors are persons connected with the trade of Sheffield.

CASTLE-UP, THE HON. MISS MURRAY.—The London Court Journal says: Several statements have appeared in our cotemporaries in reference to the Hon. Miss Murray and her American work, in which some misapprehensions appear to prevail regarding the position of that lady in the royal household. The facts are these: Miss Murray had been, up to about a year since, maid of honor (not lady in waiting) to the Queen. She filled that office since the period of her Majesty's accession for about eighteen years, and, therefore, without being very decadent, we may say was not in that bloom of youth which one is wont to associate with the title of maid of honor. Miss Murray had, in fact, reached a period of service beyond what is customary. Her Majesty, however, with that delicate consideration which she so eminently possesses, made Miss Murray an extra maid of honor, which was equivalent to permission to retire upon full salary. Since her appointment as extra maid of honor, Miss Murray has done nothing at Court—and she doubtless would have experienced difficulty in obtaining unlimited leave of absence from the Lord Chamberlain. Her position, therefore, by merely nominal and not whatever opinion her Majesty may have respecting Miss Murray's juvenile slavery predilections, it has not been exhausted in any way to affect that lady's material interests.

AN IMPATIENT WIDOW.—The Durham Chronicle has the following: "The marriage of the Dowager Marchioness of Townshend, aged 70, immediately on the death of her husband, to Mr. A. Ladiler, of Fenton, near Wooler, we named a fortnight ago. The 'courtship' is an rather romantic affair. Laidler is about 40 years of age, was employed in a linen draper's establishment at the West End, where he attracted the attention of the old Dowager Marchioness, so much so that in her matters of business, she would not be attended to by any other assistant, or even by the principal himself. Now would she allow any one to bring her purchases to her ladyship's residence but Mr. Laidler. On the death of her husband she made him an offer of her hand, which he promptly accepted."

NEW SCREW PROPELLER.—A new description of screw propeller, the invention of Capt. Wm. Williams, of the City of Dublin Company's steamer Windsor, will in a few days be practically tested. One of these propellers has been made at Scott's foundry, Tranmere, and is to be attached to the steamer Semaphore, belonging to the Belfast Company. The power of the propeller is not obtained as in the ordinary screw, but by direct action, and while reducing the revolutions of the engines on an average from 78 to 53 the speed of the vessel is increased.

FORTIFICATION OF SHIPS IN THE ICE.—A letter from Kinburn, in the Gazette du Midi, gives some details of the manner in which the engineers of the French navy took advantage of their vessels being blocked up in the ice before that place to fortify themselves against an attack: "When we found that we were surrounded by thick ice, and, in fact, absolutely frozen in, we saw that in case of attack we should labor under a marked disadvantage, as not only did we present a fixed mark for the enemy, but we could be at any time attacked by their land forces in great numbers. The following plan was at last decided on: We determined to convert each vessel into a regular fortification, and, as each fortified place ought to have a deep ditch around it, we resolved not to be wanting in one either. Accordingly all round each vessel we sawed away the ice at some distance, so as to place every vessel in a state of complete insulation. Every morning the first thing done was to break the ice close to the vessels and re-establish the circle of water. Bridges were thrown across from the stern and stern, and at a moment's notice these movable passages could be drawn on deck. In various parts of the ice we also cut holes, which would certainly embarrass an approaching enemy, and these we took care to keep clear each day. We also, at some distance off, piled up pieces of ice which we had cut away, and formed very strong barricades, calculated to arrest an assailing party for some time. We, besides, so placed our guns as to be able to sweep off any body of men approaching from certain points. We have no apprehension, however, of an attack, for without any doubt the Russians have perceived us at work, and are aware of what we have been doing. They must, therefore, see the folly of any attempt to molest us."

NAVAL AND MILITARY PREPARATIONS AT PORTSMOUTH.—Portsmouth garrison presents just now the appearance of a town beleaguered from the sea and the garrison preparing busily for its defence. A large fleet of ships and gunboats is at anchor in the roadstead off the town, and new batteries and quarters for soldiers are being constructed rapidly within the walls of the fortress. At the top of the town a large range of dwelling houses and the theater have been pulled down to create more room for military accommodation, while at the bottom a heavy battery of sixteen 68-pounder pivot guns is in course of completion, having taken the place of the old platform of 6-pounder saluting guns. In the rear of these has been erected a large shell magazine, flanked by a high earth mound to protect it from the shot of an enemy seaward; new embrasures for heavy 32-pounders have been cut in the curtain of the ramparts at various points commanding Southsea, where a mud fort has been built near the old stone fortress (Southsea Castle) to strengthen that defence.—A new double drawbridge is in course of erection in lieu of the single one at St. James-gate "Point," where a battery and Royal Artillery quarters in rear have for some time been built to protect the mouth of the harbor on the right of the entrance. The Government are also endeavoring to negotiate for a large extent of house property in Green-row and the rear for further enlarging the barrack accommodation, and this to the extent (says military rumor) of 30,000 men.

In regard to these preparations, a leading Paris journal has an article which seems to indicate that they are looked upon with suspicion in France. We make the following extract:

"If even the approaching conclusion of a peace is not quite assumed, it may be demanded, in face of what danger are the formidable defensive works now being constructed at Portsmouth, erected? Assuredly the Russian squadron now buried in the harbor of Sebastopol, was never a menace to the British coast, and the remaining Russian squadrons still afloat at Cronstadt and Helsingfors have shown that their ambition wisely consists in defense and not in attack. A war between England and the United States—a war which is by no means probable, notwithstanding the passing difficulties of the moment—could in no case expose the powerful squadron of Britain to be braved in port by the American navy. It is in vain that we search for the enemy against whom there is now a question of defending Portsmouth!"

The French Government has resolved upon the publication of a complete collection of the early poetry of France. An Imperial decree to that effect has appeared in the Moniteur. From the report of M. Fortoul, Minister of Public Instruction, upon which the measure is founded, it appears that the collection will extend to some forty volumes.

Such a body of literature will include the epics in which the heroic exploits of the age of Charlemagne are celebrated; the satirical poems, such as the "Roman de la Rose." Some historical poems relative to the Crusaders, and the life of Joan of Arc, by one of her cotemporaries, have been lately discovered in the Vatican.

RUSSIA.—The Journal of St. Petersburg officially announces the marriage of the Emperor's brother, the Grand Duke Nicholas, to the Princess of Oldenburg, Alexandra Petrowna.

Russian Row Gunboats.—The Invalide has published in detail the report drawn up by Admiral Hamelin upon the building and construction of the row gunboats now in construction in Russia. In the course of this description we are made acquainted with the new weapons that the Russians have made for the purpose of repelling boarding attacks. They are represented as consisting of an iron lance, about seven feet long, and a mace of cast iron, the massive head of which resembles a pineapple, and like it, is beset with a number of obtuse but pointed projections. Each boat is provided with from thirty to forty lances, and from fifteen to twenty maces, in the management of which the Russians are said to possess great skill. From this description these maces would appear to resemble the morgenstern, still in use with the watchmen in Sweden, and with one of which the Marquis of Waterford, some fifteen years back, came inconveniently into close contact.

The principal bell for the great clock of the Houses of Parliament is to be nine feet in diameter, and to weigh fourteen tons, and will be the largest bell they say, ever cast in England.

Perhaps it is not generally known, as it should be, that salt put in the mouth will instantly relieve the convulsive movement in fits, either of children or animals.

FROM JAPAN.—The schooner Page arrived at San Francisco, bringing dates from Hakodadi to the 6th of January. She encountered a severe gale during the passage and narrowly escaped shipwreck. She brought the following items of news:

On the 11th of November, at 10 o'clock P. M., a violent earthquake occurred at Jeddo, which destroyed one hundred thousand dwellings, fifty-four temples and thirty thousand inhabitants.

A fire broke out at the same time in thirty different parts of the city; the earth opened and closed over thousands of buildings, with the occupants. The shock was severe at Simoda.

Iwara, Prince of Idzu, Governor of Simoda, has been removed.

Tatereky, First Interpreter at Simoda, has been removed, and been tried at Jeddo.

The Japanese treaty with the French has not yet concluded.

There have been 75 arrivals of ships at Hakodadi since that port was opened to foreigners.

The Bay of Hakodadi was covered with ice on the 3d of January, and the snow was three feet in depth in and around Hakodadi, Jan. 6th.

The Government at Hakodadi contemplate building a vessel after the modern style of architecture.

Permission was solicited by the Governor of Hakodadi to examine and take the dimensions of the Page. She was visited by officials, carpenters and draughtsmen, for that purpose.

SAVANNAH MERCHANTS.—At a recent meeting of the Savannah Chamber of Commerce, a merchant speaking of the character of the business men of that city, remarked that for the last eleven years, no foreign bill negotiated in that city against cotton sent to Europe, had ever been dishonored or returned. His authority for this statement was a gentleman connected with one of the largest banking houses in England. When the heavy shipments of cotton and other produce from that port to Europe is considered, this fact must redound greatly to the commercial credit of Savannah.

There is not much to be said on to-day's transactions. Rain commenced falling at an early hour, and continued through the entire business part of the day, placing a real embargo on all and every business, and depressing all desire for action and general negotiations.

We take from the Louisville Journal of the 11th instant, a brief account of business at that place on that day. It will be seen that large quantities of merchandize from the Eastern cities, destined for the West, were detained by the late rise in the Pittsburgh river:

LETTERS OF JAMES ROBB.
INTERNAL IMPROVEMENTS.
NO. II.

New Orleans, February 4, 1856.

To his Excellency Robert C. Wickliffe,
Governor of the State of Louisiana:

SIR—My previous letter concluded with the promise to review the disastrous effects upon our railroads, of surrendering to the suggestions of expediency, a cash system for one of credit with its contingencies, which has inflicted great injury, if not upon our own interests, but on those of every undertaking identified with ours. Our inactivity has operated as a check on the Mississippi Central, Memphis and Charleston, Vicksburg and Shreveport, and Tennessee and Alabama Railroads. If we had prospered and gone ahead, the inhabitants on the lines of these important roads would have been stimulated to fresh exertions in their behalf, which would have greatly accelerated and promoted their progress. The ordinance for taxation, as it passed the Council, was advocated on the ground that it, approved by the property-holders, it would be a basis for credit; and that its ratification, if submitted in any other form, would be hazardous. This conclusion was as unwise as the judgment was at fault, that construed the scheme of borrowing when we might have had the money without lenders' conditions. The property-holder voted for the tax, not according to its amount, but to aid effectually in the speedy completion of our projected roads; he neither solicited nor required a postponement of his contributions, provided this object was attained, knowing that the great enhancement in the value of his possessions, and the augmentations of our local trade, would redound, if we had railroads as other cities had them, to his certain and unfailing advantage. Besides, we had a precedent in the noble example of Mobile, to challenge our imitation and admiration, which, in addition to liberal individual subscriptions, had, per cent. had been voted by the property-holders as a tax on their real estate, to assist in the building of the Mobile and Ohio Road.

The tax ordinance being approved by the property-holders, with the first instalment postponed until May, 1853, we had before us every prospect of inactivity for nearly a year, owing to the want of means; besides, the question of the tax was not so entirely free from doubt, as not to leave it in some degree of uncertainty, until a judicial decision regarding the constitutional right to tax real estate to build railroads could be had, as it was well known it would be contested by a few discontented citizens. There was reason to believe that at this time any hesitation in commencing active operations would disappoint public expectations. It was deemed wise and politic not to allow discouragement to happen when it was possible to avoid it, and an appeal to the counties and inhabitants on the line of road in Mississippi was presumed best calculated to keep alive public favor and secure considerable assistance. We had already been put back so much by the causes assigned, that no plan which promised aid was to be overlooked or neglected. I proposed to spend a year in the interior, in my capacity as President, and visit in person every district proprietor on the line of the road between New Orleans and Nashville; and by personal explanation of the policy of the undertaking, seek to enlist their sympathy and support. Unfortunately, in the beginning of my mission, which commenced with every encouragement, I was arrested in its prosecution by severe illness, brought on by exposure in Mississippi which compelled me to relinquish further personal attention to the affairs of the Company, until February, 1853. Subsequently, the official employees of the Company, during my connection with it, labored to prevent my renewing the effort, which I am now more than ever convinced would have been crowned with success. The directors of the Company have since engaged in various efforts to obtain the assistance and co-operation of the country, but the means employed have failed, either from misdirected efforts or from the indifference which prevails, owing to disappointment in the progress of the road, and the want of an intelligent understanding of its affairs.

The unexpected and favorable sale by the city of two millions of dollars of its bonds, in July, 1852, inspired confidence that our credit would be as good on every fresh occasion; and the directors of the Great Northern Railroad, yielding to the current of public opinion, and relying upon taxation as an efficient basis of credit, entered into contracts, in November, 1852, for the building of eighty-seven miles of the road from the city to the State line, and for supplying the iron to the contractors, in time to complete it by the 1st of October, 1853. A contract was also entered into to finish twenty-three miles of road between Jackson and Canton, on or before the 1st day of November, 1854. These engagements, with the cost of depot grounds, of equipments, engineering and superintendance, amounted to over two and a half millions of dollars, two millions of which would have to be provided by credit, over and above the actual receipts, which the Company could then rely on as available from its own resources, inclusive of the tax installment due in May, 1853.

This was the condition of the Company when I resigned my official duties in January, 1853. It was at once apparent that it would soon have engagements pressing upon it, without means of credit to meet them, and I undertook to meet these deficiencies by large advances made in times of great financial distress, and not without sacrifices; which advanced malignancy has made the subject of base and baseless invective. The triumph, or the total defeat of our internal improvement policy, was nothing more nor less than the grand issue at stake. It has had its struggles since, and has them now; and although it may to-day appear in a condition weak and enfeebled, it has gained form and proportions that will expand in time to gigantic dimensions. The charters and liberal aid of the State since obtained were then only in perspective. Would any proposition have been entertained in favor of either, if failure had occurred before completing a mile of the road? Never was a question of such mighty importance to the welfare of a State in such peril. Failure then would have been the death-blow to public works in Louisiana; and not in the day or generation of any man now living, would any combinations have sprung up to assure public confidence and root out the deep distrust that would have prevailed, of our capacity ever to undertake, or carry out successfully, any public enterprise.

As the engagements of the company would still need large sums, the next step suggested was the appointment of commissioners to negotiate a mortgage loan, but by the time preparation could be made to make the trial, unusual causes suddenly appeared to disturb the money markets of Europe, which at once imposed a yet more check upon the operations of all enterprises depending on the facilities of credit; and since 1853 occurrences serious and unexpected (a European war and deficient harvests) have contributed to increase the difficulties.

After the return of the commissioners, whose report was unfavorable to the hope of contracting a foreign loan, the Directors of the Great Northern and Opelousas Companies, in view of their wants and the ascertained insufficiency of their real estate tax bonds to realize money, either by sale or otherwise, mutually agreed to petition the Legislature to pass an act authorizing a commutation of the real estate tax subscription for one to be made in behalf of the city in its corporate capacity, payable in its bonds bearing six per cent. interest, and having twenty years to run. This measure has proved advantageous, and in some respects fulfilled the objects of its projectors. The taxation to pay the interest on these bonds cannot be regarded as very onerous to property, neither can their issue be viewed as impairing good faith. It brought no increase of the liabilities of property over what it had assumed in 1852, before the negotiation of the two millions of consolidated bonds. It relieved the railroad companies from a large annual payment of interest on their issues of real estate tax bonds, which were surrendered by the holders for the bonds of the city at par. It made the subscription of the State available for a larger sum, without which the failure and prostration of both companies could not have been averted.

But although these aids essentially contributed to overcome the serious embarrassments that threatened our undertakings, and enabled the Companies to relieve in part the prestige of early confidence, they would have been still more beneficial but for a new and unexpected scheme to build a railroad from New Orleans to Mobile, which was at that time put forward, its projectors claiming the aid of the city in its bonds to the extent of one and a half millions of dollars. The scheme, unfortunately, received the sanction of the City Council, and by the practice of unparalleled frauds was carried at the ballot-box, enabling upon the city a loss of credit and the loss of at least two hundred thousand dollars of its bonds, with the interest thereon at six per cent. for thirty years. Considerable as this sum may appear, it is insignificant in comparison with the sacrifices imposed on the Great Northern and the Opelousas Companies, and the disappointment and shock of confidence in our enterprise at home and abroad.

Railroad between this city and Mobile is unsurpassed—never interrupted by season, climate or low water—and it will, for all time to come, serve to supply a cheaper transportation than a railroad, which, if it had been a scheme of merit, it was not wise to undertake when we already had undertakings on hand to the amount of our present means. It seems almost impossible that a scheme shrouded in impudence, from its conception until its disastrous termination, could have found advocates where any intelligence prevailed. Much as we have to deplore its mischievous effects, it is to be hoped that the lesson will prove one of caution against the follies of inexperience and the schemes of visionary projectors.

Having sought to give an impartial narration of the history of our railroad companies, with the hope of objections which need only the assisting to remove them, and of restoring in the zeal and support which were displayed in a more conspicuous manner in the outset of our undertakings, I will devote my next letter to the case of further aid and assistance to prosecute them to completion.

Very faithfully, yours, JAMES ROBB.

NO. III.

New Orleans, Feb. 6, 1856.

To his Excellency Robert C. Wickliffe,
Governor of the State of Louisiana:

SIR—My second letter was an exposition of the difficulties that surrounded the management of our railroads. This, I hope, may possess more interest, which it can borrow from the history of success founded upon adequate and rather than merit shown in its discussion.

The amount expended in the construction of the Great Northern and Opelousas Railroads is $6,227,333 35-100, of which the State has invested $1,364,000, and the city $3,500,000, the residue having been derived from taxation and individual subscriptions. This large sum may now be considered dead capital, neither road having advanced sufficiently to perform the agency of developing or improving any important, or valuable section of the country. It is, therefore, a question which is now invested with strong claims to the vigilance and support of the Government of the State and the city, with a view of assuring the results which both roads promise if carried to completion. You will naturally be led to inquire how the State can extend its aid, when it has already been given as far as the limits of the constitution will permit. By using its great political and moral influence with our sister State of Mississippi, and exhorting it to cooperate on a scale commensurate with its immense resources in aid of a policy already ratified by the popular voice, and which only needs the acquiescence of enlightened and liberal legislation to lay the foundation of a solid and liberal support, alike honorable to the people and their representatives, and to which all may point with pride, as an imperishable monument of the glory of the State.

The city can issue no more bonds, and it would answer no good purpose if it did, as the market for the sale of its securities is a restricted one; and, of all descriptions of aid there is, in my opinion, none more objectionable on grounds of interest and policy. Instead of relying on lands on credit, why not fall back on taxation to a moderate extent? I have already explained, and, I think, convincingly, that had we adhered to this policy, our roads would now be giving some return on their cost, and be in part fulfilling their great mission; and if I read aright the sentiments of the bulk of the sensible and patriotic of our citizens, there is not one out of four that would interpose serious objections, provided guarantees existed that aid thus granted would be faithfully and judiciously applied. Our two railroad companies have nearly the whole of their unsold city bonds pledged, with large margins to the lender, for the loans needed to carry their floating indebtedness, and every day lessens their resources by the payment of 14 and 16 per cent. premium for money when they receive 6 per cent. on the city bonds, which is paid by taxation and comes out of the pocket of the citizen. How long would a merchant or planter continue solvent, with such a pressure upon his means? We are oppressively taxed already, and the loudest complaints prevail, but there is no remedy for this evil unless men of capacity and integrity can be prevailed on to superintend the expenditure of the city. If the reduction of taxes is to be alone kept in view, we may soon find ourselves in the condition of being without streets over which a dray could pass; and if we taxed cotton, sugar and western produce as much to transport them to our presses and warehouses as it costs to bring them hither, our trade will diminish, and our stores and houses become vacant. This is a digression, but not without more or less application in the illustration of my subject. But to return to the plan of city aid. That the City Council shall submit to the proprietors of real estate an ordinance to subscribe one million of dollars by taxation, to be divided in the proportion of $600,000 to the Great Northern, and $400,000 to the Opelousas Company. That the tax shall be collected in one installment, and the tax-payer entitled to receive shares of stock in each Company on presentation of his tax receipt. That in proportion as the tax is collected by the Treasurer of the city and paid to each Company, he shall be entitled to receive back on behalf of the city, an equal amount of its bonds, which shall forthwith be cancelled by the Mayor.

The practical operation of the adoption of this recommendation will be the withdrawal of our railroad Companies from the market as borrowers for one million of dollars, and to reduce our public debt for a like amount—to enhance the value of those unsold and lessen objections to them as a security, besides liberating those Companies from an inconvenient debt, which is consuming their substance and destroying the value of their shares. Instead of the progress we have made in the construction of our railroads being unattended with any future advantage, as everything now seems to indicate, we shall regain life and vigor under the nourishing support to be derived from a policy sanctioned by the plainest dictates of self-interest and common sense. Our Companies will then compete for capital, (which we have in abundance) on an equality with other sound and prudential securities. There is now invested in our two roads not much short of one million of dollars, derived from taxation on real estate, nearly half of which is represented by shares, the remainder being applied to the payment of interest on the bonds of the city. This sum is dead capital, or rather what represents it has only a nominal value; and how are we to give life and value to this dead mass if we neglect to apply the remedies which the disease demands? Our condition is not unlike that of the proprietor of thousands of fertile acres which he cannot employ without capital and labor to improve and cultivate, and who consents to surrender a share to others who will furnish him these aids, rather than to submit to privation and want, when his concessions will secure him luxury and plenty. The additional million of dollars proposed to be raised by taxation, and to cancel a like amount of the public debt, could not prove a serious inconvenience to property; and Mobile may justly be cited as an example, where the current tax for railroad purposes is 2 per cent., and has not been less for the last three years. I think it will appear clear to you that the tax-payer will be the gainer; 1st, by giving value to shares already acquired; 2d, by accelerating the completion of our railroads, which, wherever they have been built, have been more than doubled and quadrupled the value of real estate, and by augmenting population have enhanced the rents of houses in like proportion.

The Governor of Mississippi, who has evinced the most laudable degree of zeal in behalf of works of internal improvement, has been pleased to recommend, in his late message, in strong terms, the Great Northern road to the favorable consideration of the Legislature, and has suggested an increase of revenue to aid the different railroads running through the State. There is great merit in the recommendation of Gov. McRae, and it is only to be regretted he did not name a higher figure than two hundred thousand dollars, as the amount of annual aid. I am not insensible of the small importance or weight attached to counsels that are freely extended, and I should not venture to express publicly any opinion as to what the State of Mississippi might do in aid of railroad improvements, if I had not received encouragement to do so from a number of its principal and most influential and respectable citizens—besides, my reluctance is in some degree overcome by the recollection of their hospitable reception, and the attention I received when I visited the State in 1852, and had the honor to address the Legislature, in compliance with the resolutions of both branches. At that time I had only in view the obtaining of the right of way, and plainly stated that I did not come to invite assistance on the part of the State. That the weight of any claim now set up for its fostering aid should not be impaired; it is only necessary to institute an inquiry into the causes that have occurred to invite it. This has been partly done in this and my preceding letters, without referring to the altered prospects of railroad undertakings which have since taken place, owing to the great enhancement in the wages of labor and the doubling of the cost of railroad iron: In 1851-2 the building of 409 miles of the Great Northern Railroad from New Orleans to the Tennessee river, could be reasonably estimated to cost not exceeding eight millions of dollars, on the scale of prices then current for wages, and all the materials needed in its construction. Provision for this expenditure was clearly within our reach at that time, if the ordinance for taxation on real estate had not been perverted from the original design. Our own resources would have reached five millions of dollars, on the following calculation, viz:

Real estate subscription in New Orleans	$2,500,000
Private "	500,000
State " one fifth of $5,000,000	1,000,000
Subscription in Mississippi	1,000,000
	$5,000,000

The remaining three millions of dollars could have been obtained by negotiation, in spite of the adverse circumstances of the times; and this declaration I am warranted in making, by being in possession of a personal knowledge of the facts. The operation of untoward events, in so many ways, has inverted the circumstances of our railroads; and instead of the Great Northern being supported on the basis of independence, flowing from the legitimate aids first contemplated, it has been a distressed suppliant for help in any shape, to meet expenditure; which, with delays, increase of the price of labor and materials, will swell the sum required to complete it to the Tennessee river, to twelve millions of dollars!

It is with unfeigned reluctance that I have to allow myself to be intruded in the discussion now under consideration, but I am sure you will acquit me of egotism. Some observations, made in my speech to the Legislature of Mississippi, in February, 1852, have since, and not without effect, been repeatedly cited against State aid. I admit the correctness of the allegation; but this does not alter the claims of new circumstances, or oppose any serious objections to the recommendations of Gov. McRae's message.

My letter has already attained greater length than I intended, and I will postpone the discussion of aid from Mississippi, and make it the subject of my next.

Faithfully, yours, JAMES ROBB.

MISS MURRAY AND THE COURT OF ENGLAND.—The story, first reported we believe by the New York Evening Post, that Miss Murray, late Maid of Honor to the Queen, had been deprived of her position in consequence of the opinions which she entertains and proposes to express in her new book, "Travels in America," concerning the peculiar institution, is not altogether correct. Miss Murray is still in favor with the Queen, and resigned her position of her own free will. In a recent letter to a friend she says that knowing the sentiments she entertains respecting slavery to be in opposition to those of the Court, and knowing also that persons high in authority connected with the Court had objected to the publication of these sentiments while holding her official position, she felt it her duty to resign, although by so doing she deprives herself of her influence and position at Court, her official residence, and an income which can ill be spared. Still she does it cheerfully, rather than to forego the publication of her work. The Queen, however, still remains her firm friend.

THE ANGEL-BARQUE.

BY L. VIRGINIA SMITH.

"Little Calvin, a blue-eyed, fair-haired child of six summers, was dying, and he bade his father and mother come near the bedside that he might tell them farewell. "Mother," said he, "will you not go with me?" "where are you going my child?" asked his mother. Withdrawing his eyes upward, he answered, "To Heaven, mother," and in a moment was in the arms of him who has said, "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of Heaven."

From the rosy western heaven,
Through the tinted mists of even
Up the purple deeps of twilight
Slowly sailed a snowy cloud,
Coasting by the golden sky-lands,
Sweeping round the starry islands,
Sailed that barque until the zenith
Was enveloped in its shroud.

Summers six had come and parted,
Since upon that sea uncharted,
Once before came seraphs sailing
On a skyward tending track.
Then a leaf, of God's evangel
They had left—a tiny angel
On thy bosom, gentle mother—
Now, they come to rail it back.

All his earthly mission ended,
On his little couch extended,
Lay he, watching with the spirit
As his azure eye grew dim;
Though by others all unnoted,
Watching where that vessel floated,
And the wooing angels waited,
For he knew they came for him.

Many sweet "good byes" he bid ye,
Close his little arms enfold ye
Father, brother pressing near him,
Shutting heaven from his view,
But to thee he clung the nearest,
Thou thy fondest, best and dearest,
As he murmured, "Oh! my mother,
Will not you go with me too?"

"Where, oh! where, my child?" "To heaven!"
Sighed the passing spirit. Even
Caught the cadence of the chorus
As the angel-barque swept on;
Sailing up the ether slowly
It has reached the haven holy,
And lies moored within the shadow
Of Jehovah's "great white throne."

WHAT I LIVE FOR.

I live for those who love me,
Whose hearts are kind and true;
For the heaven that smiles above me,
And awaits my spirit too;
For human ties that bind me;
For the task by God assigned me;
For the bright hopes left behind me;
And the good that I can do.

I live to learn their story
Who've suffered for my sake;
To emulate their glory,
And to follow in their wake;
Bards, patriots, martyrs, sages,
The noble of all ages,
Whose deeds crowd history's pages,
And Time's great volume make.

I live to hold communion
With all that is divine;
To feel there is a union
'Twixt nature's heart and mine;
To profit by affliction,
Reap truths from fields of fiction,
Grow wiser from conviction,
And fulfil each grand design.

I live to hail that season,
By gifted minds foretold,
When men shall rule by reason,
And not alone by gold;
When man to man united,
And every wrong thing righted,
The whole world shall be lighted,
As Eden was of old.

I live for those who love me,
For those who know me true;
For the heaven that smiles above me,
And awaits my spirit too;
For the cause that lacks assistance;
For the wrong that needs resistance;
For the future in the distance;
And the good that I can do.

THE ARAGO IN THE ICE.—We find in the Northern papers the following account of the difficulties encountered by the steamship Arago off the Banks, on her last trip from Havre to New York:

The Arago experienced strong westerly gales on the passage, and was detained 54 hours on the Eastern edge of the banks, by ice. Feb. 22, 6 A. M., lat. 47,00 long. 46,00, passed three icebergs. From that time until 24th, at noon, lat. 44,24, long. 49,00, the ship was constantly picking her way amongst icebergs, large and small, and patches of closely packed broken ice. For a part of two nights she stopped her course, and at other times was running slowly, frequently stopping and backing to avoid collision with dangerous pieces. At noon, on the 22d, she found herself in the bight of a bay of closely packed broken ice, and large and small icebergs extending from S. E. around to North, as far as could be seen, with no open water to Westward. Stood to the North in hopes of finding an opening; but, after running 30 miles, found the ice extended to the N. and E. as far as could be seen. Put about ship, and stood back again to the South, exploring whatever had the appearance of a passage; at one time running into a deep bay for 30 miles, which was found closely blocked up, and had to stand out again. In this way the ship made 200 miles South-ing, without seeing any open water to Westward, before she found a passage.

The quantity of ice, from the largest sized icebergs gradually down to the smallest pieces and packed ice, exceeded anything of the kind that Capt. Lines had ever seen or heard of about the banks before; and as it is now early in the season, he is afraid that, in a few weeks, the widest track for European navigation will be impeded by this dangerous foe. He therefore recommends ship masters bound for Europe to go South of the Banks; and to those coming, to Westward, when approaching the ice track, in thick weather or in the night, to use the utmost vigilance, and have their ships under perfect command for any manœuvre, at a moment's notice.

RECEPTION OF THE PEACE NEWS BY THE ARMIES IN THE CRIMEA.—The Courrier de Marseille, of the 10th inst., publishes the following intelligence from the Crimea, dated the 29th ult:

"The news of the acceptance of the Austrian ultimatum was at last announced to the army on the 22d, and only became known at Kamiesch on the evening of that day. The delay in the reception of the dispatch was occasioned by the rupture of the submarine telegraph. The news, contrary to our expectation, produced very little sensation. It did not impart to the camp a greater degree of animation than usual, and exercised no influence on the interests of the Kamiesch merchants. This fact is accounted for by the general incredulity with which the re-establishment of peace was received. "Nobody," says our correspondent, "even believes in the conclusion of an armistice, for warlike preparations are proceeding with unabated activity. No reliance is placed in the sincerity of Russia." Those gentlemen of St. Petersburg," exclaimed one of our officers, "Are making game of us with their conferences. Those," pointing to the northern forts, which continued to fire upon Sebastopol, "are the pacific dispatches addressed to us by the Czar." The Russians have not interrupted that cannonade since the 16th, and for some days Fort Constantine has poured in a still greater number of its innocuous projectiles.

Are we to infer from that increased uproar that the Russians know nothing of what is going on, or that they are glad of the opportunity to get rid of their ammunition? There is nothing changed in the camp, where the greatest tranquility prevails. It was lately rumored, and to-day it is generally credited, that a corps of army of 40,000 men is to quit the Crimea for a destination still kept secret. This corps will form a complete army, and the regiments composing it are said to be already named. Attempts have been made to disturb the monotony of the camp by fresh alerts, to which the reports of deserters have given rise, but most of these men adduce such bad reasons to justify their desertion, that we are inclined to believe that they are sent by the enemy to spread alarm among the Allies. We did not require those alerts to hold ourselves on the qui vive, and we consequently begin to pay little or no attention to the statements of those deserters.

AN AMERICAN SHIP REVEALING THE MYSTERY OF A HAREM.—An American ship drifting helplessly down the current of the Hesphorus, ran its bowsprit into that part of a nobleman's palace devoted to his harem. The side of the house was crushed in, one balcony was torn off, whole divans were ripped up, one chandelier swept from its fastening, shivered into fragments; the frightened inmates rushed out into open air in such impromptu costumes that the whole neighborhood felt scandalized. Turkish pride became deeply wounded, and our unfortunate compatriot found himself amenable to the disagreeable alternative of either paying about double the amount of the damage, or becoming an inmate of a Turkish jail. At first the captain strongly resisted the "gross imposition," but ultimately yielded to the gentler suggestion of baggy fleas.—[Constantinople Letter.

The rumors of war have attracted to Washington a great number of inventors, each with some deadly missile or instrument. Among those really worthy of notice is a rifle invented by Swyney, exhibited here by James F. Whittemore, of Boston. It can be fired thirty times without reloading, and then loaded, with common cartridges, nearly as quick as an ordinary rifle can be for one discharge.

INFALLIBLE REMEDIES.—Here are a few simple remedies for very prevalent disorders, which we have no hesitation in recommending as infallible:

For sick debtors—stay at home.
For drunkenness—drink cold water.
For healthy sake—Ayer's Pills.
For neighbors—keep out of danger.

To have a good conscience—"pay the printer."

☞ The best evidence that can be adduced in favor of the efficaciousness of Hoofland's German Bitters, prepared by Dr. C. M. Jackson, is the unprecedented demand for them from all parts of the Union; and, although there may be many compounds prepared and represented as being worthy of a liberal patronage, yet we feel constrained to remark, that the vast number of testimonials with which the worthy doctor has been honored, by persons of the highest character and respectability, who found it necessary to have recourse to his preparation, is testimony sufficiently conclusive, that it is one effectual remedy for the almost immediate relief of those afflicted with that direful malady, Dyspepsia, has never been discovered. See advertisement. m4 4m

☞ A MASTERPIECE OUTDONE.—We have lately supposed Ayer's Cherry Pectoral was the Ultima Thule in its line, and that nothing had been or would be invented which could at all surpass it in its fine points of excellence as a medicine. But we are confidently assured, by those competent to judge, on the subject, that Ayer's new Pills excel in high medical artistry even that widely celebrated embodiment of his skill. He has succeeded in making them not only pleasant to take, but powerful to cure the large class of complaints which require a purgative remedy.—Lancaster Argus, Ky.

IMPROVEMENTS.

Notwithstanding the apparatus, chemical, philosophical and astronomical, is equal to that of any similar institution in our country, it will be still further increased within the next three months by an additional instrument, of $600.

The grounds of the Seminary are to be greatly extended and beautifully ornamented.

The Library will be greatly enlarged.

Though the Fossil and Mineral Cabinet is already of fair extent, arrangements are in process of rapid fulfillment for greatly enlarging it.

For the carrying out of the above improvements and additions to our facilities, the Principal of the Seminary now owns a reward amounting to more than $2,000. All the improvements promised will be completed by the 1st of July. ↑

Good Medicines.

It is estimated that AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL and CATHARTIC PILLS have done more to promote the public health than any other one cause. There can be no question that the Cherry Pectoral has by its thousand on thousand cures of colds, coughs, asthma, influenza, bronchitis, &c., very much reduced the proportion of deaths from consumptive diseases in this country. The Pills are as good as the Pectoral, and will cure more complaints.

Everybody needs more or less purging. Purge the blood from its impurities. Purge the bowels, liver, and the whole visceral system from obstructions. Purge out the diseases which fasten on the body to work its decay. But for diseases, we should die only of old age. Take antidotes early, and thrust it from the system ere it is yet too strong to yield.

Ayer's Pills do thrust out disease, not only while it is weak, but when it has taken a strong hold. Read the astounding statements of those who have been cured by them of dreadful scrofula, dropsy, ulcers, skin diseases, rheumatism, neuralgia, dyspepsia, internal pains, bilious complaints, heartburn, headache, gout, and many less dangerous but still threatening ailments, such as pimples on the face, worms, nervous irritability, loss of appetite, irregularities, dissiness in the head, colds, fevers, dysentery, and, indeed, every variety of complaints for which a purgative remedy is required.

These are no random statements, but are authenticated by your own neighbors and by our own physicians.

Try them once and you will never be without them.

Price, 25 cents per box; 5 boxes for $1.

COLLEGE EDIFICE.

A large and commodious building, planned by the best architectural talent and erected in the most substantial manner, is now nearly ready for the reception of pupils. Feeling the great importance of space and comfort for the educational and domestic interests of the institution, the Trustees have spared neither pains nor expense to meet the demands of utility and beauty in the construction of the edifice.

EDUCATIONAL FACILITIES.

A new and valuable apparatus has been purchased for the College. Cabinets of minerals, fossils and curiosities have also been provided. Stated courses of lectures on science, art and literature will be delivered.

OPENING.

The first term of the college will commence on the second Monday of February, 1856.

TERMS.

Board, including washing, fuel and lights, will be furnished at $12 50 per month. Tuition fees will be at the ordinary rates.

REMARKS.

The present circular is merely designed to give notice of the approaching opening of the college, and to afford a general outline of its plans and objects. The public may rest assured that the Trustees, in co-operation with the Faculty, will use all proper and possible means to render this institution worthy of a cordial and generous support. The remaining officers of the Faculty will be elected as soon as circumstances will allow, and it is confidently expected that in a short time the college will be fully organized in all the departments of a thorough education.

Acknowledging with gratitude the earnest and liberal sympathy which this enterprise has so generally received, and thankful to that kind Providence which has conducted it to its present stage of promising usefulness, the trustees have now the happiness to announce the near fulfilment of their long-cherished wishes. The location of the college is as healthy and agreeable as could be desired. It is perfectly accessible, and yet sufficiently retired for the purposes of a moral, intellectual and womanly culture. Its expenses will be made as moderate as practicable, and a faithful, parental guardianship will be exercised over all who may be committed to the charge of the institution.

MONEY—ITS USES AND ABUSES.

A LECTURE.

Delivered by Col. THORINGTON before the Literary Club of Montgomery, Ala., at its winter session of 1855-'56.

(CONCLUDED.)

Money is remarkable for its development of character and its singular influence upon its votaries. With some it is represented to have wings; with others, its power of adhesion is scarcely equaled by the bark of a tree; and again, we witness a singular mixture of liberality and stinginess in the same person.

There are some whose deeds and conversation mirror forth their character with the clearness of a noonday sun; while others, deep and gloomy, are as impenetrable as a maelstrom, into which everything sinks that approaches; and there are those who have so little to mark them as not to have a trace behind.

We have not time for illustration, but there is a strong character, we sometimes observe, traveling a dreary road with slow and cautious step,—with no gay companions to cheer him or divide his toil; and there is scarcely light enough upon his path to exhibit the deep shade with which it is surrounded. Life's journey with him is a continual laborious ascent, the scenery around bleak and cheerless, but his step is ever onward, and neither storm nor peril impedes his progress. He has fixed his eye upon the summit above him, neither the pleasures nor cares of life, nor its ups and downs can divert his glance. The needle, in some latitudes, may waver in its allegiance to the pole, but the fidelity of that man to the ruling passion of his life knows no variation or shadow of turning. He has at last reached the goal of his ambition, and at an advanced age he is the possessor of an extended nature, but countless wealth. And now, without one qualification for its enjoyment, and scarce length of time to call it his, he finds that the once firm step begins to totter, the strong hand to lose its accustomed grip, and the eye that never quailed becomes dim. What is this? He is about to descend into the "valley and shadow of death"—and money cannot enter there.

The riches he acquired by the labors and sacrifice of a long life will now in a few moments, like a fleeting shadow, pass away. Then it is the closed hand gradually opens, and the martyr to riches becomes the public benefactor. His riches and his name together have now become the property of some learned or benevolent institution. We pause, to ask, who was the donor?—the man who died, or his heirs? We should always ascribe a good motive to a good act, and charity will sometimes attribute a mistaken motive to a bad action; but when a character or an action is placed before us for our example, we may justly challenge its claims to our respect or consideration. We do not censure the act of benevolence we are about to criticise, but applaud a good action even when performed beyond the eleventh hour; but it is the time, the circumstance, the procrastination which we condemn. Why did not the hand, that gathered this superfluous wealth distribute it in the day of its strength? Why was it closed when it so often passed by that home of equalid poverty, and why did it not before open the door of that charitable institution, or knock at that learned college? Why did not this man, conspicuous by his wealth, illumine the dark journey through life by the sunshine of his benevolence, and realize by experience the "luxury of a good action?" Why should death and charity be so closely united, and why should not a man be able to look his charities in the face? For we admire the man who can give largely and yet survive.

The man who pleads the statute of limitations to a debt he justly owes, forfeits our esteem; why, then, should a charitable or public spirited action be barred by a statute of limitations which the court of death can alone adjudicate or determine? Why deprive the world of the benefit of a living example, the accumulating interest and the progressive influence of a good action for twenty or thirty years or a lifetime? We would not condemn where we ought to praise, but we say it is not wise to keep money a generation in captivity, any more than it is to permit the rust or mildew of idle years to corrode talents, the improvement of which might have blessed a world.

There is another criticism applicable to such a character, and to which we may very properly call the attention of parents generally. We are are often shocked at the inexperience of youth, and their ignorance of the value and use of money has become proverbial. What parents have taken an age to learn, their children are expected to know intuitively. The health, the education and the happiness of that boy, is the great desire of that father's heart; but the manner in which that father made his fortune from its first beginnings—the rigid economy, the patient reflection, by which he gradually and practically acquired a knowledge of the value and use of money, is a profound mystery in which he has never been instructed: to him it has ever been a sealed book. With the simplicity of a child, and defenseless as an unarmed man in battle, he commences the warfare of life, and ignorant of the great mainspring of all human action, nearly deceived by false colors, and unskilled in the manœuvres constantly going on around him, is it strange that, betrayed into ambush, or insensible of the mine about to explode beneath his feet, he should fall in the unequal struggle in which he is engaged? Give that boy in his youth the learning of the schools, but let that parent beware that to this there be speedily added a knowledge of that fifth element we have so feebly attempted to describe. That slowly but surely he be taught its use, and that wisely but forcibly he be turned against its abuse.

And we hesitate not to say that in no country in the world is this knowledge so important as in our own. We are not a people divided into classes and governed by hereditary statesmen; nor does the pursuit or progress of the father mark out or limit that of the son. Give that son an education, aid him with a small amount of capital, in the use of which he has been previously instructed by a prudent father, and with these elements of success the future presents to that young man brighter prospects than in all the world beside. What cares he for my lord, or duke, or other titled dignitary; nor is he indebted to kingly patronage for his nobility: but with the true dignity of a man acknowledges but one sovereign, and to whom alone he is bound to render homage and obedience.

> "A prince can make a belted knight,
> A marquis, duke, and a' that;
> But an honest man's aboon his might,
> 'Guide faith he mauna fa' that.
>
> For a' that, and a' that,
> These dignitaries and a' that,
> The pith o' sense and pride o' worth,
> Are higher rank than a' that."

With such a race before us, and so many incentives to industry, it is no wonder that nature is frequently overtasked, that wrinkled age marks us beyond our years, and that we take Time so violently by the forelock, that the loss of our own is sometimes the consequence.

The strong man should remember that he is mortal, and the old man that his race is well nigh run. The world itself would soon become exhausted by an ever-growing crop, and its fertility turned into barrenness, were it not renewed and refreshed by its change of seasons. It has its spring time, its summer growth, its autumn's harvest, and it must have its winter's rest. Are there no seasons in the life of man after the spring, summer and autumn have produced their golden harvest? Shall he not have his winter's rest? And who can calculate the value of that rest? The footsteps of old age, so feebly and yet so certainly approaching the narrow house of death, should be made as upon hallowed ground, undisturbed by earthly toil, and that peace be commenced in the heart that knows no end.

The folly of prodigality in the use of money scarcely needs a remark. It displays a weakness of character and a vacuity of mind almost allied to want of principle.

To the great majority of mankind money will always be a scarcity; and with such an urgent demand for it, its waste or improper use can only be compared to the thoughtlessness or indifference of that man who, in time of famine, would open his storehouse only to cast his treasures before useless popinjays or ravenous wolves, regardless of the supplications of his fellow creatures.

Riches, like great talents, bring great labors and responsibility, and cannot be thrown away on senseless follies or corrupt extravagance without future accountability.

The two extremes of extravagance and parsimony are frequently and strikingly exemplified in dress. With some persons their time and thoughts are so evidently occupied with the material, style, effect and magnificence of their dress, as to negative all idea of existence outside the dress circle: and for Mrs. A. in some new costume to outshine Mrs. B., is an achievement of ambition, strategy and genius, to which the taking of Sebastopol is "a mere flash in the pan."

The opposite extreme, while assuming an air of more independence, but indicates a greater vanity, embodied in miserly meanness. The man who from choice places his unbrushed head in an old hat, and his person in old clothes that might grace a pillory or feed a paper mill, is a vulgar fraction of a man, his humility impertinent hypocrisy, his boasted manliness a want of decency, his economy a reproach, and his neglected person an offence to the dignity of human nature. Where does he find an authority for such a neglect of himself? The foliage of the trees, the lilies of the field, the flowers of the garden and the plumage of the birds, all demonstrate that nature is not his teacher, for it is from her that we learn the sublime and the beautiful.

To fully appreciate the worth or comprehend the character of some particular object or thing, it is sometimes expedient to contrast it with its opposite: and if upon this principle we would ascertain the value and use of money, we should for a moment look at poverty. With some learned divines doubts have arisen as to what constituted the "unpardonable sin," but the D. D.s of the world have never had any doubts upon that question, and have long since decided, with a greater unanimity than a two-thirds vote, that it was the "sin of poverty."

Poverty and riches! Why, the contrast is that of despair and hope, sickness and health, slavery and freedom, darkness and light. Poverty, unlike all other sins, has no concealment, no friends, but stands alone; contagion is written upon it, and, like the withered trunk of some blasted tree, it has neither branch nor leaf to protect or shelter it against the summer's heat or winter's cold.

In the world we see many changes; and experience teaches that the knave, after years of prosperity, can sometimes afford to become honest, a liar to speak the truth, a drunkard (thanks to the temperance cause) to become sober, a lawyer to recognize a conscience, a doctor, after much experience, not to attempt another man's life, the deaf to hear, the blind to see, and last, though not least, a woman to close her speech. But poverty ever remains without one redeeming quality. It is a leprosy that none dare touch, a plague which, when it once takes hold of its victim, banishes alike both friend and foe.

There are many views we would like to present, but we must not further tax your patience, for the subject of money, its uses and abuses, is inexhaustible.

In contemplating the subject of our lecture, there is a wisdom which teaches a lesson, but too little understood and practiced in the world, and without which we can never truly comprehend this great question. That, before a future tribunal there will be neither rich nor poor, for "God is no respecter of persons." The world has no arithmetic to calculate the value of a good action, as it shall revolve in its progress through time and eternity. Nineteen centuries have nigh passed away, and the gift of the widow's two mites still stands recorded; and, like the incense of an holy offering, shall continue to rise up before the world for its example so long as time shall last.

The rich and the poor sprang from the same origin, must all, sooner or later, arrive at the same end; and, while traveling life's journey, let there be not too great a distance between them.

At the end thereof the memory of a good action will be better than wealth; and the only question then to be answered, and to which eternity will give ear, will not be, what have I, but what am I?

Money is finite, we are infinite; it can only accompany us to the grave. There must, then, be an eternal separation—to prepare for which let us treasure in our hearts the words of Him who to the greatest wisdom added the greatest riches: "Happy the man that findeth wisdom, and the man that getteth understanding."

For the hereafter of it is better than the merchandise of silver, and the gain thereof than fine gold.

SHARON FEMALE COLLEGE.

We wish to invite attention to this institution. This is a Conference College, and has been managed by Methodist preachers, appointed by the Mississippi Conference, for a number of years. It has been embarrassed with debt for several years, but the trustees have relieved it of that difficulty. Our only object now is to enlarge and improve; but this we cannot do without means.

Sharon is a pleasant village, located at a central point of our Conference; a healthy region, good society, and an intelligent community. We have also a flourishing Male College. So parents and guardians may send their sons and daughters together.

We wish to direct the attention of the Church and the public to the fact that at our last Conference Rev. H. T. Lewis was appointed agent for this Institution. His object will be to collect old subscriptions and solicit new ones. We hope, as this is a Conference College proper, that our worthy brother will find favor everywhere.

Our brethren might give us aid without injury to themselves. We hope, as this is our college, that the preachers will give Brother Lewis all the aid they can. We recommend him heartily to our brethren and friends everywhere.

Our college is doing well, under the circumstances; but we must expand and progress. Under the direction of Rev. J. W. Shelton and lady, we trust the institution will prosper.

RELIGIOUS INSTRUCTION OF NEGROES.

NUMBER TWO.

It has been said that man is a religious animal; and it is, perhaps, true that there is in man everywhere a felt and acknowledged want of something on which the heart can rest beyond anything which the man himself or all else that is earthly or visible can furnish—an inward consciousness of the existence of superior and invisible beings. In other words, an acknowledgement of the existence of an invisible being or beings, vast in knowledge and terrible in power, who affect mysteriously the movements and destinies of men; and this conviction leads to certain forms of opinion or acts of devotion to propitiate or please the mysterious being who is recognized as supreme. This is the man's religion, be it what it may, and the services he performs will be pure and sanctifying and good according to the truth and clearness of the views of the character of the being thus worshipped. The negro, in his African home, is no exception to this general rule. Even in the deserts and jungles and mangrove swamps of Africa, he is the child of superstition; his mind is filled with vague and gloomy views of the existence and character of the gods many and lords many who are the objects of his idolatry; and when borne over the deep and landed on these shores, although surrounded by Christian institutions, if left uncared for, his fatherland religion still sticks to him; and even when he has received some partial instruction, or instead of being properly instructed in religion, he is left to imbibe some religious notions as the sponge does water from the surrounding atmosphere, his religious opinions and actings are apt to present a strange combination of error and truth, the former largely preponderating, and his faith and his teachings are apt to be largely antinomian, and tend to licentiousness and disobedience.

In all neighborhoods where there are many slaves, will be found more or less of those men who, claim to be religious teachers, knowing scarcely anything of religion except a few technical phrases peculiar to the different churches. They set themselves up as preachers, and preaching a doctrine that loosens the bonds of Christian obligation and leaves its votaries free to indulge the most brutal lusts, no wonder if they have many disciples, over whom they exercise a strong and destructive influence. Irreligious masters who prohibit the introduction of the gospel on their plantations, and who complacently boast that they have excluded superstition from their negroes, may rest assured that they have made a great mistake. They have indeed condemned their servants, as far as their power goes, to ignorance of a religion which would have made them kind and obedient, would have led them to love their master and pray for him, and seek his interest and be trustworthy. In short, they have banished the teachings of God and the Bible, but on every plantation superstition has its oracle and its priests, and their teachings inculcate theft and disobedience and licentiousness in its worst forms, and the law is only obeyed through fear of the lash; and the owner's goods belong to the slave, and he is taught to appropriate them whenever it can be done safely. Take away the fear of God from your negroes, and what security have you for the safety of your property, to say nothing of your person? Do you rely on your own personal influence, your plantation police, the vigilance of your overseer? To some extent these regulations may be efficient; but unless those agents be ubiquitous, it must be evident that none of them will be sufficient to accomplish the purpose contemplated. Both master and overseer sometimes sleep, and the negro can sally forth on his errands of mischief unwatched by the eye of human vigilance, with no witness of his conduct save the pale moon or the twinkling stars that look out from the firmament above, and these, he knows, tell no tales. Now bring to bear upon the negro's heart the great truth that God sees him, and that wherever he goes and wherever he turns, by day or by night, the eye of the Eternal, the Omniscient One, is upon him; get his soul imbued with this great truth, "Thou, God, seest me," and you have called into action a principle which will be more persuasive and more controlling than all the agencies put together—lead him to understand this glorious being, and to love him and trust him; and an element is introduced into his character which will make him honest and sober on the right basis. He loves God and he loves his master, and he loves his wife and he loves his children, and his humble home has comforts and endearments and attractions unknown before.

And, after all we may say on the subject, one of the grand and most effective agencies for reproving, civilizing and saving men is the power of home comforts and home influences. Hence the wisdom of giving to our slaves comfortable homes, and leading them as far as we can to appreciate their comforts.

But if all these views be correct, and the gospel must be preached to our slaves, who must be the prominent agents in beginning and carrying on this great work? We answer, it must begin at home. The owners must move in this matter; the master and mistress and the young people of the family must in some measure become missionaries, by conversation and catechetical instruction. There must be a house of worship for your negroes on the plantation, or what would perhaps be better, several plantations unite and build a decent chapel, where the servants can be collected together every Sabbath and hear the Word read and expounded, procure for this purpose a faithful and judicious preacher, a man fully imbued with the spirit of his Master, who loves his work, and deems it no condescension on his part to be a negro preacher, but who loves the work and esteems it an honor to be engaged in it; and then, when you have secured the services of a faithful pastor for your blacks, don't feel that your duty is done, but remember that you must decidedly and earnestly and patiently co-operate with him—help him all in your power; let him feel that you appreciate his labors; let your negroes see that you respect and honor the man whom you have called to be their own instructor in the things of God. If he gives his whole time to your service, see that he has a comfortable home among you and provision for his family's support.

Do you object that the gathering of so many blacks together from different plantations is liable to abuse! Then have a place in the chapel for such of the white people as choose to attend, and do you and your neighbors go and worship with your slaves. This will be good in more ways than one. It will keep in order such of the negroes as might be disposed to act improperly, will encourage such of them as are inclined to do right, will be a pledge to the public that nothing wrong is either taught or practiced there, and will cheer and encourage the heart of the preacher.

It may be a little trying to you to spend the Sabbath thus, but if you are a Christian you will soon love it, and if not a Christian, it is high time you should humble yourself and become one. Perhaps this may be the very instrumentality by which God designs to effect your conversion. At any rate try it faithfully for a year or two—it can hardly fail to bless you. True, it may deprive you of a little worldly chat with the gay people whom you might meet at the white people's church, and might save you perhaps from furnishing a few Sunday dinners to people of the same class. But never mind. When you come to foot up the final account, in view of the eternal audit, you will discover that nothing has been lost, but the gain has been immense. If you choose to apply to the Conference for a preacher, very well, but if the planters in a certain locality can find a local preacher that will suit them, let them employ him and pay him themselves, without throwing themselves on the Conference. In this plan there are several advantages. In the first place, they will have the man of their choice, and can keep him as long as it suits them, and they will be identified with the work much more efficiently than where they simply give permission to have their slaves instructed, and ease their consciences by paying some twenty or even fifty dollars towards having their people attended to, and then throw the burthen of support upon the Missionary Society. What men pay little or nothing for, they soon cease to feel much interest in. Hence there are not a few masters who think they have conferred a great favor on the Church when they allowed a missionary to visit their people, and regard that act as discharging them from all personal obligations in the matter.

This surely ought not to be. Perhaps one cause why the colored missions in some places have done so badly may be found in this very thing. The owners, who ought to be the undeviating and warm encouragers of the work, seem to have thrown off all personal responsibility in the matter, and the overseers, very likely, are secretly inimical to the success of the missionary, and by studied indifference, if not in some more open and decided manner, throw cold water on the whole movement—which brings us to another point which we shall notice in our next.

JAMES O. ANDREW.

COLLEGE DISTURBANCE.—In consequence of the silence observed by the South Carolina papers in regard to the disturbances which recently occurred in the College at Columbia, in that State, the most exaggerated reports have been circulated and published in Northern papers, all concurring in stating that desperate conflicts took place between the citizens and police on the one side and students on the other. The Charleston Courier, of Tuesday last, thus briefly sums up the actual occurrences:

There was a disturbance; one student was put in the guard-house; there was a rally of the students to the rescue, and a collision the next morning between two of the students and the officer by whom the arrest had been made; but no lives were lost, and no permanent injury sustained by any one; and though the disturbance in the college was so great that, for a time, the exercises were suspended, they yet are to be resumed to-morrow, with every prospect of tranquility.

AGRICULTURAL.

IMPORTANT DISCOVERY.—Jean Blanc, of New Orleans, represented to be an agriculturalist of considerable scientific attainment, has secured letters patent from the United States for the discovery of a process converting thirty different varieties of plants which grow wild in enormous quantities in various sections of the United States into flax of great strength and beautiful texture. Specimens of the flax and of the plants from which it is made are on exhibition in New York. Among the most interesting of the specimens are the flax made from the stalks of the cotton plant, large quantities of which are burnt on the Southern plantations to get them out of the way; the century tree, or wild manilla, which grows in abundance in Florida; the wild hollyhock, with a fibre ten to fifteen feet long; the gold nankeen, of a natural color; the vegetable silk and the vegetable wool. The process of preparation we understand, is simple and effectual, preserving all the strength of the staple, and so economical that the flax can be sold at prices far below those at which the article is now sold. [Commercial Advertiser.

THE FARMERS' PROSPECT.—The farmers of the United States have evidently good prices ahead, and they should begin to make their calculations accordingly. It is now quite too late in the season to talk about increasing the wheat crop of 1856. The extent of that matter was determined weeks ago. But the corn crop of the United States is more important than that of wheat. Besides the corn and meal exported, we put the worth of a few millions of dollars into pork, beef, lard &c., much of which comes from corn.

Between this and planting time next spring our farmers may calculate their chances for prices, and plant accordingly. There can be but little doubt, however, but what every species of grain and other agricultural produce will bring higher prices for at least two or three years to come, and how much longer no one can predict with any degree of certainty. It will be perfectly safe for farmers to put in the coming spring all the corn they can manage. Spring wheat, for home consumption, may also be grown with profit. Barley, oats, peas, beans, &c., will probably supply the place of winter wheat in many families. Therefore, if our farmers are vigilant, and get all their things ready for extensive spring and summer crops, the whole country will be greatly benefitted, and the old world supplied with bread.

Alumina consists of a metallic basis united with oxygen, or, in other words, is a rust of a metal. It is called a simple earth. Clay is a mixture of alumina, silex, (or sand,) and the oxyde (or rust) of iron. Next to sand alumina is the most common ingredient in soils. When mixed with sand, it forms the best conceivable soil for plants. The combination is not a simple mixture, but by the combination a chemical action takes place, each leaves its distinctive character, and forms a compound that is neither of the original elements. As Alkali and grease, when mixed, are neither Alkali nor grease, but soap, different from either of the original elements in formation, so alumina, silex and lime, combined, form a compound differing from either of the constituents.

Potash constitutes one-half the weight of potato ashes. This shows the importance of wood ashes as a manure for this crop. As there is 9 60 per cent. of sulphuric acid in the potato ash, it is apparent that plaster (sulphuric acid and lime) is also necessary to insure a good crop.

LAFOURCHE ITEMS.—From the Thibodaux Minerva of Saturday last we extract the following paragraphs:

We cannot drag of the weather. We have had nothing but clouds, rain and mud during the entire week. The Lafourche is brimfull, and the banks overflowed below Lockport.

Should no cold weather intervene to mar present prospects, the fruit crop of this portion of the State will be very abundant. Never have we seen the trees so full of bloom.

The pleasure trips on the Opelousas Railroad to Bayou Boeuf are now becoming common with us. A large party left here on Sunday morning last, and returned in the evening much delighted with the excursion. We doubt not that the approaching summer will be one of unusual gaiety with us, and that Lost Island will become as famous as Nahant.

We hear it mentioned that Messrs. Hall and Hildreth, proprietors of the St. Charles, New Orleans, contemplate erecting a large and spacious Hotel on Lost Island. An establishment of this kind is much needed, and would pay a handsome per centage, if properly attended to. Lost Island is easily reached by one of the most beautiful beaches anywhere to be found on the whole Southern Coast. Oysters and fish of all kinds abound in the greatest plenty. Lost Island is situated about sixty miles from the present terminus of the Opelousas Railroad.

THE ELDORA IMOGENE TRAGEDY.—Our readers will remember the affair last autumn of the scuttling and sinking of the schooner Eldora Imogene in Long Island Sound, and the arrest of a negro charged with the murder of her captain and crew. On the 8th inst. a large sack, containing the body of a murdered man, was picked up on the Brooklyn side. The body was soon afterwards recognized by several men from New York as that of Capt. Palmer, of the Eudora Imogene. The Tribune says:

The remains are in quite a good state of preservation, except portions of the legs, hands and arms, which appear to have been burned, probably to remove marks made in India-ink. On the left hand side of the head, just above the temple, is a scalp wound apparently made with the head of an axe, and on the right hand side of the throat is a deep wound about two inches in length, which seems to have been made by forcing a carving-knife down lengthwise. One of the arteries had been tied up with a cord to prevent the escape of blood. The legs were pressed on the abdomen and tied in that position with strips of course factory cloth, probably torn off from sheets. The body had been placed in a coarse sack, together with a quantity of coal to keep it from floating. In the sack was found a piece of the skirt of an India-rubber overcoat and a monkey-jacket of Russia duck, lined with blue flannel and bound with black or blue binding. These were probably used to prevent any blood from getting on the boat in removing the body some distance from the vessel before it was sunk. The sack was worn through by chafing on the bottom of the river, and as soon as the coal escaped the body floated, and has been carried by the tide to where it was discovered.

Later from Texas.

The steamship Louisiana, Capt. Lawless, arrived on Saturday, from Indianola and Galveston. From the Galveston News of the 14th we extract the following paragraphs:

We regret to learn from sugar planters, who are now in this city, that, from careful and thorough examination, there is scarce a doubt but that nearly all the stubble sugar cane has been destroyed by the severe winter, followed by the heavy and cold rains of February and thus far in March. The plant cane has also suffered severely. We may, therefore, make up our minds that the crop of next year, so far as Texas is concerned, will be the shortest for many years past, if not the shortest ever known. We expect to hear accounts from Louisiana almost as discouraging.

The persons who pursued the Indians to Sanders Pass, brought to San Antonio some fifty horses, some one hundred and forty arrows, one shield, several bows, many "Indian fixins," and also several scalps.

PANNA MARIA.—This is the name of a new town built up near the confluence of the San Antonio and Cibolo rivers, in Karnes county, by Polish emigrants. The town contains one hundred and thirty families. The Texan says they are energetic, and are fast acquiring our language.

The News publishes a letter from Laredo, that the outrages of the Lipan Indians, who cross from the Mexican side of the Rio Grande, have been so frequent of late that the wrath of the citizens of that section can no longer be restrained. These outrages have not been confined to the American side of the river, but are often visited upon the inhabitants of New Laredo, just opposite. Gen. Vidaurri has declared that if the charges against the Lipans can be established, they will be visited with summary punishment. We extract the following paragraph from the letter:

The Mexican born, but now United States citizens of Laredo, despairing of any effectual blow being struck against the Lipans on this side of the river, last week organized a body of sixty men, each armed with a Colt's revolver and rifle—and having despatched spies to ascertain the exact encampment, etc., of the savages, left Laredo on Monday, the 3d inst., and were to have crossed the Rio Grande to attack them about thirty miles above New Laredo, Mexico, the next day. As the party consisted of the principal men of Laredo, and went thoroughly prepared to take ample vengeance, it is to be hoped they have by this punished them severely. It is understood that only one native American citizen crossed with the Mexican adopted citizens, and he was especially invited by them. An ample cavalry force is required along the Rio Grande and at some posts on the Nueces.

The same paper publishes a letter from Grape Creek, Texas, giving an account of a desperate fight between a German wagoner and a party of Indians. The two companions of the German had gone in search of their oxen, leaving him in charge of the wagons, and shortly afterwards he saw eight mounted Indians coming down the mountain towards him at full speed. The letter says:

When he first observed them, they were about three hundred yards from him, and he quickly concluded to defend the wagons and himself as long as possible; so he took the arms out of the wagons, consisting of a double barrel shot gun, (loaded one barrel with a ball, the other with buckshot,) a rifle, well loaded, and a six shooter, loaded also. The Indians came up to within about fifty yards, dismounted, got behind their horses, and shot a great many arrows at Kusenberger. He, in that time, had taken up the shot gun, which did not fire; then, he took the rifle and shot one of the enemy; he fell, then got up, and ran tumbling to the creek, one of his brothers following him. Then the Indians came closer up to the wagons on foot and surrounded them. Kusenberger pulled out his six shooter and now began the close fight. He fired three times, and received two arrows, one through the left arm, the other went about six inches into his back. The brave fighter drove the enemy from the wagons, and soon went off to hunt up his companions, who were not far from the camp. One of them pulled the arrow out of his back, and all three went, resting the wounded man several times, to the first house.

After Kusenberger had left the wagons the thieves came, cut up the wagon-sheets, taking both guns, all the provisions, money and blankets. It was too late to follow them the same day, but the next day, fourteen settlers of Grape Creek scouted the country, but on account of having no trailer, their ride was to no purpose.

Interesting from Hayti.

By an arrival at Richmond, Va., dates have been received from Port au Prince to the 25th ult. The Whig publishes the following particulars of the invasion of Dominica:

His Imperial Majesty, finding his opponents too strong for him, has abandoned his march and retreated to the Cape, where he is now enjoying the repose of quiet life, surrounded by his ministers, officers and some ten thousand of his soldiers.

This campaign seems to have been undertaken by the Emperor less with the idea of conquering the eastern part by force of arms, than by bribery and corruption, as it is well known that long before the first movement of troops large sums of Spanish money had been sent to certain Dominicans, for the encouragement and maintenance of a party said to exist among them favorable to Haytien rule. Report says one hundred thousand Spanish dollars had been sent for distribution, and it is known that his Majesty had with him when he left the capitol some fifty thousand dollars in gold, and ordered additional sums to be sent forward to meet him on the frontiers.

The Dominicans, however, so far from having employed these funds in his favor, set themselves vigorously to work to prepare for a desperate resistance, their troops this time being more numerous and better armed and equipped than ever before, and they have made sad havoc with the poor Haytiens, cutting up whole regiments of them with their minie rifles. What else could have been expected but their destruction, when they were pushed forward utterly without arms capable of defense; their muskets bursting on the first fire, bayonets breaking or bending double on meeting with the slightest resistance, and not least important of all, entirely without food? Men cannot fight after having been enfeebled by long and painful marches, and deprived of the commonest necessaries. Besides all this, the soldiers themselves were opposed to the march, and entire regiments of them, when in presence of the enemy, threw down their arms and refused to fight.

By the Emperor's first proclamation the troops were led to believe they were on a tour of pleasure and were to meet with no opposition, but quietly take possession of a country, the people of which were ready to receive them with open arms. They soon, however, found out their mistake when the balls began to whistle about their ears, and the Dominicans were upon them, cutting them down right and left.

The Haytiens have suffered greatly, and besides the enormous loss of life, the Dominicans took from them three pieces of cannon. The loss of these seems to have made more impression on his Majesty than that of his men.

The Military Hospital at the Cape is filled with the wounded, vast numbers of whom still remain about the field of the last battle, incapable of being removed. Their number, however, is daily diminishing for want of medical care and suitable nourishment, the dysentery having carried off many of them already.

Business all over the Island is in a most wretched state, owing, in a measure, to the removal of so large a portion of the male population from their homes. This last will undoubtedly have a serious influence on the export of coffee of the present crop, and greatly diminish its already small quantity. Some months since the Emperor published an order prohibiting the cutting of any more mahogany or logwood. As this article is quite a valuable one in the list of exports, its prohibition will be seriously felt, particularly under existing circumstances. The greater portion of these crotches were feloniously cut on government lands, and the abuse could only be stopped by forbidding any further exportations.

STAMPS CUT FROM LETTER ENVELOPES ARE VALUELESS.—We understand inquiries continue to be made at the department why stamps cut from stamped envelopes cannot be used in prepayment of letters in the same manner as ordinary postage stamps. Persons, in addressing their letters, sometimes, through carelessness or mistake, destroy the envelope, and, without stopping to reflect, many think it a hardship that having paid the government both for the stamp and envelope, they cannot be allowed to cut out and use the stamps on a plain envelope. The principal reasons why this cannot be permitted are: first, the law gives no value to such stamps, and makes no provision for their use, except when connected with, and forming a part of, the envelopes as prepared under the law, with suitable water marks, etc., to prevent fraud; second, letters in stamped envelopes may be lawfully carried outside of the mail, and when so carried it is believed that the stamps are seldom if ever, cancelled. These are controlling reasons, and will at once commend themselves to every person of reflection.

NEW ORLEANS:

SATURDAY, MARCH 22, 1856.

Items.—Reports from all the cemeteries for the week ending last Sunday sum up only 43 deaths.

Hon. J. P. Benjamin.—To this Senator of Louisiana we are indebted for public documents, valuable to us as a citizen and Journalist.

Rev. J. F. Dowdell has laid us under obligations for public documents.

Lectures.—Dr. Baldwin, by request, is repeating his Armageddon course, in the Lyceum Hall, to larger congregations. He lectures to-night.

Mr. Thackeray concluded his course on Monday night. Only one successful effort out of five.

Dr. Dewey begins a series, on Human Destiny, in Dr. Clapp's Church, next week.

Kansas Mission.—Bishop Early calls for ten or twelve preachers to supply the increasing wants of this new Conference.

Appointments Early.—Our missionary cotton crop is small. Returns for another of the Bastrop kinds, marked "Rhymer," received from R. L. Wilson & Co., 4 Union street. No commission charged. Weight, 462; sold at 10½ cents per pound.

Bishop Andrew's Articles.—We have several members in hand of these profoundly practical and important articles. We need not say, read and digest them.

History and Mode of Baptism.—This work, of Rev. J. S. Chapman is for sale at McGinnis's, 36 Camp street. The preachers generally, and especially of the East Texas Conference, who requested a supply, can order them.

Reformation in Sardinia.—The following are the nine articles proposed as a basis for the reformation of the Sardinian Church to be brought forward in the next session of the Parliament at Turin:

1. The Roman Catholic Church of Sardinia to throw off all dependence of Rome.
2. The King of Sardinia to be the Sovereign Protector of the Church of this kingdom.
3. The priesthood to be paid by the State.
4. The Canon law and the decisions of the Council of Trent to be abrogated.
5. Tradition, as a source of dogmas, to be declared of no force.
6. The reading of the Holy Scriptures to be encouraged, their explanation left to the conscience of each Christian.
7. The Lord's Supper to be received under both forms.
8. The celibacy of the Church to be no longer compulsory.
9. The Latin Language to be no more used in the Church service, and the number of the Church festivals to be diminished.

Notices of New Books.

Messrs. Jenks, Hickling & Swan, of Boston, have rendered the public good service in the substantial and satisfactory style in which they have brought out Dr. Worcester's "Universal and Critical Dictionary of the English Language." This is a book of 1,032 pages, printed on good paper, fair type, bound snugly, and substantially bound.

The introduction contains much curious and useful information in relation to our glorious tongue, with a long and valuable list of all the dictionaries of our language published during the last three hundred and fifty years, with their dates and authors. Also a list of all the dictionaries of the arts and sciences published in our language.

Besides being a pronouncing and defining dictionary, it proposes to answer the purpose of such works as "Crabbe Synonymes." It is furnished with a copious list of Greek, Latin, Scriptural and geographical names, accurately pronounced. We commend the work to the public.

Dr. Smith's "History of Greece," with notes, will continued to the present time by Professor Felton, of Harvard University, is a valuable addition to the historical literature of the day. It fills nearly 700 broad octavo pages. Its mechanical execution does credit to the publishers, Messrs. Hickling, Swan & Brown, of Boston.

"The First Class Reader," compiled by G. S. Hillard, of Boston, and brought out by Messrs. Hickling, Swan & Brown, of Boston, is a superior work of the kind. The feature in the work which strikes us at once as original and useful, is a brief yet comprehensive biographical and critical notice of all the contributions from whose writings the work has been compiled.

Ionia, or Pearl of Pearl River. By Emma D. E. N. Southworth.—2 vols. Philadelphia, T. B. Peterson & Co.: 1856.

Another from this prolific source! We are inclined to think it her best. Its locale is fine things and scenes. For sale by J. Hearl, 63 Camp street, through whom we have our copy.

Vain and Worldly Amusements.

RESOLUTIONS PASSED BY THE FIRST QUARTERLY CONFERENCE OF TUSKEGEE CIRCUIT, ALABAMA CONFERENCE, March 8, 1856.

Whereas, We have seen with grief of mied an increasing inclination on the part of some of the members of our churches to ignore that part of our Discipline forbidding the participation in vain and worldly amusements; and whereas this inclination has evidenced itself of late in visiting circuses, attendance at dancing parties, &c. Therefore—

1. Resolved, By the Quarterly Conference of this Circuit, that this growing evil demands imperatively that decided and immediate action be taken on the subject.

2. Resolved, That generally we deprecate earnestly all efforts to remove the ancient landmarks of primitive Methodism.

3. Resolved, That in particular, inasmuch as we believe that the prohibition to take such diversions as cannot be taken in the name of the Lord Jesus to be of Scriptural weight and authority, we fully and heartily approve of the same, and recommend it to the prayerful and vigilant observance of all our members.

4. Resolved, That if, after such expression of the sense of this Quarterly Conference on the subject, any of our members should persistently continue to disregard this rule, they be dealt with strictly by the authorities of the Church.

5. Resolved, That the preacher in charge of Tuskegee Circuit be instructed to read these resolutions at each church on his Circuit.

6. Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to the New Orleans Christian Advocate and the Charleston Christian Advocate for publication.

The Church at Montgomery.

The pastor gives us the following interesting particulars of the dedication.—En.

Our dedicatory services were held on Sunday, March 2, according to previous notice. Sermon by Bishop Pierce, from 1 Cor., i., 22, 24. It was worthy of the occasion. At the close of the sermon the Bishop took up a collection of about $5,000, thus paying the church out of debt and leaving something for certain sundries yet necessary to the more perfect completion of the building.

The Bishop proved himself to be a first rate beggar, as well as a good preacher. In the course of the collection an excellent move was made by our good brother, Col. Thorington, who moved to be one of ten to give each an additional hundred dollars to constitute the Bishop a life member of the Montgomery Station. An appeal was made to Georgia, and the money was forthcoming. He is the man that Georgia delights to honor, and he is every way worthy of it.

After the collection, the dedicatory prayer was offered up by the venerable father of the Bishop, Dr. L. Pierce, who preached for us a most excellent sermon at 3 P. M., from Psalm xxxiv, 3. The Doctor was fully himself; and were it not for his frosty temples and his furrowed face, the hearer would never have supposed, from the sermon, so full of fresh and vigorous thought, that the preacher had reached the maximum average of "the days of our years." At night the Bishop preached again, and left us the next morning for his home, from which he had been long absent.

T. W. D.

Louisiana Deaf, Dumb and Blind Institution.

We are indebted to the Hon. C. T. Estlin, for the fourth Annual Report of the Louisiana Institution for the Deaf, Dumb and Blind, presented to the General Assembly of the State of Louisiana. It is prepared by Andrew S. Herron, President of the Board of Administrators, and contains a large amount of very valuable information. We are compelled to abridge the contents and give our readers a general resume:

The institution, of which this is the fourth annual report, is stated to have been in a highly prosperous condition during the year past. The number of pupils has increased. Mute pupils have been taught to read and understand books, to write compositions and letters to their friends, in the space of two or three years; and some are almost prepared to leave school. The number of pupils has not been equal to the applications. Want of accommodation has caused this inconvenience; and, in the endeavor to gratify as many as possible, the tenements have been disagreeably crowded. The buildings, at present in course of erection, are very substantial, and there is a fair prospect that many additional pupils may shortly be received. The committee state that, as they receive no reward for their services, they can only be supposed to be animated by the same impulses that are felt by all good citizens. The labor of citizens of our own State has been almost exclusively employed, thereby accomplishing two great benefits at once.

The present exigencies of the Institution require an appropriation of $40,000 for building purposes, and the same amount will be needed for the support of the Institution the ensuing year that was appropriated the past, even with the most rigid economy.—Although during the past three years the pupils have increased to three-fold their original number, the expenses have not advanced in the same ratio.

The health of the pupils has been excellent during the year—not a single death, nor even a severe attack of sickness, having occurred during the session. The careful diet and exercise used, and with them the able medical attendance engaged, are creditors for this result. The expenditures of the Institution, part of which was for labor and building material, that can be summed within the general stock and permanent fund, amounted to $54,763 44. The total number of pupils was forty, of whom precisely one-half were males; and twelve were from the Parish of Orleans.

The rules for the admission of pupils are appended to the report, by which we see that all the deaf and dumb of the State, between the ages of ten and thirty years, and all the blind between the ages of eight and twenty-five, are entitled to an education free of charge, for board and tuition, in the institution. Those desirous of placing a pupil in the institution should write to the General Superintendent, informing him of the name, age and residence of the mute or blind applicant, and the cause thereof, if any is known. Pupils from other states will be admitted for one hundred and fifty dollars per annum. The length of study embraces about seven years. The annual sessions commence on the Wednesday following the 15th of November, and close on the Wednesday following the 15th of August. No sectarian education is given in religion, nor are politics embraced in the course. The government is that of a well-regulated family. The location is one of unsurpassed healthiness and salubrity.

All business letters or letters of inquiry should be addressed to James S. Brown, General Superintendent Institution for Mutes and Blind, Baton Rouge, Louisiana.

For the N. O Christian Advocate.

TOBACCONISING.

NUMBER SIX.

11. Misapplication of the Lord's Money. The right and pious application of the Lord's money is a primary Christian duty. How can a Christian man misapply any of this money?

How much of the Lord's money does a tobacconist misapply in a year? From twenty-five to one hundred dollars! Say an average of fifty, forty or thirty, or whatever you think is true, counting every dime in the year.

A little arithmetic here would not be amiss, with them who know how to cypher things out. Ten times fifty, or twenty times fifty, or five or ten times forty, or thirty times thirty, or ten times thirty—how many.

I do not pretend to be very good at cyphering, but leave each tobacconist to cypher in his own case, and God will look over the sum and see if he does it right.

The Lord's money is religious money—Christian money—church money. He allows each possessor to use as much as his bread and other necessities and conveniences require, but he allows nothing for tobacconising!

I do not know how much of the Lord's money is annually chewed and smoked in the Annual Conferences, severally, of the M. E. Church, South, by the members of the Conference and the local preachers connected with it. If I did know the sum I would put it down here, and if I were to do so, my impression is that it would cause every pious minister who is a tobacconist to quit tobacconising forthwith, for he would be startled at the figures.

My belief is, however, without pretending to anything like accuracy, that it will amount to about from two to three thousand dollars per Conference per annum! How many Conferences are there? Let's see. The Discipline says twenty-three.

Well, now, twenty-three times two thousand are how many? My stars! It's forty-six thousand dollars! And twenty-three times $2,500 would be still more. Is it possible that tobacconising, by the preachers, in our Church, takes out of the Lord's money fifty or sixty thousand dollars per year!

Well! well! It is said that figures don't tell lies, but if so, it is certain they tell some of the most remarkable truths that ever were told.

Fifty thousand dollars a year—and the Lord's money at that!

If the Bible be true, and the principles of Christianity be correct principles, then no man spends his own money for tobacconising.

But this is not quite all of the difficulty. Some ministers are poor; some have families, hard work to make the ends of the year meet. Quarterage comes slow, barely sufficient at best. Have to call upon friends for private donations and loans, which are understood to be nearly equal to donations. Hard, hard work to get along—and spend fifty, or forty, or sixty, or thirty, or seventy dollars a year for tobacconising!

To my mind, this looks badly.

I have heard of people at Conference, hard run—borrow a little here and there—must settle up the regular church money somehow. He borrows from a brother who has not a dime to spare from the necessities of his own family. But he must have at least twenty dollars more. "What shall I do? I must have—where can I borrow twenty dollars?"

And that man spent forty dollars last year for tobacconising!

Well! well! A tobacconising minister borrowing money!

12. Self-Denial.—"But I keep my body under and bring it into subjection."—Scripture.

The doctrine of self-denial, as it is supposed to be taught in the Bible, and as it is commonly preached in the pulpit, if put into practice in the pulpit, would drive tobacco out of the pulpit to-day.

The reason why ministers do not quit tobacco is the very reason why irreligious people do not become religious, viz., a lack of self-denial.

Tobacco has no advocate in the world but the appetite, the mouth, the flesh. The appetite clamors—the appetite clamors. This is the only argument, this is the only reason.

This is precisely the argument of the sinner, if he would speak out what is in him. The habit of sinning has fastened its hands upon him, and will not let him go. And just so in the other case. The habit of tobacconising has fastened its fangs upon him, and will not let him go.

In either case there is no cure beneath the heavens but self-denial. Put this to work, and the thing is done. A Christian, or a person determined to be a Christian, has a way of doing this without much trouble. He, by putting his trust in God, gets the Saviour to do for him, or what is nearly the same thing, gets the Saviour to help him, with almighty help, to do what he would otherwise be unable to do.

Then when he meets with anything he can't do, a thing that ought to be done—which is a common occurrence—he turns to the lever of Omnipotence, which cannot fail, and the thing is done.

I think the habit of tobacconising is sometimes so fastened upon a man that he has not power to quit it. I also think the habit of sinning is so fastened upon a man that he cannot quit it. But in either case the men and God together can certainly effect it.

And we are told that God most certainly will give his help in anything that is right. Then it is a very easy and a very simple thing to quit tobacco. What there is about the thing that you can't do, get God to do it.

This is what I understand by self-denial. Faith and self-denial are but twin aspects of the same great principle, viz., the principle of vicarious energy on the part of Omnipotence.

Now don't let the reader go off and say that I said that sin and tobacconising were absolutely the same. I have not said so. I do not believe that all tobacconisers are sinners. I believe those who make pretensions to religion, or who are religious, are mistaken men, who fail to think soberly about the matter, and who fail to decide the question entirely, irrespective of the clamors of appetite.

But I say that sin and tobacconising are alike in so far as this, that the same thing will cure in either case—viz., the pure principles of faith and self-denial. There is no other medicine for either, except quackery, this side the Cross.

13. The Right and Wrong.—Tobacconising, as a practice, is either right or wrong. If it is right, it ought to be practiced more than it is; if wrong, it ought to be abated.

Let me ask the most inveterate tobacconister this question: Would it be well for this practice to prevail universally in the Church? If not, why not? It would be as right in me as in you, and as right in any one else as in me.

"Take heed to yourselves that your heart be not deceived, and ye turn aside to serve other gods and worship them."—Deuteronomy, xi, 16.

"There is a way which seemeth right to a man, but the ways thereof are the ways of death."—Proverbs. xvi, 25.

"Let no man deceive himself."—1 Corinthians, iii., 18.

I believe there is no difference of opinion with regard to the right or wrong of tobacconising. I never knew any man seriously attempt to defend it. Boys always commence it stealthily. Beginners, old or young, are always ashamed of it until it gets a certain sort of brass soldered into it, and then it walks out in public.

I never knew a well-regulated school the rules of which did not class chewing and smoking in the same category with drinking and swearing, and which did not place them all under the same ban of absolute prohibition. I do not believe a minister in our Church would send his boys to a school where chewing and smoking were allowed.

I know of no reason why it should be allowed in men and denied in boys. Why should not boys smoke and chew? No tobacconist can answer this question. It ought to be taught to boys, or discountenanced in men.

There is a doctrine that teaches that it is more improper for boys to use profane language than men; that it is more improper in boys than in men to drink whiskey, play at cards, smoke cigars, chew tobacco, or indulge in any kind of rowdyism. I do not think so. On the contrary, tobacconising is right in boys if it is not wrong in men. I like to see a boy appear manly. I like to see him talk like a man, act like a man, be a man. I love to see a manly air and manly conduct in boys.

Why ought not a boy of ten or twelve to smoke and chew? I would like to have any tobacconist state a reason.

Nay, more, I do not know of any law of taste, general propriety, morals, physiology, gender or religion, which confines tobacconising to one sex. Custom says that ladies must not smoke cigars or chew unpulverised tobacco. But this rule is founded upon no reasonable thing. I can conceive of no reason why it is any more wrong in a lady to chew tobacco or smoke cigars than in a gentleman.

No sir, let the ladies chew and smoke. A girl of eight years should be taught to chew tobacco and smoke cigars. Why not? Can any man state a reason? I am aware that custom would attach more disgust to it in these cases than in men. But the custom is wrong, unless there be a reason for it. If we do things at all, we must do them fairly and reasonably.

But the truth is, tobacconising is wrong. It is wrong intrinsically and extrinsically; it is wrong absolutely and contingently; it is wrong mediately and immediately, directly and indirectly; it is wrong presently and remotely; it is wrong physically and wrong socially; it is wrong in men, wrong in ministers, wrong in women and wrong in children. It is wrong in its pecuniary aspects, wrong morally, and wrong religiously. It is wrong to smoke in churches, wrong to chew and bedaub a pulpit. It is wrong to smoke in a lady's face, wrong to bespittle and bedaub the hearth, fireplace, fire-brasses or carpet of a friend. It is wrong to spit tobacco juice on a lady's dress or on a gentleman's cloak. It is wrong to smoke in the street, in stores, houses or steamboats. It is wrong to teach boys to smoke or to teach girls to chew tobacco, either in block or powder. It is wrong in old men, wrong in young men, wrong habitually and wrong occasionally. It is wrong to begin, wrong to continue. It is a wrong to yourself, a wrong to your family, wrong to your neighbors, wrong to society and wrong to the Church. It is wrong in itself and wrong in its relations. Tobacconisers themselves know its wrong, they admit it's wrong, they say it's wrong, they feel it's wrong. It is wrong in the sight of man and wrong in the sight of God.

QUERIES, WHICH OUGHT TO LEAD TO INQUIRIES.

Mr. Editor—In the ordination service for Elders (Dis, p. 178) occurs the following question, which all of us who have taken upon us the vows of that order have responded to in the presence of our brethren: "Will you be diligent to frame and fashion yourselves and your families according to the doctrines of Christ, and to make both yourselves and them, as much as in you lieth, wholesome examples and patterns to the flock of Christ?"

Now I wish to inquire:

1. Whether the Elder whose children, while under age and living at home, attend the theatres and dancing parties, keeps that vow? Is it or is it not to be presumed that if he does his duty such things will not occur?

2. If such children have attained their majority, and still reside in their father's family, and attend the theatre and similar places of worldly amusement, is it to be presumed that he has kept this vow, unless he make it distinctly appear that he has used proper efforts to check such practices?

3. Can an Elder and his family be considered "wholesome examples and patterns to the flock of Christ" while such practices exist?

4. Ought not the Church, and especially those of her members upon whom may devolve the duty of elevating some of their brethren to prominent and responsible positions, to be advised of the example which ministers and their families present to the Church and the world, upon the above and kindred points?

By giving your readers your views upon the above points, Mr. Editor, you will confer a favor on many.

Nemo.

Remarks.—Our correspondent's questions are put like some of St. Paul's—with the force of strong assertion and even argumentation.

That last one cuts like a knife. Scriptural directions for selecting ministers to be promoted to responsible and prominent places take in a great breadth. They do not rest on a single brilliant quality—some one talent possessed in excess or existing in solitary grandeur. But they have respect to age, temper, domestic circumstances, social reputation, personal disposition, habits and influence. These items make up the safe average. And many are the instances in which the Church has been blessed more than was expected under the administration of servants selected according to Scriptural directions; and sadly damaged, if not scandalized, by others, selected in disregard of them.

ANOTHER CHURCH DEDICATED.

Brunswick Landing, Miss.

One more sanctuary has been erected; one more gate to heaven has been opened. The Church Universal, which consists of all who truly repent and sincerely believe the gospel, has been enlarged by one more edifice for the reception of weeping penitents and rejoicing Christians.

Our new church was dedicated to Almighty God on last Sabbath (fourth Sabbath in February.) The dedication sermon was delivered by Rev. Charles K. Marshall. All who heard it were much delighted, and I humbly trust many were truly benefitted. Text, Psalms, 27: 4—"One thing have I desired of the Lord, that will I seek after; that I may dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of my life, to behold the beauty of the Lord and to inquire in his temple." Well did the preacher enjoin upon all the importance of following the example of the Psalmist in seeking the thing which we desire of the Lord. He showed, by many striking examples, that this was done, and done with zeal, so far as the things of this world are concerned, but that it was often neglected in those things which pertain to the salvation of the soul. He spoke at large on the privileges of the sanctuary, where children are taught the elements of the Christian religion, where prayer is continually offered, where the Word of God is read, and where the everlasting gospel is preached by the ambassador of Christ. He spoke of the connection between the pastor and his charge; and on this point the preacher entered into the feeling of his theme, and drew tears from the eyes not wont to weep. "To behold the beauty of the Lord." Upon this point, also, the preacher dwelt at some length; talked of the moral perfections of the Deity; the beauties of holiness and the deformities of sin. He spoke of intellectual and moral beauty in man, and the importance of intellectual and moral culture to fit and qualify us for the discharge of the duties we owe to our fellow-beings in our pilgrimage through life.

The day of our meeting was somewhat unfavorable, and the congregation was not so large as was expected; and yet, all, both preacher and people, seemed to be pleased with the dedication services.

Our church building cost two thousand dollars. It is near the river, and five miles below the county site. The building is entirely finished, and displays the charms of a simple architecture and the beauties of unpretending taste. I trust and pray that this building may be to many an anxious soul "none other than the house of God and the gate of heaven."

Death of Dr. Bond.—The telegraph brings us intelligence of the death of the Editor of the Christian Advocate and Journal, at New York, on the 14th inst. What Thomas Ritchie was to the political, Thomas Bond was to the religious press. A distinction won in both cases by eminent talent.

During a debate in the United States Senate on the 10th inst., Mr. Hale read an extract from the London Telegraph, which represented Mr. Seward and Mr. Foot as being extremely belligerent, and another from La Patrie, Louis Napoleon's organ, which represented Mr. Banks, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, as a black man, saying, that in the double capacity of a colored man and Abolitionist, he had inspired profound disgust in the minds of the Southern members. The reading of these articles occasioned excessive laughter.

The Cherished Hope.

BY WM. R. MCCURRY.

Among the ills and woes of life,
That combat to destroy,
There looms fond and cherished hope,
That fills our hearts with joy;
It nestles in the bosoms of
The friends that here must part,
And sheds a ray of sunshine o'er
The bruised and broken heart.

It makes us bear our lot through life
With smiles instead of tears,
And lulls to rest the wounded form
That's rent with bodily fears.
It is the hope—the cherished hope—
That we shall meet above;
Where pain and sorrow never come,
But all is joy and love.

NATCHEZ DISTRICT, MISS. CONFERENCE.

Jackson, La., March 11, 1856.

Mr. Editor—Following the example of some of the bishops, I pen this letter and send it to you. I have been one entire round on this large district, which cost me a little over a thousand miles travel on horseback and buggy, to attend eleven quarterly meetings, some of which were failures, on account of bad weather and mistakes as to time. The preachers are all at their posts, and doing all they can for the cause of Christ and Methodism.

I am every day impressed with the fact that a conscious evidence of a call to preach the gospel, and a sure and certain expectation of a reward beyond the grave, if complied with, is the main element of Methodism. But for this, how many places, now supplied with the regular ministration of the Word of Life, would be left without?

As it respects the general state of the Church, I would remark that there are no signs of a general declension, still there is needed much to bring things up to the standard of the gospel of Christ. The doctrine of Christian perfection, as held by Wesley and Fletcher, is not insisted on to the extent it should be; and, as a consequence, is not professed nor enjoyed as it should be. Still there are some true and faithful witnesses of this essential doctrine of the New Testament.

Centenary College

is in as prosperous a state as it ever has been at any time of its history. The President, Rev. J. C. Miller, A. M., as an experienced officer in every respect, has surpassed the highest expectations of his friends, and has entirely confounded his enemies, if he had any, by his energy and firmness in the discharge of all his duties. So I, with every one that I have conversed with, can say of a truth that Centenary has a President now in every respect equal to any that has ever been here before. I am the more special in this because there was some fear felt by some of the friends of the college, for a time, when Bro. Miller was elected.

I can say just as much for the whole faculty of the college. Every man is up to the full mark in his work. The Junior exhibition has just passed off with high and eminent credit both to the young gentlemen who spoke and the faculty who taught them. So I can say to any man who wants to educate his son, he can do it as well at Centenary now as anywhere in the United States.

The School for Young Ladies, under the charge of Rev. B. Jones and lady, is, in some respects, more prosperous than it ever has been. It has a corps of as highly educated and accomplished teachers as can be found in any institution in the South, or anywhere else. Bro. Jones is a fine specimen of a Methodist preacher, and besides teaching and managing one of the largest female schools in the country, is doing the full work of an itinerant preacher. To all who desire their daughters taught in a first rate Methodist school, without the dogmas of sectarianism, I would say send to this school.

Dr. Speer's School, of Natchez, is doing well. The Doctor is, as is very well known, an able teacher, and has well qualified assistants. I spent one night with him. A large number of boarders are in attendance, and as well ordered a family as can be found. One of the teachers, who had been an Episcopalian, had recently been converted and joined the Methodist Church.

So you see, Mr. Editor, we are doing something for and in the great work of education. And as long as the pure doctrines of the gospel, as taught by Wesley, are believed and preached by us, all is well. Aye, the more we do in this great work, the better for the Church and the country too. It is such weapons I would use in the great conflict with Infidelity and Romanism.

Politicians have their calling and work, and we, as a church, ours. And I think no one can object if we take hold of this great agent or instrument to bring the power and influence of the gospel of Christ to bear on the masses. If men are thus educated the chances are to get pure patriots and effective examples to the youth of the country in high places.

Yours, truly,

L. Campbell.

STATE SURVEY.

We have received a copy of the report of the Special Committee of the New Orleans Academy of Sciences, on the importance of a geological and scientific survey of the State of Louisiana. The Committee embraces a number of gentlemen whose names are the only guarantees needed for the correctness of their conclusions and the judiciousness of their opinions—Messrs. Riddell, Benedict, Copes, Blanchard, Hartos, Chilton and Gordon. From their report we take a few facts of direct bearing upon the subject and intended to support the object which they have in some degree vitalized.

The report commences by stating that it is eminently desirable there should be a systematic and thorough survey of the State territory in reference to its mineral and agricultural resources, its botanical and zoological productions, and its sanitary conditions and capabilities. Almost all the other States, old and new, have already done this and are profiting from knowledge of local resources thus obtained. The Legislature of this State, in 1841, appointed a committee to look into the feasibility of such a proceeding and there the whole matter ended, excepting some cursory investigations which have since been lost. It is inferred that this State offers no great diversity of geological formations, being for the most part recent alluvion; the North and North-west portion exhibits tertiary and perhaps secondary formations, but the greater part is alluvial, washed down by freshets of the great river that centers it.

There is reason to suppose that many useful metals and minerals abound in different parts of the State, although not yet discovered in any quantity. Gypsum, valuable in the arts, in building as a cement, and as a manure; common salt, which is generally associated with gypsum; lignite, a mineral coal—of more recent formation than the anthracite and bituminous—and stone coal, are all supposed to belong to the State. We have numberless beds of shell-marl, and it is supposed there are marsh-beds, rich in phosphates, or potassa, two very important ingredients of a good soil for producing cereal and fruits. If they should be discovered, the expenses of a survey would be repaid a thousand times over to the State, and every section of it; and, even if they should not, a correct analysis of the nature and composition of the various qualities of soil, and their different adaptabilities, is very important and useful.

Incidentally, a survey like the one proposed, would bring to light much valuable information respecting our topography and hydrography, thus giving a world of valuable information as to the best means of preventing overflows; and if a geological and mineralogical survey should be prosecuted, in connection with the topographical and hydrographical one, a great amount of practical knowledge of the first importance would result.

The committee suggests that an investigation into the potable and mineral qualities of all our indigenous waters, should also be prosecuted; including the lakes, bayous, rivers, creeks, lagoons, wells and springs, which, as the waters of the State are supposed to be highly hygienic and curative, would amply repay an analysis. The plan, it is suggested, should embrace a collection of complete sets of our rocks, minerals, sands, clays, marls, variety of soil and samples of water, accompanied with labels, detailing where they are found, and stating the merits they possess. The flora and fauna of the State—including its weeds, grasses, herbs, flowers, mosses, insects, reptiles, fishes, birds and quadrupeds—should accompany the survey, and would be very useful, as well as interesting; and might lead to a reduction of those which are injurious to the crops. It is thought, too, that superior native grasses, for making hay, would be among the discoveries.

In order to carry this measure forward, an annual appropriation of ten or fifteen thousand dollars, it is thought, would be sufficient; and the results would, indirectly, more than repay the cost.

The Academy suggests that the sanitary condition of the State should be explored at the same time with its agricultural, botanical and geological character, and that a registration of births, deaths and marriages, as recommended to the Legislature in 1852, should be compelled by law. The establishment of meteorological stations in several parts of the State and a central bureau in this city, to regulate and correspond with the others, is also urged.

With regard to a geological survey of the State, there can be no doubt that the advantages accruing therefrom would more than repay the cost. "An annual outlay of ten or fifteen thousand dollars, exclusive of the cost of printing an annual report of the progress," is a very liberal estimate of the expense, however. The State of New Hampshire was very carefully examined, geographically, geologically, mineralogically and otherwise, and a volume of reports printed at a cost, including the whole, of less than six thousand dollars, by Dr. Jackson. The State of New York, also, published four or six volumes, as large and almost as minute as those of England, for less than sixteen thousand dollars, and Massachusetts did the same for twelve thousand dollars. We are heartily in favor of the plan. It would do for us that which can be done by no other means. It would write down the history and give the character of every parish; would tell planters to what their attention should be turned and how; would explain the best methods of increasing present crops, and point out others of equal value; would show a great many improvements and be valuable to almost every individual. If the State will secure the services of a competent geologist, as it may, at a salary of four thousand dollars per annum, with such assistance as he deems requisite, a geological survey would be one of the best things that legislation could insure.

Particulars of the Loss of the Steamboat Henry Lewis.—We received by telegraph a few days ago, a brief account of a collision between the steamers Henry Lewis and Edw. Howard, in the Ohio river, near Evansville, In., by which the former was sunk and a number of lives lost. The officers of the steamer Hungarian furnish the following particulars of the disaster:

The Hungarian, a few hours after the collision, came up to the wreck of the Lewis, and took off the surviving passengers, and all the freight that was above water. The Howard was alongside the wreck, and did not leave until Capt. Emerson, of the Lewis, had made arrangements with the Hungarian for a barge, which she had in tow, and had transferred his passengers to the Hungarian.

The Lewis sunk in about three minutes after the collision with the Howard, which occurred about half-past 4 o'clock in the morning. About the time she had fairly settled on the bottom, the forward part of the boat was discovered to be on fire. She was then lying across the current, some eighty yards distant from the Kentucky shore. The Howard went to her assistance. In doing which she had to run head on, and the hull being sunk, there was no resistance to the Howard, except the upper works, which received such a shock from this second collision that the skylight from one end of the boat to the other broke through and fell upon the cabin floor, and the whole cabin was started off. Many passengers were caught in the ruins. Some succeeded in extricating themselves, while others were cut out with axes, they indicating their whereabouts by calling for assistance. Others perished in their rooms or among the fragments of the cabin.

The number of lives lost is variously estimated at from twenty to fifty. There was $16,000 insurance on the hull of the Henry Lewis, and $6,000 on her freight list. The portion of the freight brought by the Hungarian is consigned to Rogers, McGuire & Co., to be sold for account of underwriters.

☞ In 1701, the population of the English American colonies was estimated by Dr. Humphreys, as follows: Massachusetts, 70,000; Connecticut, 30,000; Rhode Island, 10,000; New Hampshire, 10,000—making an aggregate of 120,000; or less than the city of Boston alone has now—one hundred and fifty years after. At the same time, the Middle and Southern were set down at 142,000; of which New York had 30,000; the Jerseys, 15,000; Pennsylvania, 20,000; Maryland, 25,000, (being five thousand more than Pennsylvania); Virginia, 40,000; North Carolina, 5,000 and South Carolina, 7,000—a grand total of 262,000.

In 1755, the estimate reached 1,046,000, a growth of 774,000 in 54 years.

Cost of Bridging the Mississippi.—We learn that while the river remained closed by ice at St. Louis, the authorities of that place took advantage of the opportunity to ascertain the practicability of a bridge across the Mississippi, at that point, by measuring the width of the stream and sounding its depth through holes cut in the ice. As the result of their investigations, it appears that a bridge can be contracted at a cost of about one million of dollars.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

THE TREASURER OF THE MINISTERIAL EDUCATION SOCIETY OF THE ALABAMA CONFERENCE OF THE M. E. CHURCH, SOUTH, acknowledges the receipt of the following sums up to March 1, 1856:

From Dr. I. C. Duboso, Mobile, Ala., amount of subscription $100
From Rev. Alexander McBryde, on the $20 resolution 20
From Rev. E. Callaway, on the same resolution 20
Total amount $140

Will the members of Conference bear in mind the resolution adopted at their late session with so much unanimity! It is one thing to resolve, it is another to act! We want action—action that will bring the money! Claims are coming in, and liabilities are being incurred by the Society for the education and board of some five or six young men, now in a course of training for the work of the ministry, to which they profess to have been called of God. Will some of our laymen, whom God hath blessed with the means, imitate the example of the worthy brother whose name heads this list?

Address the Treasurer, at Montgomery, Ala.

WASHINGTON, March 10.—According to documents sent to the Senate to-day, the instructions to Commodore McCauley, commanding the Home Squadron, issued in April last, after the Spanish frigate Ferolano had fired into the United States steamer El Dorado, were to the effect that when a similar outrage shall be committed on any vessels rightfully bearing our flag he must promptly interpose and resist the exercise of the assumed right of visitation, and repel the interference by force. The Executive taking the ground that the conduct of the authorities of Cuba in hailing and searching our vessels cannot rest on any plea of territorial jurisdiction on the high seas and in the vicinity of the island of Cuba, this government denying the existence of any state of facts to warrant the exercise of belligerent rights. This matter was promptly brought to the attention of Spanish authorities by the State Department.

WASHINGTON, March 11.—Two new four story brick dwellings on Twenty-first street, between E. and F. streets, owned by Mrs. Taggert, formerly a resident of New York, were burned early this morning. John Anderson, of the Washington Hose Company, was killed by the falling of a wall. He leaves a wife and five children. Several other firemen were slightly injured. The loss by this fire is not less than $15,000.

PHILADELPHIA, March 11.—The boiler in the steam-turning establishment, on Master street, belonging to Mr. Beck, exploded this morning, nearly demolishing the building—killing three of the workmen, Mr. Eckert and his son, and another person, name unknown. The rest of the workmen escaped unharmed. Mr. Beck, the proprietor, was in the cellar at the time, acting as engineer. He escaped with some slight injuries.

FERRY BOAT BURNED—LOSS OF LIFE.

BY THE SOUTHERN AND NATIONAL LINES.

PHILADELPHIA, March 15.—Last evening, while the ferry boat New Jersey was crossing the Delaware, she took fire in the middle of the stream, and was with great difficulty, owing to the floating ice, run ashore upon the bar opposite Arch street. There were about a hundred passengers on board, many of whom jumped into the river and were rescued by boats; after clinging to the ice for some time.

It is asserted that over thirty were either drowned or burned. The boat burned to the water's edge.

NEW YORK, March 14.—The California mail steamship has arrived, bring one million and a half in specie. Our Cotton market is quiet, with sales to-day of 2,000 bales. Flour is quiet; sales of 6,000 barrels. Corn, 75c. Freights dull.

Congressional.

WASHINGTON, March 12.—A sharp personal debate took place to-day between Senators Trumbull and Douglas. Crittenden and Sumner also participated in the debate.

In the House, Kansas affairs were discussed.

FROM WASHINGTON.

PHILADELPHIA, March 17.—Sixteen bodies of the victims of the late frightful disaster on the Delaware river have been found. Twenty or thirty are still missing.

WASHINGTON, March 17.—Senate.—Douglas introduced a bill to-day authorizing the people of Kansas Territory to organize a State Government when they may attain the requisite population.

Kansas Affairs.

WASHINGTON, March 18.—Advices from Kansas state that the Free State officers are about to be arrested by the Federal authorities.

Lyceum Lectures.

Professor Gould prefaced his last lecture by stating that a course of lectures will be delivered in continuation of his own, commencing next Wednesday, and the subject of the first will be "Water."

The previous lecture ran over the history of astronomy for the last fifty years. The whole course has been delivered with an effort to treat astronomy as a science. In a scientific view the planet Saturn is as wonderful as any: it is the only one that has a ring. If the sun had been so surrounded, the center of gravity of the ring must eventually have met the sun and been destroyed. If the ring were gases, the result would have been chemical, but yet destructive. Our own earth is probably surrounded by a gaseous ring. This fact has been inferred from observations made by Mr. Jones, of the Japan expedition; and the fact accounts for meteors.

The binary, or double stars, are stars situated so nearly together, that, like Epsilon, they seem to be one only. These double stars are very frequent, and Orion has four or five—a sextuple. They may be physically connected, or, only apparently so, to us, from their positions. The theory of probabilities, as carried out by Strenier, proves that ninety per cent. are actually double. But, actually, the motion of these bodies, and the fact that they revolve around a common center of gravity, prove them to be single. The little star 61 Sigui has been weighed, by the genius of Bessel, and has helped to weigh planets, as in a scale.

The asteroids cannot be omitted, for, although they cannot be described in a single lecture, they cannot, either, be wholly overlooked. The asteroids fill a curious vacuum in the heavens, and have a strange interest. Kepler was the great progenitor of all recent discoveries in astronomy. Without him Newton and Laplace would have been unknown. The idea of a kosmos was beautifully perfected by him, and his idea has since been proved correct, and explains many other facts. His work—the "Mysterium Kosmographicon"—carries the idea fully out. He was a sincere seeker after truth, and when his own theories were controverted by more probable facts, he was the first to yield and abandon them. In September, 1800, six astronomers formed themselves into a club, at Lilienthal, to search for the missing planet Ceres. Each had his portion of the heavens given, and finally Piatzi met it. Others re-discovered it, and, also, a small planet near by, which Gousse, by his theory of probabilities, had demonstrated. Harding discovered Juno, and others Vesta and Pallas; but the discovery ceased with Pallas. In 1840, the search was renewed, and thirty-nine have been discovered—two since this series of lectures commenced. Some account of the nomenclature of stars was given; and when it was proposed to name one Victoria, a German astronomer wrote an American, remarking how fearful would it be to have one of the stars called Zachariah!

Formerly, stars were described by some sign, as a sickle, a bird, etc. Now they are known by numbers, as one, two, etc.—the figure being enclosed in a circle.

This half century alluded to, gave birth to American astronomy; for, notwithstanding, Franklin—qui eripuit fulmen e coelo—there was no general study of the science until then. If his time had been devoted to science, he might have been as famous in astronomy as he was in politics. We have, however, our Bowditch, our Hubbard, and our Pierce, and are second only to Germany. The rainbow of hope is in the heavens, and it remains to be decided by the citizens of the Republic what shall be done. There have been twenty-three observatories erected between 1819 and 1843 in our country. A magnificent building has been erected in Albany for astronomical purposes; one has been given a transit instrument—a splendid telescope—and it is being endowed, rapidly, in a magnificent manner by private liberality. It will be opened in August, and the great astronomers of Europe have indicated their intention to be present. The various steamship lines have offered to convey astronomers here and back free of expense, in order to attend the opening.

If the science of astronomy can be preserved from charlatanism, to which it is so liable, it will touch heights not yet imagined. The first half of the nineteenth century has been an epitome of the whole history of astronomy, and has proved there is but one universe, governed by harmony and the will of the great I AM. There is one algebraic formula that includes all the flowers, and all the stars, and all the planets. The object of all astronomical science is to discover the will of the Great Astronomer. In whatever course our studies run, they all converge to one great whole; and they who can read them are His interpreters. Everything that speaks to the senses, speaks to the soul. Of the great book that contains all truth, we can with difficulty spell out here and there a letter.

At the conclusion, the lecturer was very warmly applauded by the audience.

THE POSITION OF GEN NICARAGUAN MINISTER.—Col. Wheeler, the United States Minister to Nicaragua, notwithstanding he perseveres in the endeavor to convince the State Department that he was justified in recognizing the new government, has failed to satisfy the Secretary of State of the propriety of his course. Mr. Marcy places little or no confidence in the testimonials—the signatures—which Col. Wheeler has transmitted to him in this connection, as a justification of the conduct of a public functionary rests, according to usage, more on the official statement of facts than on the endorsement of private individuals. It has heretofore been stated that Col. Wheeler was specifically instructed not to recognize the new government of Nicaragua, but he acted in advance of their receipt—a precipitancy on his part which is emphatically condemned by our Government. The recent instructions are explicit, and he is required to strictly adhere to them. In the unsettled condition of affairs in Central America, his functions will for the present be confined nearly, if not altogether, to an oversight of our interests in that quarter, as it is well known he has no official intercourse with the Nicaraguan government.

SUSPENSION OF STEAM COMMUNICATION WITH NICARAGUA.—We learn that Mr. Templeton, the agent in this city of the Nicaragua Transit Company, has determined not to dispatch the steamship Prometheus to San Juan, for which port she was advertised to leave on the 26th inst. This is owing to the receipt of a dispatch from New York, announcing that the Transit Company had resolved to suspend steam communication with Nicaragua, in consequence of the seizure by Gen. Walker of the Company's route across the Isthmus. In consequence, steam communication on the Pacific sides between San Juan del Sud and San Francisco, will also be suspended.

THE CURRENT WEEK.

The back-bone of the stormy month has been broken by the combined exertions of fifteen resolute days, which, impatient of present good, hurried on to prospective pleasure. Nor do we blame them for whipping the winged steed and endeavoring to make Phœbus quicken his gait. A more unwelcome portion of the road is not to be found anywhere within its twelve great stages. Its two and fifty places of change, or, the three hundred and sixty-five level plains over which it glides. All the gods conspired to render the journey a rough one: Aquarius used that watering pot with a determination it should never be needed again: Father Æolus shew his shaggy brow and endless arm at all the fountains: and the property-people of the skies let the black-curtain fall and were too lazy to wind it up when the rail boy's bell tinkled in the East.

Sunshine is streaming in through every crevice and the rehearsal of the week commences.

Monday, March 17—St. Patrick, St. Joseph of Arimathea and St. Gertrude who flourished in 626, are the guardians of the present day. The shamrock, dedicated to St. Patrick, and the sweet violet, sacred to St. Gertrude, are the floral offerings.

St. Patrick, who is almost as generally known in this country as in Ireland, is the more special saint of the seventeenth. It is known as St. Patrick's day, and, as such, observed wherever Irishmen emigrate; somewhat with religious ceremonies and votive offerings; generally with observances of a more miscellaneous and less theological character. St. Patrick was born at the end of the fourth century, in Killpatrick—nominally: a very anti-milesian county. At 16 he was carried off into slavery and compelled to keep cattle among the bogs of his "dear native land." Escaping, he traveled into Gaul and Italy, and received his apostolic mission, in the latter country, from Pope Celestine, who died in 432. His chief exploit was freeing Ireland from frogs and serpents, which some have very inhumanly attributed to the nature of the climate.

In February, 1783, letters patent incorporated the "Knights of the Illustrious order of St. Patrick." The shamrock is the trefoil.

Saint Alexander and Cyril, of Jerusalem, flourished during the century following, A. D. 251.

Tuesday, March 18.—The Great Leopard Bane—doronicum pardalianches, is the floral emblem.

St. Edward, a British King, whose honors are commemorated to-day, was stabbed in the back by the Thugs who lived in 979, while his horse was drinking at Corfe Castle, in the Island of Purbeck. He spurred his horse into a deep marsh, but instead of being drowned, the spirit was translated to glory and the body discovered by a pillar of light—more noble but less comfortable than common deaths. The fact is now notable from the effect it has had upon modern customs. After that, the general distrust caused by the crime was so great that no one would drink with another without security that he was safe, while the bowl was at his lip. Hence the drinking of healths, springing out of the expression then prevalent—"I pledge you your health," when about to drink.

Sir Robert Walpole, Earl of Oxford, died in 1745, aged 71.

Wednesday, March 19.—St. Joseph, the spouse of the Virgin Mary, A. D. 1; and St. Alemund, 813, are the protectors of the 19th.

The yellow star of Bethlehem, ornithogalum luteum is the floral emblem, sacred to St. Joseph.

In 720 B. C., the first eclipse of the moon on record occurred. In 1355 England began her system of naval impressment. In 1719 a surprising meteor was seen in England, Scotland and Ireland. One describer says it was as large as the moon and had little motion at first; presently it assumed the shape of a meteor with a stream of light, emitting a splendor by which fine print could be read. Its duration was about thirty seconds. Its greatest height was calculated to have been fifty-one statute miles. It descended gradually and broke into the sea, near the coast of Brittany.

Thursday, March 20—St. Cuthbert and St. Wulfran are the saints. The dog's violet is dedicated to the latter.

In 1727, Sir Isaac Newton, author of the Principia, discoverer of gravitation, and a profoundly great man, died. Frederick, prince of Wales and father of George III, died in 1751, aged 44.

William Murray, Earl of Mansfield, died in 1793, having been born the 2d of March, 1705. For the last thirty years of his life, he presided as lord chief justice of the court of the king's bench. He altered the whole system of the common law by grafting the civil law upon it. As an elegant and varied scholar, of great natural and cultivated ability, he shone among the very foremost; and none of that galaxy of great men that arose in the reign of Queen Anne rivalled him. He was a friend to this country.

In 1811, Napoleon, king of Rome, was born. His mother was the Empress Maria Louisa. His unhappy life and early death, for "the sword wears out the sheath," are familiar to all. His portrait, as the Duke de Reichstadt, adorns a great many print windows, even now.

On this day the sun enters the constellation Aries, or the Ram, which is the first zodiacal sign; and this is the first day of Spring! We were led into an error by an old authority and made the "new-come of the year" commence on the 6th, whereas our praise should have been reserved for the 20th.

The sun, on this day, passes the imaginary line in the heavens called the equator. This was the beginning of their sacred year to the Israelites; their civil year commencing in September.

Friday, March 21.—St. Benedict, 543; St. Serapion and other lesser lights.

The bullous funetory, dedicated to St. Bennet is he flower.

St. Benet, or Benedict, as he is more generally known, was the founder of the order of Benedictines, and the Romish books are full of chronicles concerning him. He was born in Umbria, in 480, and sent to school at Rome. He founded twelve monasteries, and died in 543, aged 63.

In 1556, Thomas Cranmer, Archbishop of Canterbury, was burnt for heresy, at Oxford, England.

Saturday, March 22.—St. Basil, St. Paul, and St. Catharine of Sweden, are the saints, and pilewort, dedicated to the last named, is the flower.

The plague broke out in London in 1665, and raged with such violence that grass grew in the most public thoroughfares. During its prevalence the deaths were so numerous that the dead could not be buried, and were thrown into the river or burned. Robbery prevailed and drunkenness in the midst of all. Trade was ended; the shops closed; the Royal Exchange deserted, and for a period life seemed about to expire.

In 1687, John Baptist Lulli, a very celebrated Florentine musician—for some time page to madame Montpensier, and superintendent of music to Louis XIV—died.

Sunday, March 23—St. Alphonsus, of Lima, St. Victoria and others are the saints of the day.

The peerless daffodil, dedicated to St. Alphonsus, is the plant.

In 1801, Paul, Emperor of all the Russias, was strangled at St. Petersburg.

In 1847, at daylight, a naval battery of three thirty-two pounders and three eight-inch Paixhan guns, which had been, on the day previous, transported with great difficulty over a distance of three miles, by a sandy and difficult route, from the ships to a commanding height within seven hundred yards of the city, was prepared to open its terrible fire on Vera Cruz. The work was not commenced, however, until the close of the day, but compelled a surrender on the 26th, with five thousand prisoners and five hundred pieces of artillery. Six thousand seven hundred shot and shells were thrown by the "Northern Infidels" before this result was produced.

NAVAL.—The Pensacola Gazette of Saturday last says:

The U. S. steamer Fulton, which left here on Sunday last, returned to this port on Tuesday morning from St. Joseph's Bay, sent back here by the Commodore to tow the U. S. sloop-of-war Saratoga out of the harbor. The steamer anchored the frigate Potomac, and then with the Commodore and Captain of the frigate on board, proceeded up the Bay to the town, which they found entirely deserted. The houses were windowless and doorless and many of them clap-boardless. Cattle, fowls and other domestic animals were quietly grazing around, but no person was seen or could be found in the town. The supposed cause of the desertion is the want of business at St. Joseph's, but was first supposed to have been caused by an attack from the Indians.

The U. S. sloop-of-war Saratoga and steamer Fulton will leave the Pensacola Navy Yard for Havana in the early part of next week.

THE HARK AMELIA—Terrible Suffering at Sea—The bark Amelia, (sezied by the United States Government at Port-au-Prince,) and which left there on the 1st of December, (and subsequently put into St. Thomas,) had not been at sea many days before the commenced leaking, and, sailing badly, made very slow progress. We find in the Baltimore Sun the following account of what afterwards occurred:

On the night of January 5, when near New York, expecting the next morning to be inside of Sandy Hook, the wind, which had been Westerly and Southwesterly for a few days previous, shifted to the North, and from that point fell all around the compass.

Finding the vessel was a complete wreck, and being out of provision and water, all hopes of making a port in the United States were given up, and they attempted to go into Bermuda, but that was not accomplished. The greatest anxiety, at that time, was to meet a vessel which would relieve them of their hunger and thirst, but every vessel they met avoided them, giving them as wide a berth as possible the Amelia being rather a suspicious looking craft.

Supposing there might be some provisions in the hold of the vessel, an examination took place, when a barrel of rice and bread was found, but in a shamaged condition. They then discovered the hold was swarming with rats.

They went to work and caught the rats, which, with the rice, kept them from starving. They were in this condition for twenty-two days. At daylight on the morning of January 28th, a vessel was discovered, which proved to be the English brig Ida, Capt. Williams, three days from St. Johns, Island of Antigua, bound to London. He showed on a blackboard his longitude, and Lieut. Werden hailed him, telling him they were sixty days out, and in want of bread and water, or something to eat; that they would be very thankful for anything, as they were starving. He replied he had no bread to spare, but would give them some flour.

A boat was sent on board, and returned with only part of a half barrel of flour, and nothing else. This, however, they were very thankful for, and with the rats and the rice, they fared quite well. They made the port of St. Thomas on the 1st of February, having been sixty-two days at sea, and most of the time experiencing the greatest sufferings. The whole town was alarmed for fear an explosion would take place, as there were arms and ammunition on board sufficient for an army of five thousand men. The vessel has been pronounced the most unseaworthy that was ever seen in our harbor, and great credit is due to the officers, who, after six-two days' hardships succeeded in getting her into port.

On the 6th inst., a fire broke out in the dead house attached to the county institutions at Flatbush, Long Island, which burned the building to the ground.—Seven dead bodies were in the building at the time, having been placed there preparatory to interment in the common burying ground. They were so completely consumed that nothing remained of them but a few charred bones.

RED RIVER.—We clip the following items from the Shreveport South-Western, of the 12th inst:

The river continues to rise fast, and there is no doubt but we shall have fine navigation for the balance of the season.

It rained the greater part of yesterday, which will, we fear, again render the roads almost impassable.

The Mariposa patent for twenty-four thousand acres has been issued to Col. Fremont from the land-office within a few days past. It is known, however, that at present the tract is worthless to the owners, (Fremont, Palmer, Cook & Co.,) from the impossibility of ejecting the squatters who have pounced upon it for mining and other purposes.

WILD RICE IN MINNESOTA.—The wild rice of the swamps in Minnesota has produced an abundant crop this year, and upon this myriads of duck and geese fatted until the water froze up. The Indians also made great use of wild rice. It has been sown in Connecticut, and produces well.

AN INTOLERABLE PUNSTER.—Theodore Hook, once walking with a friend, passed a pastry-cook's shop, in the window of which was the usual inscription—"Water ices and ice-creams." "Dear me," said Theodore, "what an admirable description of the effects of hydrophobia." "How can that be?" said his friend; "what have water ices and ice-creams to do with hydrophobia?" "Oh," replied Hook, "you do not read it right. I read it thus: Water I sees, and I screams."

In a mixed company of ladies and gentlemen, a Yankee in Europe was asked, "Which are the handsomest, the ladies of this country or the American ladies?" "I must confess," was the prompt reply, "that I think the palm of beauty is with the American; for had I met the ladies around me, in America, I should have supposed them to be my own countrywomen."

The courtesies and dipping in the gilded drawing room where Jonathan said that must have raised all the dust in the carpet.

Local Intelligence.

MORTALITY.—The burials in the city cemeteries for the week ending Sunday morning, numbered only 63; St. Vincent de Paul's not heard from.

SUPREME COURT.—The Sheriffalty.—Yesterday morning the application of John M. Bell, for the recording of his commission as Sheriff of the Parish of Orleans, came up according to appointment. The Court decided that it could hear arguments upon the mere motion for the recording of the commission, as it had appellate jurisdiction only. All it could do was to order the commission to be entered on record and permit Mr. Bell to swear in his deputy for the court. This was at once done. Mr. Packenham Lebeau was presented as the deputy, sworn in, and took possession of his office.

Mr. Bell next applied to the Sheriff's office, and formally demanded possession of Mr. Hafty. He was met with a peremptory refusal. He then applied to Judge Cotton, of the Sixth District Court, for a writ of mandamus against Mr. Hafty, and the Judge issued a rule upon Mr. Hafty, ordering him to appear in court at nine o'clock to-day, and show cause why a peremptory mandamus should not issue, as prayed for.

After that, Mr. Bell went around to the different District Courts, in all of which except the Second and Fourth (they not being open) he was permitted to sworn in his deputies. In the First District Court he swore in Messrs. Alex. Baldwin, Absalom H. Leggett, Henry Vignaud, and John F. Kearney; in the Third, Mr. E. S. Wardwarding the Fifth, Mr. Gayarde the old incumbent; and in the Sixth, Mr. Robert F. Montgon. Mr. Bell also presented himself at the Parish Prison and demanded possession of that institution, which Capt. Powers refused to yield without an order from Mr. Hafty.

BOUND TO HAVE THE RIGHT-ONE.—Judge Cotton yesterday issued a writ of seizure in a suit in his court. The attorney in the case asked for a duplicate writ, so as to have one put in the hands of each sheriff, or of each party claiming to be Sheriff, that both might make the seizure, and place its legality beyond a doubt. Accordingly Mr. Hafty and Mr. Bell were each served with a writ, and each sent a deputy to make the seizure. Whether both Sheriffs will collect fees, or if not, which one will, are among the questions suggested by this interesting state of affairs.

SUPREME COURT—DECISIONS.—Monday, March 17.—Daniel Lacroix, appellee, vs. George Ledlie and C. A. Mitcheltree, appellants. Appeal from Fifth District Court of New Orleans. Judgment amended and affirmed.—Buchanan, J.

Our Whole Country.

Who would sever Freedom's shrine?
Who would draw the invidious line?
Though by birth one spot be mine,
Dear is all the rest.

Dear to me the South's fair land—
Dear the central mountain band—
Dear New England's rocky strand
Dear the glorious West!

By our altars pure and free;
By our laws deep rooted tree;
By the Past's ahead memory;
By our Washington!

By our common parent tongue,
By our hopes, bright, buoyant, young,
By the tie of country strong—
We will still be one.

Lavater's Warning.

Trust him little who doth raise
To the same height both great and small,
And sets the sacred crown of praise,
Smiling, on the head of all.

Trust him less who looks around
To censure all with scornful eyes,
And in everything has found
Something that he dare despise.

But for one who stands apart,
Stirr'd by nought that can befall,
With a cold, indifferent heart,
Trust him least and last of all.

BEN SERRAQ.

A Scene in an Algerian Police Court.

The French-Algerian magistrate's chaouch or sheriff's officer, Djilali by name, was recovering a little from the out-of-countenance condition into which he had been thrown by his failure in giving a pinch-ens turn to the embarrassment of a couple of sacks of wheat from the backs of a pair of donkeys. He straightened his back, stood stiff on his legs, and silently entered, with ineffible zeal, on the discharge of his functions as chief-constable and crier-of-the-court. He let himself in one of those happy moments when, after having well-deserved a good beating, he was ready to transfer the favor to the first person he met. He was an eight-day clock wound up again, when just at the point of running down and coming to a stop. As he opened and shut the police-room doors with the bluest banging and clappings—shouting for the plaintiffs to appear, and hustling everybody who stood in his way as he swaggered about the antechamber—the assembly present, still impressed with the sack-and-donkey scene they had witnessed, whispered from mouth to mouth and from ear to ear, that in the memory of mekrazeni, so accomplished a chaouch had never been seen.

Suddenly, a confused noise was heard out of doors. As it approached, the sounds grew louder; and at last the ear could distinguish the most energetic oaths in the Arab language, and the music which proceeds from fisticuffs and kicks when applied to the divers parts of the human body. Djilali's voice rose above the tumult, and his stick accompanied the melody of his voice. Finally, the door opened, and a group of men, singularly interlaced together, rolled into rather than entered the room. When Djilali, by a succession of the most skillful movements, had succeeded in putting a little restraint and order into this tempest-tost storm of arms and legs, the eye could manage to distinguish a group of five men, four of whom had quite enough to do to enforce on the fifth a little respect. The last-named worthy was of lofty stature and vigorously limbed. His garments torn to shreds, and his sorry face, attested participation in a recent struggle; but his hands, tied behind his back and fastened by a rope to his neck were evidence that he had not been victorious. His companions held him fast with a degree of caution which showed that even in the state to which he was reduced, they were not quite sure he would not make his escape. Four ropes' ends, which dangled from his wrists and his neck, were tightly grasped with exasperated uneasiness and tenacity. Scarcely had the new comers subsided into calmness, when an unanimous exclamation arose from the midst of the audience—

"Is Ben Serraq!—What has he been doing now?"

M. Richard, the presiding magistrate, inquired somewhat severely:

"What has the man done, that you should bring him bound in that cruel way?"

"'Tis Ben Serraq!" was the answer he received from the quartette of voices.

"Ah, Ben Serraq! A professional robber belonging to the Sel'hha, is he not?"

"The very same!" said the Corypheus of the associated plaintiffs.

"Yes, sure enough—'tis Ben Serraq," growled the prisoner, in a voice which reminded you of a wild beast roaring at night.

"But I was informed that he had amended his mode of life, and that lately he has been living at peace with his neighbors?"

"I have always lived at peace with my neighbors. I am a good Mussulman, fearing Allah and the law. I am calumniated."

"Hold your tongue," said the court, "and do not speak till you are spoken to."

"It is true," explained plaintiff number one, "that, for some time past, he has let us be quiet, and only committed distant robberies; but a few days since he stole some of our bullocks."

"Sidi Ibn Krarit," roared the savage. "How dare they slander a poor innocent creature like me in that cruel way?"

"But is the fact clearly proved?" the president inquired. "How did it occur?"

"It is as plain as it possibly can be," stated plaintiff number two. "There is not the least doubt about the matter."

"What's what you get by serving the French!" muttered Ben Serraq, with the air of a Cato. "What ingratitude, gracious Allah, Lord of the Universe!"

At this juncture, Djilali received orders to prevent the accused, by any means whatever, from making lengthy interruptions to the recital of the plaintiffs' wrongs. As to short exclamations that will break forth, the chaouch might allow them to burst from their safety-valve, seeing the material impossibility and uselessness of confining them within the lips of a subject like the present defendant.

"Come, then," said the court decidedly, "one of you explain the business."

"Don't mind what they say," Ben Serraq roared out. "They are inveterate liars. Besides, they have a spite against me."

"As I said just now," the complainant stated, "the case is plain. Our herds were grazing in the neighborhood of Ben Serraq's tent. On driving them home in the evening we discovered that a bullock was missing. My brethren and myself immediately took the field, to discover some trace of the robbery, but we could discover nothing. At last, after several days of fruitless search, it entered into our heads to have a look at Ben Serraq's tent. We had suspected him, in consequence of what had happened some months previously."

"Barbarians!" yelled the untamed innocent, "to violate the tent of an honest Mussulman!"

"But we had no need to enter it; which, moreover, we should not have done without the kaid's authorization."

"Quite right," said the magistrate, approvingly.

"We met his wife, as she was coming from the water."

"What an abomination!" howled the biped brute; "to stop a woman on the road!"

"And who, for the promise of a trifling reward, told us the whole affair."

"A capital witness—a she beggar, who betrays me!"

"She explained that it was her husband who stole our bullock, in order to provide himself with a store of salt meat."

"Sidi Bou Krari! That a woman should lie like that!"

"She then showed us several goat-skins filled with the meat."

"As if a Mussulman were not allowed to keep salted meat in his tent!"

"And, to remove all doubt as to where the meat came from, she showed us the bullock's head lying in one corner of the tent, still in a state sufficiently preserved to enable us to recognise the animal."

"What a horrible she-vagabond! But her evidence is good for nothing; I had given her a beating not two day's before."

"Our only thought then was to seize the wild-boar who is now before you. There was the difficulty; for this son of Satan is as strong as no one else, and can knock down a camel with a blow of his fist."

"What a joke! I am as mild as a sheep."

"Twenty of us met in company, and at dawn of day, informed by his wife—"

"What a pity I did not strangle her, as I meant to."

"Informed by his wife that he was still asleep, we rushed down upon him; and, after a desperate struggle, contrived to bind him in the way you see, as he lay on his mat."

"Sidi Abd-Allah! What treachery! To attack a good Mussulman as he lay asleep!"

"And a good thing it was that we did attack him in that way; for, although he was hardly awake, he managed, while he was wrestling with us, to break one of Oulid Sekrad's legs, and to put out one of Ali Oud Ama's eyes. He smashed in five or six of poor Ben Senan's teeth, and bit Otsman Oud Messasit's back savagely."

"Justice of the Master of the World! Is it possible to lie in this way? On the contrary, I have been half killed by you. Don't you see my face is covered all over with blood?"

"Son of a dog! you well know that the blood is from poor Oud Messasit's body."

"Sidi-Abd-Allah!" exclaimed Ben Serraq.

But it was of no use invoking the saints. Djilali called for a towel and a basin of water, and with them washed Ben Serraq's face. The experiment established the fact that that interesting individual had not received the slightest scratch, and that the bite on the unfortunate Oud Messasit's back must have been the only source of the stains.

"Well, Ben Serraq," said the president, "although I cannot entertain any reasonable doubt of your guilt, you are, nevertheless, at liberty to speak—let us hear what you have to say in justification?"

"Ah! I am allowed to explain! Well, you will soon see! In the first place, my wife is a she vagabond; every body knows it, don't they, Djilali?"

But Djilali, who was particularly anxious to conceal all cognisance of the defendant's affairs, only replied, "May your tent catch fire! Pray, what connection have I ever had with you, that I

ON INTERNAL IMPROVEMENTS.
NO. VI.

NEW ORLEANS, Feb. 12, 1856.

To His Excellency Robert C. Wickliffe,
Governor of the State of Louisiana:

SIR—The varied importance that attaches to the subject of my preceding letters has imperceptibly extended their length, and I fear may overtax your time and exhaust your interest. In seeking to confine my observations to the points most prominent in favor of attaining the great end I have so much at heart, I am precluded from enlarging upon the feeble objections which I know to prevail, not so much to public work themselves as to aiding them. I must be content to rest the cause I am advocating on its own merits and what I have already expressed in its favor, and confine this letter to the plan of those preceding.

Having conclusively set forth what the importance of New Orleans will be when interior communications are extended and improved, I will now invite your attention to the consideration of the external advantages that will follow. The citizens of New York have constructed at great cost a railroad over the Isthmus of Darien, terminating at Panama on the Pacific side. The distance from New York to San Francisco by this route is 4,992 miles, and the voyage has never been performed under twenty-two days; the average of the voyages of the year being twenty-four days. The distance from New York to San Francisco, via Washington City, and by railroad from Washington City to New Orleans and hence by Tehuantepec, is 4,166 miles, making a difference of 826 miles in favor of New Orleans and Tehuantepec, and a gain of more than two thousand miles in ocean navigation. If we allow seven days from San Francisco to Panama on the Pacific side of the Isthmus, and seven days from Tehuantepec, and four days thence to New Orleans, and three days hence by railroad to New York, it gives fourteen days as the time employed in traveling between New York and California, and a gain of eight days over the shortest time by the Isthmus of Darien, which is more than one-third. The time saved in going to and returning from California would average twenty days and lessen the cost of travel more than thirty-three per cent. The simple statement of these facts dismisses the necessity of any lengthened argument to prove their importance, and if public attention were fairly awakened to their claims we would hear less of the Utopian schemes of Pacific railroads to be located over trackless deserts and mountains of perpetual snow. I have confidence in American enterprise that it will ever be equal to its purposes, but it will never be directed to fallacies which experience already acquired exposes and condemns. The Opelousas road, located over a savannah, in three years is not quite completed seventy-two miles, and the Great Northern Company has finished in the same time one hundred and sixteen miles and graded sixty additional miles of its road. How long it will take to extend the former one thousand six hundred miles on this scale of progress over a country of great physical obstructions and destitute of population and provisions? Great lines of railroad are not the creation of a month or a year, and if opulent and populous cities like New York and Philadelphia have consumed twenty years in the building of the Erie Railroad, and ten years for the Pennsylvania Central, both of which penetrate regions where a large and active population resides, and abounding in materials and all the aids needed in the construction of great public works, we should assign the building of a Pacific railroad to remote generations. When population extends west, its wants and their convenient supply will be met as necessity and interest will point out, and either of these causes urges us in our present circumstances to consider population already settled, and not anticipate that of the future. We need the concentration of public attention to our local schemes. To succeed in those already commenced we must consolidate our resources and calculate our purposes. We must be satisfied to do one thing at a time and do it well, and this will give to other and fresh schemes life and intensity from the success of undertakings that have made progress. When the capital invested in our present railroads becomes productive, its employment can be diverted to other channels without embarrassment or inconvenience. It is the assurance of large profit as well as the security of capital that can attract it from the ordinary channels of its employment. The mere money-lender, and he belongs to a class as distinct as the importer or factor, calculates with singular prudence the risks and profits of his investments. In our region of country where the demand for capital is active, he can have a choice of securities, and schemes however attractive in theory or plausible in promises will never overcome his preference for those that are solid and reliable. Schemes which are so extensive as to be defined by no boundary, seldom or never command confidence with the money-lender or capitalist.

The importance that would accrue to New Orleans by becoming the great centre of intercourse between the Pacific and Europe and North America, I need not enlarge upon: no one can foresee or estimate its magnitude; but the first and immediate influence that will follow the completion of its communications, exterior and interior, will be the increase and expansion of our import trade, which is now insignificant. New Orleans now exports, coastwise and to foreign countries, a larger amount in bulk and value of raw produce than any city in the world. Its cotton, which is first in importance, is now an element in the exchanges of commerce greater than that of gold or silver. The States cultivating it require its value to be returned to them, not in gold or silver, but in the manufactures and products of Europe and Asia, from the most useful to the most ornamental and expensive, the greater proportion of which now finds its way to the interior through the Northern cities, owing to their superior advantages in the facilities of cheap and rapid distribution of commodities by means of their railroads.

The constant and serious interruptions between New Orleans and the interior, tend to lessen and retard this most important branch of the trade of a great city. Large and populous districts are cut off for whole seasons at a time, and the transportation employed to supply the inhabitants in their most ordinary and pressing wants is both tardy and expensive, and unless overcome by improved facilities of intercourse, must retard all progress. If it does not lead to the abandonment of districts the most fertile and valuable. The loss of interest alone on the crops detained in Western Louisiana and Arkansas the last year cannot be less to the cultivator than $600,000. This is sufficient to discourage both merchant and planter and render all calculations insecure. The one has no certainty when he will have his customers' crop, and the other has no means to buy, so long as his cotton is detained on his plantation; but merchant and planter are in altered circumstances when the obstructions to intercourse disappear—both can then buy and sell without the risks of the depreciation of the stocks of merchandise of the one or the loss of interest on the cotton of the other. The advantages that will flow from this enlarged freedom of intercourse will be attended with the greatest encouragement in cultivation, and every description of improvement that will insure the comfort, luxury and happiness of the inhabitants.

Having passed in review the external benefits of establishing the most extended system of communication with distant regions, I shall invite your attention to the study of a practical picture of collateral advantages which our railroads will give to New Orleans.

I have adverted to the extent of population located east of the Mississippi and Ohio rivers, estimated at three millions of inhabitants; that residing west of those great rivers is still more considerable, and has over five thousand miles of finished railroads. If the dilatory modes of conveyance which now prevail, were superseded by the cheap and expeditious facility afforded by railroads, how many of the vast population would be attracted to New Orleans, that are now prevented from visiting it at all, when the distance between New Orleans and Louisville would be traveled in thirty hours, and that between New Orleans and Chicago in thirty-six hours, with greater safety and comfort and smaller expense? It will not appear [illegible] to estimate the annual number at 500,000 persons; but suppose we reduce it to 300,000, some of whom would be attracted by motives of business and traffic, but the larger portion by those of change of climate, recreation and pleasure, and who are generally the spending class. The expenditure of such a movement of population will be immense, considering that the planters of the South-western States receive large sums for their crops and are proverbial for liberality in personal expenses. If we assign two hundred dollars to each person, and take into the average the supplies purchased by the country dealer, it will give sixty millions of dollars that would be expended in our stores, shops and hotels, every dollar of which is and will be diverted to and expended in the cities of the North, if we neglect to imitate the example of their enterprise.

The resort of this large and opulent population to New Orleans for six months of the year would be in the season of its gaiety and pleasure, as it now resorts to the Northern cities in summer and autumn. We would then become the centre, where the intelligence and talent of the South-western States would annually assemble, prejudice would be worn off by the contact and interchange of opinion, and ignorance would disappear before the mighty power of that locomotion which would render the fruitful fields of Tennessee and the bowling-greens of Kentucky almost the environs of the great metropolis of the South-west. It is impossible to compute the advantages to every department of moral, social and commercial life that would be the fruits of this wonderful activity. Its accommodation would require vast numbers of houses, hotels, stores and shops. Improvement would be visible in every direction, and a great demand would spring up for our vacant squares and lots. Builders, mechanics and workmen of every description would have constant and active employment, who in turn would need houses to live in—all of which would further add to the demand for the property of the landlord, and greatly enhance his rents. The condition of our city would soon present a picture of energy, activity and prosperity it has never known; and narrow-minded and illiberal proprietors could recognize it, they would perceive that it suggests our only remedy against a taxation now appropriated and expended by those who have counted on its property, other than the support it affords to foreign idleness and corruption.

The produce of the earth during the preceding season has been bountiful beyond all example. Our financial condition is one of ease and the greatest security, and we may feel justly proud of the pre-eminence to which it entitles us to lay claim. Rigid adherence to the principles that have established this advantage, and to the wise laws that govern our banks and currency, will fortify our financial independence and secure a solid prosperity in which commerce may safely repose, and which will, in time, supply capital to expand our enterprise, instead of confining to seek it among those who have no interest in the prosperity or sympathy with our institutions.

The public indebtedness of the State and City, between 1842 and 1853, was reduced by the extinction of twenty millions of dollars, principal and interest, including one-quarter wrested from speculators for sale and the liquidation of some of our banking institutions. The whole of this enormous sum was supplied exclusively from our own resources and remitted abroad without undue pressure or inconvenience; while in the same period we did not bring back capital or emit fresh obligations to take the place of the old, except in the case of the Consolidated City loan $3,000,000, a considerable portion of which was taken by our own citizens.

These facts are not only important in themselves, but more so when they convey so just an idea of our immense resources, and of being entirely adequate to needed great public undertakings, provided encouragements were offered that would renew hope and fortify confidence. This is what is needed, and, if added by your approbation and support, my letters should prove the humble instruments of effecting this in any degree, I shall feel that I am more than rewarded for the sacrifices I have made in the cause which has ever excited in me the strongest and liveliest emotions of interest.

Congratulating you on your elevation to the highest rank within the gift of the free and enlightened citizens of a great commonwealth, and persuaded of your patriotic attachment to the institutions of the South, I earnestly pray that you may be the happy instrument of diffusing the blessings of an enlarged and liberal policy, which will promote its interests, prosperity and renown. Solicit for yourself an enduring fame.

I am very faithfully yours,

JAMES ROBB.

NEW ORLEANS, Feb. 8, 1856.

To His Excellency Robert C. Wickliffe,
Governor of the State of Louisiana:

SIR—My third letter concluded with the promise of making this the subject of aid from the State of Mississippi, in pursuance of the recommendations contained in Gov. McRae's message. That State is about 330 miles long, from north to south, and 150 miles broad, comprising in area about 45,760 square miles, or 29,286,400 acres. Its population exceeds 700,000 inhabitants, including slaves; and the value of the assessment of landed and personal property reaches nearly 300,000,000 of dollars, which in proportion to its white inhabitants, is the largest average of property owned among the same number of persons in any purely agricultural community in the world. The northern portion of the State is healthy and productive; and the country bordering on the Mississippi and Yazoo rivers is esteemed the finest cotton producing region in the South, being favored by the climate and latitude most favorable to its cultivation. The Mississippi river, flowing along the western boundary of the State, furnishes at all seasons an uninterrupted and cheap facility for the transportation of its produce. The other streams having their course through the State are of precarious navigation, and there are seasons when the inhabitants of populous and wealthy districts are subjected to the greatest inconvenience and sacrifices, owing to the suspension of navigation, and the want of facilities for carrying their produce to market, and obtaining their supplies. There is perhaps no State in the Union which relatively has so many agricultural advantages as Mississippi, and which would develop more rapidly its great resources, if the agency of intercommunication was improved; besides, there is no country, taking everything into calculation, that is more favorable for the construction of cheap and productive railroads. The surface of the country is fertile, without mountains and rocks to excavate or valleys to fill. Timber is abundant; and its latitude secures its highways against the injuries of frost and a rigorous climate. Superadded to all this, the teeming fruitfulness of its soil is a rich promise of traffic which cannot be computed in value and importance.

A State with the territory, climate, soil and population I have described, with an assessment of near 300,000,000 of dollars, has riches and resources far greater than those of the bankers of any European capital; and if employed in only a moderate degree in aid of the railroads now being constructed within its limits, will achieve the noblest works of the present age, which posterity, when inheriting their great benefits, will not fail to appreciate and applaud.

Mississippi might aid the railroads projected and building through its limits, without oppression to any, to the extent of a million of dollars annually; but suppose it gave less, and its representatives, in a spirit of enlightened liberality corresponding to the recommendations of its Governor, should consider the question of raising revenue for so noble an object. The levy of a three mill tax, or thirty cents on the hundred dollars—a tax too insignificant to invite serious opposition among a people possessed of resources so great—would give $900,000 annually, and seven years would swell the amount to $6,300,000, which is the latest period I could assign for the entire completion of a system of improvements that would give the State eight hundred miles of railroad of great and certain productiveness on their cost. Assuming that provision was made by legislative enactment for aid on this basis, we are brought to an inquiry of how it can be best applied to secure and protect the State. This may be satisfactorily answered by citing the example of the State of Tennessee, which has aided its railroads by a contribution of ten thousand dollars per mile on the security of a statutory mortgage. Mississippi may do the same, and secure itself by ample lien for money advanced in lieu of engagements payable at a very remote period, but it can do no more. The State, while creating no public engagement, performs the function of the capitalist, which its great wealth enables it to do with the most perfect facility and convenience. The entire independence of the circumstances of the State and its citizens will allow of any extension, and in a consistent policy she can make her advances perpetual on the payment of 6 per cent. per annum, reserving all the rights of a creditor in case of default. At the expiration of seven years the State would have an annual revenue of $378,000 upon its investments, besides having the merit of originating a policy which, in solid advantages, would supercede all the inventions suggested by schemes of credit and expediency, and would fortify every interest against its sacrifices and uncertainties.

I am no advocate for employing public credit when it can be avoided; it is powerful as a resource in periods flushed with confidence, but mischievous in ill tendencies, and States, as well as individuals, will best consult their own welfare and interests when they rest upon their own acknowledged resources instead of borrowing from others. The Southern States have more than ordinary motives to practice and encourage this policy in the face of the fanatical crusade waged upon their institutions and credit, the influence of which cannot be better illustrated than by referring to the difference established in the value of Northern and Southern State securities, which is fully 20 per cent. That this difference is resignable to the mere question of repudiation is not borne out by the facts. The State of Michigan has openly repudiated her engagements for millions, and the delinquent States of Indiana and Illinois may further be cited as an example that punctuality and good faith do not exclusively reside in States where slavery is disavowed; and to go further, it certainly does not appear that the Southern States in the management of their public works and corporations have not evinced a higher degree of prudence and integrity than prevail elsewhere. They are at least free from the vices of stock-jobbing which has been the parent of stupendous frauds committed at the North.

The pursuits of the people of Mississippi are almost entirely agricultural. The State has no seaport of trade or export—no manufactures worthy of enumeration. Almost every article that supplies the consumption of its inhabitants, from the most common want to the most superfluous, is the production of a foreign and distant industry; but the value of her great staple is greater, in proportion to population, than the average of productions in other States. Its citizens, in the same ratio, are larger consumers of the manufactures of the country and its importations from abroad, and are therefore proportionately the largest contributors to the revenue of the federal treasury, the receipts of which from duties for the current fiscal year will exceed $60,000,000.

The present population of all the states is presumed to be over 26,000,000. Mississippi will perhaps enumerate 750,000 inhabitants, or 1-34th of the population of the whole Union; and if we make a distribution of the revenue collected from duties on imports the State would furnish as its proportion $1,764,705, equal to a fraction over $2 53 on each inhabitant, and a fraction under a six mill tax on its total assessment. But recurring to the preceding consideration of the pursuits of the people of Mississippi, and then dependence on foreign and distant manufactures to supply their wants, it is a plain as demonstration can make it, that each inhabitant is liable to contribute double to the national revenue over that of the farmer and artisan of Pennsylvania, Ohio, New York or New England; but, admitting the proposition overstated, (although every one who has attentively considered the working of the system, and felt its inconveniences, knows it is no exaggeration) and the average paid by each inhabitant is reduced to four dollars—this, on a population of 750,000, swells the taxation to three millions of dollars. It seems incredible that a sum so enormous should be insensibly drawn from the pockets of the people almost without their knowledge, and without provoking the slightest murmur or complaint. This digression is not designed to excite controversy on the tariff question. It is introduced to expose not only the capacity of a prosperous State to sustain the burthens of taxation collected for legitimate purposes, but to forestall objections that may be raised against an insignificant tax for railroad purposes, and to show how superficial are objections opposed to the judgment of the people when fairly appealed to in behalf of their dearest rights and interests, and upon principles plain and practical, and sanctioned by the clearest dictates of sound policy and common sense. If you were the proprietor of such a broad domain, how long would you hesitate between hostility and the appropriation of its vast resources to the accomplishment of a noble and magnificent system of public works that would transmit your name as a benefactor to the latest posterity?

While agreeing with Gov. McRae in the application of the States property in railroads, he has not, in his brief exposition, considered one of its chief features, which I presume he did not esteem sufficiently important, in view of the moderate amount of aid he has recommended. If the policy was considered on the basis of the latter it is one that [illegible] century, should it ever be considered and consulted in framing its measures and removed from the lines of railroad. It would be alleged by the citizens who are propelled in those counties, and not without reason and justice, that the great bulk of the taxation would fall on their property and their prosperity could not be expected, except on the score of equality and compensation; but this objection can readily be answered, and a most useful purpose served, by appropriating the resources from railroads, for a fixed number of years, to the enlargement and extension of levees, and the improvement of the drainage of land contiguous to the rivers. Ten years would swell the amount of this aid to $63,000,000, or more than two-thirds of the sum raised by taxation, and it awaited for a more extended period, could not be objected to as the sections of the State through which the different lines of railroad run would be more than compensated in their advantages from the enjoyment of these roads for any loss they would sustain in the division of the State's revenue to the objects I have referred to, and which are of the greatest importance.

This subject may be discussed at greater length, but my purpose is not to nearly your by lengthened details, and the respect due to the opinions of others, who have more license to comment with freedom on the policy of a neighboring State, forbids my passing the requested limits. I cannot, however, refrain without expressing the hope that Louisiana and Mississippi, so intimately allied in their political and social relations, and those of interest and commerce, will speedily deliberate on the policy alike necessary to the vindication of our enterprise and the improvement of their unrivaled resources.

In my next letter I shall review the progress made in improvements now being constructed in Louisiana and the States east of the Ohio and Mississippi rivers, their commercial, moral and political advantages, and their necessity to a community of states of kindred laws and institutions, whose perpetuity and independence should be transmitted, to our posterity as an inheritance which it will be their just pride to cherish and commemorate.

Very faithfully yours, JAMES ROBB.

NO. C.

NEW ORLEANS, Feb. 11, 1856.

To His Excellency Robert C. Wickliffe,
Governor of the State of Louisiana:

SIR—My fourth letter concluded by promising to resume my subject in a narrative of the progress of the railroads commenced in Louisiana, and those in the States east of the Ohio and Mississippi rivers.

At the first blush it would seem scarcely necessary to allude in our own railroads, as it might fairly be presumed that a subject so often before the public would have made every one acquainted with their condition, circumstances and progress; but unfortunately this is not the case, but the truth is, there is a lamentable ignorance prevailing, and with almost more or less hostility, jealousy and opposition, which no promises can propitiate, or reason enlighten or subdue.

It could not be expected that the citizens of a State destitute of all public improvements, and possessing mechanical skill and experience to only a very limited extent, could at once be endowed with capacity to carry out large undertakings, and avoid the commission of many and serious mistakes. This is, more or less, the history of every undertaking, public or private, that has been commenced since the country has been settled; and nothing but time and a feeling of permanent interest in our undertakings, by those who have invested their means to construct them, will give us that skill and proficiency which we do not now possess.

That public expectation is disappointed, and its hopes discouraged, needs no proof; but still enough has been done to place our railroads beyond the reach of absolute failure, and to establish an importance for them, which should command support; and no discouragement should be permitted to make us despond, or deter us from meeting the issue with courage and a determination to employ our means to their utmost limit, to secure the great prize of commercial distinction within our reach, and which once gained, will repay our sacrifices a hundred-fold.

The Great Northern Railroad Company will have, within a month hence, one hundred and sixteen miles of finished road and sixty additional miles graded and bridged, in readiness for the iron; if it had the means to procure it. The Opelousas Company will soon have its road pushed to Berwick's Bay, a distance of seventy-two miles, and with every prospect of a remunerative traffic. The Vicksburg and Shreveport Company is making considerable progress; and the discretion and foresight evinced in its management, and the character, experience and responsibility of the contractors employed to build the whole road, are guarantees of its success. As a pioneer road, this is entitled to rank first over any road yet projected in the State. The region it is designed to open is of the greatest fertility, and its capacity to produce cotton alone will, in a few years, be sufficient to build up a trade that would support a city as large as Memphis. The travel of North Louisiana and Texas will pass over it to Vicksburg; thence by the Vicksburg road to Jackson, and over the Great Northern road, to New Orleans and every State in the Union. North of Canton, Mississippi, commences a series of railroads which have already made progress, and are being pushed forward with energy. They will establish a complete network of intercommunication, commencing with the Mississippi Central, extending from Canton to Holly Springs, and thence to Lagrange, Tenn., where it intersects the Memphis and Charleston; and on to Jackson, Tenn., where it intersects the Mobile and Ohio road, running to the mouth of the Ohio river, and to Paducah, at the mouth of the Tennessee river.

Twenty-four miles of the Mississippi Central are finished, between Holly Springs and Lagrange; fifty miles south of Holly Springs, and north of Canton, are graded and prepared for the reception of the iron, which has already been purchased; and every reasonable expectation prevails that the remainder of the grading and the preparation of the superstructure will be complete within twelve months. The work on this road is chiefly performed by the planters on its line, and at a very small cost. Seventy miles north of Canton commences the Memphis and Grenada road, which will become the route for a direct line of travel from New Orleans to Memphis. Of this road ten miles are finished, and the remainder is progressing under such auspices as to assure its completion. From Memphis various lines of railroad radiate, all of which have made constant progress; and the one constructing through Arkansas, to Little Rock, is of great importance to New Orleans, in assuring a considerable outlet for the produce of the interior to the Mississippi river, which, in seasons of suspended navigation, is locked up for many months. The Memphis and Louisville road is now finished for a distance of thirty miles, and the energy that has distinguished its past management, is an index of its future progress. This road is entitled to aid from the State of Tennessee, to the extent of ten thousand dollars per mile, on the portion constructed within its limits. The Memphis and Charleston Company have in operation 172 miles of finished road, and the assistance lately voted by the State of Alabama, will greatly facilitate its progress towards completing all its connections within another year. At Chattanooga, railroad communication commences and extends beyond Knoxville to Virginia, and the entire line thence to Washington city is more than two-third finished. Every calculation is to be made on the whole being completed within the next three years. The road from Louisville to Nashville is now finished for a distance of thirty miles, and its friends are sanguine of its success. In proof of its estimated importance, the citizens of Louisville have recently voted it additional aid for one million of dollars. The Tennessee and Alabama Company have finished thirty miles of road south of Nashville: this road is designed to form a continuation of the line between that city and New Orleans, and is entitled to the aid of the State of Tennessee, for $10,000 per mile on the portion running within its limits, which will amount to $1,200,000. The Mobile and Ohio Company have in operation 162 miles of road, and the whole of the line is now regraded to the mouth of the Ohio river, and Paducah. That portion running through Tennessee is already prepared for the iron and the State is about to issue, in its 6 per cent. bonds, $1,100,000 to finish it.

The foregoing is an accurate sketch of the various railroads projected and commenced since 1850, (excepting the Mobile and Ohio,) which exceed 2000 miles in extent, the work on which is to-day more than half completed, and every mile of which, when every connection is made, will contribute something in favor of the trade and importance of New Orleans. It suggests to every mind that will examine the subject, the profitable traffic and travel which such a system of extensive and intersections of railroads, will at once bring to the Great Northern Road; and the slightest reflection will be quick to appreciate the rich inheritance this Company will enjoy, in the undisturbed possession of the link of 205 miles between New Orleans and Canton forever secure against rivalry and competition.

Its importance is emphatically, and relatively to any other railroad projected in the Union, what the Mississippi river is to its tributaries. Boston, New York, Philadelphia and Baltimore, have expended one hundred and fifty millions of dollars in constructing lines of railroad that enable the continental travel of the West: less than one-tenth of the sum will give to New Orleans the advantages of facilities of equal extent to those possessed by any of the great Northern cities through their enormous outlays. No experiment which invention can contrive, will ever initiate any competition against the exclusive control which is now and forever invested in the 205 miles from it to Canton; and capital that is given to construct it, will, in time, prove remunerative and productive beyond all example.

The vast launch of country which this grand system of improvement is designed to improve and adorn, embraces eight degrees of latitude from North to South, and thirty degrees of longitude. All all indications it is the most highly favored: its riches in the fertility of the soil, its mines of iron and coal, constitute it in every respect the finest region within the broad limits of our republic; and united in its government by the freedom of our genial institutions and the enterprise of a bold and noble race, it will attain an opulence and power which will descend with renown to the latest generations.

Its present area may be computed at 154,360 square miles, and 119 millions of acres exclusive of the territory of Louisiana. Its population in 1850 exceeded three millions of inhabitants, nearly equal to the total of the New England States, and not much under that of the thirteen States when our war of independence commenced; and if its population was increased to twelve millions, the average would not exceed to the square mile that known in England in the commence-

Seven different sizes of these mills are manufactured adapted to all the various motive powers used or known in milling. The burrs of the smallest size are fourteen inches in diameter, and the largest eight feet; which last size will grind a greater quantity in any given time than any other mill known. These mills range in prices from one to five hundred dollars apiece, and will grind from four to seventy-five bushels to the hour, according to the diameter of burr, power applied and velocity given.

The mill that took the premium at the Crystal Palace, New York, was the smallest size (14 inches) and ground a bushel of corn into fine meal in four and a half minutes. Those desiring such mills can be supplied by addressing the patentee and proprietor,

Atlanta Medical College.

The second course of lectures in this institution will commence on the first day of May next, and continue four months.

FACULTY:

Alexander Means, M. D., chemistry and pharmacy
H. W. Brown, M. D., anatomy
John W. Jones, M. D., principles and practice of medicine
W. F. Westmoreland, M. D., principles and practice of Surgery.
Jesse Boring, M. D., obstetrics and diseases of women and children.
Joseph P. Logan, M. D., physiology and gen'l pathology.
J. O. Westmoreland, M. D., materia medica and medical jurisprudence.

From experiments made last session, the fact is established beyond dispute that even for winter dissections bodies properly preserved are preferable to those not prepared; and that warm weather does not render such subjects offensive if sound when put up. The dissecting room, supplied with good subjects, will be opened by the 20th of April.

Fees for the entire course of lectures, $105; matriculation, payable once only, $5; dissecting ticket, obligatory once only, $10; graduation, $25.

Good board can be procured at from $3 to $3 50 per week. For further particulars, address,

COLLEGE EDIFICE.

A large and commodious building, planned by the best architectural talent, and erected in the most substantial manner, is now nearly ready for the reception of pupils. Feeling the great importance of space and comfort for the educational and domestic interests of the institution, the Trustees have spared neither pains nor expense to meet the demands of utility and beauty in the construction of the edifice.

EDUCATIONAL FACILITIES.

A new and valuable apparatus has been purchased for the college. Cabinets of minerals, fossils and curiosities have also been provided. Stated courses of lectures on science, art and literature will be delivered.

OPENING.

The first term of the college will commence on the second Monday of February, 1856.

TERMS.

Board, including washing, fuel and lights, will be furnished at $12 50 per month. Tuition fees will be at the ordinary rates.

REMARKS.

The present circular is merely designed to give notice of the approaching opening of the college, and to afford a general outline of its plans and objects. The public may rest assured that the Trustees, in conjunction with the Faculty, will use all proper and possible means to render this institution worthy of a cordial and generous support. The remaining officers of the Faculty will be elected as soon as circumstances will allow, and it is confidently expected that in a short time the college will be fully organized in all the departments of a thorough education.

Acknowledging with gratitude the earnest and liberal sympathy which this enterprise has so generally received and thankful to that kind Providence which has conducted it to its present stage of promising usefulness, the trustees have now the happiness to announce the near fulfilment of their long cherished wishes. The location of the college is as healthy and agreeable as could be desired. It is perfectly accessible, and yet sufficiently retired for the purposes of a moral, intellectual and womanly culture. Its expenses will be made as moderate as practicable, and a cautious parental guardianship will be exercised over all who may be committed to the charge of the institution.

15,000 Acres of Land for Sale.

The lands are situated in Morehouse parish, Louisiana, and in what is known as the "Bastrop Grant." They are of the richest quality of alluvial soil, unsurpassed in fertility by any lands in the South, and fully capable of producing from one and a half to two bales, or fifty to sixty bushels of corn to the acre. They lie near the Ouachita and Boeuf rivers—good navigable streams—and likewise in convenient distance of the route of the Vicksburg, Shreveport and Texas Railroad, now in course of construction and hastening to a rapid completion. A portion of these lands are highly improved, and in a flourishing state of cultivation; the country in which they lie is very healthy, the water is excellent and abundant and altogether they will be found to possess great advantages and present inducements to purchasers than any lands now offered for sale in the Southern country. They will be sold in quantities to suit purchasers, and on the most favorable terms. Titles perfect.

For further particulars inquire of the undersigned either personally at his residence in Prairie Jefferson Morehouse parish, or by letter addressed to Point Jefferson, Morehouse parish, Louisiana.

DOCTOR HOOFLAND'S CELEBRATED GERMAN BITTERS,

Prepared by Dr. C. M. Jackson, Philadelphia, Pa., will effectually cure Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, Jaundice, Chronic or Nervous Debility, Diseases of the Kidneys, and all diseases arising from a disordered Liver or Stomach, such as Constipation, Inward Piles, Fullness, or Blood to the Head, Acidity of the Stomach, Nausea, Heartburn, Disgust for Food, Fullness, or Weight in the Stomach, Sour Eructations, Sinking or Fluttering at the Pit of the Stomach, Swimming of the Head, Hurried and Difficult Breathing, Fluttering at the Heart, Choaking or Suffocating Sensations when in a Lying Posture, Dimness of Vision, Dots or Webs before the Sight, Fever and Dull Pain in the Head, Deficiency of Perspiration, Yellowness of the Skin and Eyes, Pain in the Side, Back, Chest, Limbs, etc., Sudden Flushes of Heat, Burning in the Flesh, Constant Imaginings of Evil, and great Depression of Spirits.

The Proprietor, in calling the attention of the Public to this preparation, does so with a feeling of the utmost confidence in its virtue and adaptation to the diseases for which it is recommended.

It is no new and untried article, but one that has stood the test of a ten years' trial before the American people, and its reputation and sale is unrivalled by any similar preparation extant. The testimony in its favor given by the most prominent and well-known Physicians and Individuals in all parts of the country is immense. The following, from your own State, is respectfully submitted, referring any who may still doubt to my "Memorabilia," or Practical Receipt Book for Farmers and Families, to be had gratis of all the Agents for the "German Bitters."
